Questions are raised about the use of church assets or funds in "get out the vote" activities. In this regard, whether these activities violate the campaign prohibition depends on whether a church's activities favor or oppose a candidate for public office. Thus, the church's financial resources, facilities, or personnel may not be used in get out the vote activities that favor one candidate over another (as by only helping individuals get to the polls if they favor a particular candidate). Of course, this does not mean that church members may not conduct these activities independent of the church.

Consequences of Political Campaign Intervention

Like any other exempt organization, a church not only jeopardizes its tax exempt status under section 501(c)(3) for participating in political campaign activities, it also becomes subject to an excise tax under section 4955 on its political expenditures. This excise tax may be imposed in addition to revocation, although in certain situations it may be imposed instead of revocation. Also, the church or religious organization must correct the violation to avoid the second-tier tax under section 4955.

~~T~~Section 4955 imposes an initial tax on an organization at the rate of 10 percent of the political expenditures. It also imposes a tax at the rate of 2.5 percent of the expenditures on the organization's managers (jointly and severally) whom, without reasonable cause, agreed to the expenditures knowing they were political expenditures. The tax on management may not exceed $5,000. In any case in which an initial tax is imposed against an organization, and the expenditures are not corrected within the period allowed by law, an additional tax equal to 100 percent of the expenditures is imposed against the organization. In that case, an additional tax is also imposed against the organization's managers (jointly and severally) who refused to agree to make the correction. The additional tax on management is equal to 50 percent of the expenditures and may not exceed $10,000 with respect to any one expenditure. Correction of a political expenditure requires the recovery of the expenditure, to the extent possible, and establishment of safeguards to prevent future political expenditures.

Special Rules Applicable to Churches under the Internal Revenue Code

[1] Not all religious organizations meet the definition of church. In analyzing whether a religious organization may properly be characterized as a church, the IRS considers whether the organization has the following characteristics: (a) a distinct legal existence, (b) a recognized creed and form of workshop, (c) a definite and distinct ecclesiastical government, (d) a formal code of doctrine and discipline, (e) a distinct religious history, (f) a membership not associated with any other church or denomination, (g) an organization of trained ministers, (h) ordained ministers selected after completing prescribed studies, (i) a literature of its own, (j) established places of worship, (k) regular congregations, (l) regular religious services, (m) Sunday schools for religious instruction of the young, rights guaranteed them under the First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The Internal Revenue Code includes several provisions relevant for a discussion of the treatment of churches by the Internal Revenue Service. These provisions generally serve the purpose of preventing needless entanglement between churches and the IRS. For example, unlike almost any other organization, a church need not apply for recognition from the IRS to obtain tax-exempt status. Nor do churches ordinarily have to file an annual information return (the Form 990) with the IRS. However, Congress recognized the need for the IRS to ensure that churches follow the requirements for tax exemption. In this regard, it enacted section 7611 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Section 7611 requires that the IRS follow several procedures when auditing an organization claiming to be a church. First, a church tax inquiry requires the approval of a high level official of the Internal Revenue Service (the Director of Examinations for Exempt Organizations); that is, the IRS may begin a church tax inquiry only when a high level official believes, on the basis of facts and circumstances recorded in writing, that the organization: may not qualify for tax exemption as a church; may be carrying on an unrelated trade or business; or may otherwise be engaged in an activity subject to tax.

Under section 7611, notice to the church is required before beginning an examination, and must include the following elements: an explanation of the concerns that give rise to the inquiry and the general subject matter of the inquiry in sufficient detail to allow the church to understand which specific activity is at issue; a general explanation of the Internal Revenue Code provision(s) that authorize the inquiry and that may otherwise be involved; and a general explanation of applicable administrative and constitutional provisions involved, including the right to a conference before examination. Other rights guaranteed under the statute and implementing regulations include an offer of pre-examination conference, completion of any audit tax liabilities within two years after the date on which the notice of examination is supplied to the church, limitations on the IRS's ability to revoke a church's tax-exempt status, limitations on the period of

(n) schools for the preparation of its ministers, and (o) any other facts and circumstances that may bear upon the organization's claim for church status.

assessment, limitations on additional inquiries and examinations, required coordination with IRS counsel at various stages, and remedies for IRS violation of the procedures.

Outreach Efforts to the Church Community by the Internal Revenue Service

The IRS takes the approach that an educated taxpayer is generally a compliant taxpayer. As a result, we have attempted to make the church community aware of the tax law rules to campaign intervention. The IRS has (1) disseminated to the church community and the public for comment, a draft publication (Tax Guide For Churches and Other Religious Organizations (Draft 7/26/94)); (2) periodically reminds churches (and all section 501(c)(3) organizations) of their responsibilities in the area of political campaign intervention (see, e.g., News Release 2000-47 (July 5, 2000)); and (3) shared information with individual church leaders and persons who provide tax advice to churches.

In the coming weeks, we will release a revised version of the Tax Guide for Churches and Other Religious Organizations. It will have an expanded discussion of the rules relating to the political activities prohibition.

Administrative Issues and Internal Revenue Service Experience in this Area of Political Campaign Activity

The IRS is appreciative of the sensitive nature of this area. Our mission and our hope are to influence individuals to voluntarily comply with existing rules. Thus, we try to enhance voluntary compliance in as unobtrusive a manner as possible recognizing that the less entanglement the better between the religious community and the IRS. Such an approach is in the best interests of both parties and is in keeping with the competing Constitutional interests of this area. Unfortunately, from time to time, we find well-meaning individuals acting out of faith but not acting in conformance with the rules. As a result, when we find an issue in this area, we normally prefer to pursue correction rather than revocation, or even imposition of the excise tax. Correction means that the organization attempts to undo the error, and creates and adheres to procedural safeguards to prevent a recurrence of the noncompliant activity.

Our experience in this area indicates that this issue occurs infrequently in our examinations and does not often result in revocation of tax-exempt status. However, as indicated by the Branch Ministries case discussed above, the IRS will revoke the exempt status of an organization for political activities in appropriate circumstances. In addition, according to our information systems, over the last five years, two of seven church examinations under Section 7611 had political activities as an issue under review. Both cases were resolved without the need for revocation. We also had at least one other instance in which the IRS closed the case under section 7611 after the church responded to an inquiry letter relating to political campaign activity.

This is a challenging area for the IRS to administer. This is not the first time that Congress has reviewed our activities in this area. This was the subject of congressional review in the 1980's, and as recently as March of 2000, when the Joint Committee on Taxation reported on our handling of tax-exempt organization matters. In Report of Investigation of Allegations Relating to Internal Revenue Service Handling of Tax-Exempt Organization Matters (JCS-3-00), the staff looked at numerous cases, including certain church tax inquiries and examinations. The Joint Committee staff found no credible evidence of political motivation in the manner in which we carry out our responsibilities.

Our administration is made more challenging in part by reason of issues specific to churches. For example, at page 22 of the Joint Committee report, staff commented upon the church tax procedures:

> The Joint Committee staff found that the church audit procedures provide important safeguards against the IRS engaging in unnecessary examinations of churches. However, the procedures also have the effect of (1) making it more difficult for the IRS to initiate an examination of a church even where there is clear evidence of impermissible activity on the part of the church and (2) hampering IRS efforts to educate churches with respect to actions that are not permissible, such as what constitutes impermissible political campaign intervention.

Similarly, the lack of information available from churches (e.g., the fact that churches do not need to file for a determination letter and are not required to file an annual information return) has an impact on our ability to determine compliance with requirements for tax exemption. This in turn leads us to more frequent use of third-party referrals of information about potential non-compliance in the church area.

Other issues in this area exist not just for churches, but for all organizations prohibited from participating in political activity. First, we have the issue of attribution. Was an individual making a pronouncement in his or her individual capacity, or can the pronouncement be attributed to the tax-exempt organization? In the church area, the IRS is sometimes asked to consider whether campaign advocacy by a minister or other church official may be attributed to the church with which he or she is associated. The prohibition on political campaign activities applies only to section 501(c)(3) organizations, not to the activities of individuals acting in their private capacities. Accordingly, the prohibition does not prevent a church's minister from being involved in a political campaign, so long as the minister does not use the church's financial resources, facilities, or personnel, and clearly indicates that his or her actions or statements are his or her own, and not those of the organization.

A second difficult issue we face is whether a given pronouncement constitutes prohibited political campaign intervention. In this area specifically, the IRS is faced with reviewing both the content and circumstances surrounding the distribution of voter guides during worship services or on church property.

A third issue common to churches and other non-profits is that the sanction in this area is often misdirected. Candidates, political fundraisers or other outsiders sometimes request churches or other nonprofits to make their resources available for political purposes either because the outsider does not know the rules or simply does not care. The sanction for such action is on the church and its managers, not on the outsider.

Finally, the section 4955 excise tax that can be used in lieu of revocation may not be effective in certain instances. The tax is based on expenditures. Yet there are times when this excise tax does not correspond to the prohibited intervention. For example, what is the expenditure related to an endorsement of a candidate during a sermon from the pulpit?

The IRS takes all these considerations into account when it enforces or educates but taken together they do make the area more challenging to regulate. Thank you for your time and I am available for any questions.

Draft –5/8/02 3:30 PM

Thank you Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity to provide this Subcommittee with general background on the requirements for tax exemption, particularly as they relate to the prohibition on political activities. I will also discuss how these rules apply to churches, the Internal Revenue Service's experience with these issues, and the numerous challenges we confront in administering this law.

General Requirements for Tax Exemption

Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code provides for the exemption from federal income taxation of organizations organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, educational, and certain other purposes. Section 501(c)(3) imposes a number of conditions to exempt status:

> No part of the organization's net earnings may inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.
> No substantial part of the organization's activities may be attempts to influence legislation (lobbying restriction).
> The organization may not intervene in any political campaign on behalf of or in opposition to any candidate for public office (political campaign prohibition).

Section 501(c)(3) does not specifically mention churches. They qualify as entities organized and operated for religious purposes. Thus, the above-referenced conditions apply to churches as well as all other section 501(c)(3) entities. In addition, there are special rules applicable to churches that I will outline in my testimony.

Restriction on lobbying

One condition of exemption under section 501(c)(3) is that no substantial part of an organization's activities can be carrying on propaganda, or otherwise attempting to influence legislation (commonly known as lobbying). Lobbying includes direct communications to members of a legislature, indirect communications through the electorate or general public ("grass roots" lobbying), and advocating adoption or rejection of legislation on an issue, even if specific legislation is not pending. Whether a communication on an issue constitutes lobbying depends on the facts and circumstances of the communication.

Section 501(c)(3) restricts lobbying; it does not prohibit it. Churches are subject to the restriction, but unlike other section 501(c)(3) organizations, are not eligible to file the election provided under section 501(h) of the Code to have lobbying measured by expenditures. Although the "no substantial part" test is less precise – courts have generally rejected using a percentage test as the sole test of whether the activity is a substantial part of an organization's activities –it is fair to say that the IRS has not identified situations in which we received information showing, or even suggesting, that a church was engaged in lobbying as a substantial part of its activities.

Prohibition on Political Campaign Intervention

~~u~~Section 501(c)(3) does not prohibit all activity that might be described as "political" within the common meaning of that term. Rather, it prohibits an organization from directly or indirectly participating in, or intervening in, any political campaign on behalf of (or in opposition to) any candidate for elective public office. Contributions to political campaign funds or public statements of position (verbal or written) made by or on behalf of the organization in favor of or in opposition to any candidate for public office violate the prohibition against political campaign intervention.

Formatted

The section 501(c)(3) limit on political campaign intervention is absolute. Violation of this prohibition may result in denial or revocation of tax-exempt status and the imposition of certain excise taxes.

REV_00145287

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(c)(3)(iii) of the Income Tax Regulations refines the prohibition on campaign intervention by defining "candidate for public office" as an "individual who offers himself or herself, or is proposed by others, as a contestant for elective public office". The regulation also provides that prohibited campaign intervention includes, but is not limited to, publishing or distributing written or printed statements or making oral statements on behalf of or in opposition to such a candidate. Since a candidate must be a contestant for elective public office, section 501(c)(3) only prohibits organizations from participating or intervening in election campaigns only.

It has been argued that the prohibition on campaign intervention does not apply to churches. Courts have considered and rejected this argument. In Branch Ministries, Inc. v. Rossotti, 211 F.3d 137 (D.C. Cir. 2000), aff'g 40 F. Supp. 15 (D.D.C. 1999), the Court of Appeals upheld the IRS's revocation of the section 501(c)(3) exempt status of the Church at Pierce Creek. The District Court had granted summary judgment to the IRS on its claim the organization violated the statutory prohibition on political campaign intervention when it placed full-page advertisements in two newspapers. The content of the advertisement was in opposition to a candidate. The Court of Appeals rejected the church's claims that the revocation violated the church's right to free exercise of religion under the Constitution and the Religious Freedom Restoration Act, and that it was the victim of selective prosecution.

Rules Relating to Specific Issues in the Area of Political Intervention in Campaigns

~~Whether a particular~~ Certain activities~~y~~, ~~action,~~ or expenditures may or may not constitute campaign intervention ~~is considered~~.s For example, certain voter education activities (including the presentation of public forums and the publication of voter education guides) conducted in a non-partisan manner ~~may~~ do not constitute prohibited political campaign activity. ~~-~~On the other hand, voter education activities that show a bias for one candidate over another, which oppose a candidate in some manner, or have the effect of favoring a candidate or slate of candidates, will constitute prohibited participation or intervention. Two examples are described below in order to better explain the rules in this area and our administration.

Voter guides

Like other 501(c)(3) organizations, some churches undertake voter education activities by publishing voter guides. Voter guides, in general, provide information on how candidates stand on various issues. These guides may be distributed with the stated purpose of educating voters. A careful review of the following may help determine whether or not a church's publication or distribution of voter guides constitutes prohibited political campaign activity: ~~Publication of Legislators' Voter Records~~

~~Like any other 501(c)(3) organization, a number of churches and religious organizations publish or distribute voting records of incumbent legislators.~~

Whether the guide provides information with respect to all candidates for an office;

Whether the guide contains editorial opinion or remarks, or otherwise indicates approval or disapproval of candidate or their records;

Whether the guide is disseminated in close proximity to an election;

Whether the guide covers a wide variety of issues; and

For a candidate questionnaire, whether the organization asks the same neutral questions of all candidates, or indicates a bias toward the organization's preferred responses.

"Get out the vote" activities

Questions are raised about the use of church assets or funds in "get out the vote" activities. In this regard, whether these activities violate the campaign prohibition depends on whether a church's activities favor or oppose a candidate for public office. Thus, the church's financial resources, facilities, or personnel may not be used in get out the vote activities that favor one candidate over another (as by only helping individuals get to the polls if they favor a particular candidate). Of course, this does not mean that church members may not conduct these activities independent of the church.

Consequences of Political Campaign Intervention

Like any other exempt organization, a church not only jeopardizes its tax exempt status under section 501(c)(3) for participating in political campaign activities, it also becomes subject to an excise tax under section 4955 on its political expenditures. This excise tax may be imposed in addition to revocation, although in certain situations it may be imposed instead of revocation. Also, the church or religious organization must correct the violation to avoid the second-tier tax under section 4955.

~~T~~Section 4955 imposes an initial tax on an organization at the rate of 10 percent of the political expenditures. It also imposes a tax at the rate of 2.5 percent of the expenditures on the organization's managers (jointly and severally) whom, without reasonable cause, agreed to the expenditures knowing they were political expenditures. The tax on management may not exceed $5,000. In any case in which an initial tax is imposed against an organization, and the expenditures are not corrected within the period allowed by law, an additional tax equal to 100 percent of the expenditures is imposed against the organization. In that case, an additional tax is also imposed against the organization's managers (jointly and severally) who refused to agree to make the correction. The additional tax on management is equal to 50 percent of the expenditures and may not exceed $10,000 with respect to any one expenditure. Correction of a political expenditure requires the recovery of the expenditure, to the extent possible, and establishment of safeguards to prevent future political expenditures.

[1] Not all religious organizations meet the definition of church. In analyzing whether a religious organization may properly be characterized as a church, the IRS considers whether the organization has the following characteristics: (a) a distinct legal existence, (b) a recognized creed and form of workshop, (c) a definite and distinct ecclesiastical government, (d) a formal code of doctrine and discipline, (e) a distinct religious history, (f) a membership not associated with any other church or denomination, (g) an organization of trained ministers, (h) ordained ministers selected after completing prescribed studies, (i) a literature of its own, (j) established places of worship, (k) regular congregations, (l) regular religious services, (m) Sunday schools for religious instruction of the young, rights guaranteed them under the First Amendment of the Constitution of the United States. The Internal Revenue Code includes several provisions relevant for a discussion of the treatment of churches by the Internal Revenue Service. These provisions generally serve the purpose of preventing needless entanglement between churches and the IRS. For example, unlike almost any other organization, a church need not apply for recognition from the IRS to obtain tax-exempt status. Nor do churches ordinarily have to file an annual information return (the Form 990) with the IRS. However, Congress recognized the need for the IRS to ensure that churches follow the requirements for tax exemption. In this regard, it enacted section 7611 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Section 7611 requires that the IRS follow several procedures when auditing an organization claiming to be a church. First, a church tax inquiry requires the approval of a high level official of the Internal Revenue Service (the Director of Examinations for Exempt Organizations); that is, the IRS may begin a church tax inquiry only when a high level official believes, on the basis of facts and circumstances recorded in writing, that the organization: may not qualify for tax exemption as a church; may be carrying on an unrelated trade or business; or may otherwise be engaged in an activity subject to tax.

Under section 7611, notice to the church is required before beginning an examination, and must include the following elements: an explanation of the concerns that give rise to the inquiry and the general subject matter of the inquiry in sufficient detail to allow the church to understand which specific activity is at issue; a general explanation of the Internal Revenue Code provision(s) that authorize the inquiry and that may otherwise be involved; and a general explanation of applicable administrative and constitutional provisions involved, including the right to a conference before examination. Other rights guaranteed under the statute and implementing regulations include an offer of pre-examination conference, completion of any audit tax liabilities within two years after the date on which the notice of examination is supplied to the church, limitations on the IRS's ability to revoke a church's tax-exempt status, limitations on the period of

(n) schools for the preparation of its ministers, and (o) any other facts and circumstances that may bear upon the organization's claim for church status.

REV_00145291

assessment, limitations on additional inquiries and examinations, required coordination with IRS counsel at various stages, and remedies for IRS violation of the procedures.

The IRS takes the approach that an educated taxpayer is generally a compliant taxpayer. As a result, we have attempted to make the church community aware of the tax law rules to campaign intervention. The IRS has (1) disseminated to the church community and the public for comment, a draft publication (Tax Guide For Churches and Other Religious Organizations (Draft 7/26/94)); (2) periodically reminds churches (and all section 501(c)(3) organizations) of their responsibilities in the area of political campaign intervention (see, e.g., News Release 2000-47 (July 5, 2000)); and (3) shared information with individual church leaders and persons who provide tax advice to churches.

In the coming weeks, we will release a revised version of the Tax Guide for Churches and Other Religious Organizations. It will have an expanded discussion of the rules relating to the political activities prohibition.

Administrative Issues and Internal Revenue Service Experience in this Area of Political Campaign Activity

The IRS is appreciative of the sensitive nature of this area. Our mission and our hope are to influence individuals to voluntarily comply with existing rules. Thus, we try to enhance voluntary compliance in as unobtrusive a manner as possible recognizing that the less entanglement the better between the religious community and the IRS. Such an approach is in the best interests of both parties and is in keeping with the competing Constitutional interests of this area. Unfortunately, from time to time, we find well-meaning individuals acting out of faith but not acting in conformance with the rules. As a result, when we find an issue in this area, we normally prefer to pursue correction rather than revocation, or even imposition of the excise tax. Correction means that the organization attempts to undo the error, and creates and adheres to procedural safeguards to prevent a recurrence of the noncompliant activity.

Our experience in this area indicates that this issue occurs infrequently in our examinations and does not often result in revocation of tax-exempt status. However, as indicated by the Branch Ministries case discussed above, the IRS will revoke the exempt status of an organization for political activities in appropriate circumstances. In addition, according to our information systems, over the last five years, two of seven church examinations under Section 7611 had political activities as an issue under review. Both cases were resolved without the need for revocation. We also had at least one other instance in which the IRS closed the case under section 7611 after the church responded to an inquiry letter relating to political campaign activity.

This is a challenging area for the IRS to administer. This is not the first time that Congress has reviewed our activities in this area. This was the subject of congressional review in the 1980's, and as recently as March of 2000, when the Joint Committee on Taxation reported on our handling of tax-exempt organization matters. In Report of Investigation of Allegations Relating to Internal Revenue Service Handling of Tax-Exempt Organization Matters (JCS-3-00), the staff looked at numerous cases, including certain church tax inquiries and examinations. The Joint Committee staff found no credible evidence of political motivation in the manner in which we carry out our responsibilities.

Our administration is made more challenging in part by reason of issues specific to churches. For example, at page 22 of the Joint Committee report, staff commented upon the church tax procedures:

> The Joint Committee staff found that the church audit procedures provide important safeguards against the IRS engaging in unnecessary examinations of churches. However, the procedures also have the effect of (1) making it more difficult for the IRS to initiate an examination of a church even where there is clear evidence of impermissible activity on the part of the church and (2) hampering IRS efforts to educate churches with respect to actions that are not permissible, such as what constitutes impermissible political campaign intervention.

Similarly, the lack of information available from churches (e.g., the fact that churches do not need to file for a determination letter and are not required to file an annual information return) has an impact on our ability to determine compliance with requirements for tax exemption. This in turn leads us to more frequent use of third-party referrals of information about potential non-compliance in the church area.

Other issues in this area exist not just for churches, but for all organizations prohibited from participating in political activity. First, we have the issue of attribution. Was an individual making a pronouncement in his or her individual capacity, or can the pronouncement be attributed to the tax-exempt organization? In the church area, the IRS is sometimes asked to consider whether campaign advocacy by a minister or other church official may be attributed to the church with which he or she is associated. The prohibition on political campaign activities applies only to section 501(c)(3) organizations, not to the activities of individuals acting in their private capacities. Accordingly, the prohibition does not prevent a church's minister from being involved in a political campaign, so long as the minister does not use the church's financial resources, facilities, or personnel, and clearly indicates that his or her actions or statements are his or her own, and not those of the organization.

A second difficult issue we face is whether a given pronouncement constitutes prohibited political campaign intervention. In this area specifically, the IRS is faced with reviewing both the content and circumstances surrounding the distribution of voter guides during worship services or on church property.

A third issue common to churches and other non-profits is that the sanction in this area is often misdirected. Candidates, political fundraisers or other outsiders sometimes request churches or other nonprofits to make their resources available for political purposes either because the outsider does not know the rules or simply does not care. The sanction for such action is on the church and its managers, not on the outsider.

Finally, the section 4955 excise tax that can be used in lieu of revocation may not be effective in certain instances. The tax is based on expenditures. Yet there are times when this excise tax does not correspond to the prohibited intervention. For example, what is the expenditure related to an endorsement of a candidate during a sermon from the pulpit?

The IRS takes all these considerations into account when it enforces or educates but taken together they do make the area more challenging to regulate. Thank you for your time and I am available for any questions.

MEMORANDUM FOR

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: ENRON SURVEY II

The Chairman of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs has requested that we ask you an additional question beyond the questions included in the survey you have already completed. Please complete the attached survey and return it to my office (West Wing, Second Floor) no later than May 16, 2002.

The survey question can be answered yes or no, and we are not asking for further explanation at this time. Instead, depending on your answer, the Counsel's Office may contact you to obtain additional information. If you are unsure whether to answer yes or no, you may check the third box, and we will contact you.

If you have any questions, please call Associate Counsels Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984), Brad Berenson (6-2318), or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

ENRON SURVEY

Instructions:

You are expected to answer the following question to the best of your knowledge and recollection.

If before answering, it would help you to review any records you may have, you should do so.

"Enron" means anyone you knew was working for, or communicating on behalf of, Enron Corporation or one of its businesses.

Question One:

Between January 20, 2001, and December 2, 2001, did you have any communications with Enron relating to energy policy or other policy issues affecting Enron's business, including communications relating to the development of the May 2001 Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group.

Background: I have been completing all the Homeland Security physical plant work at Nebraska Avenue. We have two new classified computer systems installed. We are using the same software modifications for the e-mail program that NSC uses. All sent and received e-mails are directed to a specific folder for capture. We are also installing tape backup for daily backups of all data to include all e-mails plus any data in folders on the server.

In all my contacts to date, I have been told that this meets the records management requirements. Tim Campen has asked me to verify with WH Counsel that we are in compliance with Records Management requirements and I was told by Courftney Elwood that you are the expert in this field. I wanted to make sure I haven't left anything out.

Question - does the use of software to ensure capture of all sent and received e-mails plus the tape backup meet the requirements for the classified computer system? Is there anything else we should be doing?

Thank you for your assistance.

> HEADLINE: 9-11 Bush Photo Offered to Donors
> BYLINE: SHARON THEIMER; Associated Press Writer
> DATELINE: WASHINGTON
> BODY:
> Capitalizing on President Bush's drawing power, the Republican National Committee aimed for a record $30 million fund-raising bonanza Tuesday while congressional Republicans sought to reward donors with a Sept. 11 photo of Bush aboard Air Force One.
> The photo of Bush calling Vice President Dick Cheney from the presidential plane just hours after the terror attacks is part of a three-picture set the National Republican Senatorial Campaign and its House counterpart promises to anyone who donates $150 or more to attend their joint fund-raising dinner next month.
> The photos depict "the defining moments of 'The First Year' of the George W. Bush presidency," a fund-raising mailing says.
> The pictures show "the gritty determination of our new president at his inauguration; a telephone call from Air Force One to Vice President Cheney the afternoon of Sept. 11, 2001; and President Bush's historic State of the Union speech before a joint session of Congress that united a nation and a world," it says. In an accompanying letter, Cheney tells prospective donors the dinner has special meaning this year.

> "It is an opportunity to honor President Bush for his courageous leadership during this historic time and to thank you for making that leadership possible through your steadfast support of President Bush and his agenda," Cheney wrote.
> Larry Noble, executive director of the Center for Responsive Politics, a campaign watchdog group, said use of a Sept. 11 photo and other pictures of Bush on the job, "though not as expensive," reminded him of then-Democratic President Clinton's use of overnight stays in the White House Lincoln Bedroom and other trappings of his office to reward donors.
> "They really came in saying they were going to clean up fund raising and politics and not be involved in the same kind of behavior the Clinton administration was involved in," Noble said of the Bush White House. "I think we saw from the first days in office they were doing all the same things."
> Cheney drew criticism from campaign watchdog groups a year ago for holding a reception for about 400 top Republican donors at the vice presidential mansion on the eve of the RNC gala.
> Bush political adviser Karl Rove was criticized in January by Democrats for telling the RNC that Republicans could campaign this year on their efforts to fight terrorism.
> "These pictures are of historic moments from the president's first year and are living testimony of his courage under fire, and leadership," the NRCC's Carl Forti said. "It is frankly offensive that anyone would suggest otherwise."
> White House spokeswoman Anne Womack did not immediately respond to messages left at her office Monday evening seeking comment.
> A Republican official said the photos were licensed and therefore not believed to be the work of an official White House photographer.
>
> The fund-raising solicitation for the June 19 Republican congressional dinner came as the RNC anticipated raising about $30 million at its black-tie presidential gala Tuesday night at the Washington Convention Center. That amount would shatter the previous single-night record set in 2000 by Clinton and then-Vice President Al Gore. >
> The estimated RNC total, provided by a Republican official on condition of anonymity, would easily exceed the $26.5 million Clinton and Gore raised at a Democratic National Committee barbecue.
> Bush and Cheney helped raise $24 million at the RNC's black-tie gala last year.
> Such fund-raising records would be difficult to break if a new law prohibiting unlimited campaign contributions from companies, unions and others to national party committees survives numerous legal challenges and takes effect after this fall's election.
>
> The RNC, in its lawsuit, contends the soft money ban unconstitutionally interferes with states' rights and the party's ability to take part in the political process. Party committees use soft money for overhead and party-building activities around the country such as get-out-the-vote drives.
> RNC gala organizers offered tables of 10 to individuals and political action committees for $15,000 and to corporate donors for $20,000.
> Those who committed to raising $500,000 or more were honored as dinner co-chairmen, while those who raised at least $250,000 were vice chairmen of the event at the Washington Convention Center.

> Republican "Eagles" - those who donate at least $15,000 annually to the RNC - were invited to meetings with administration officials earlier Tuesday.

SUBJECT: ENRON SURVEY II

The Chairman of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs has requested that we ask you two additional questions beyond the questions included in the survey you have already completed. We apologize for the inconvenience, but please complete the attached survey and return it to my office (West Wing, Second Floor) no later than this Friday, May 17, 2002.

Please read the survey questions carefully. The questions can be answered yes or no, and we are not asking for further explanation at this time. Instead, depending on your answers, the Counsel's Office may contact you to obtain additional information. If you are unsure whether to answer yes or no, you may check the third box, and we will contact you.

If you have any questions, please call Associate Counsels Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984), Brad Berenson (6-2318), or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

ENRON SURVEY

Instructions:

You are expected to answer the following questions to the best of your knowledge and recollection.

If before answering, it would help you to review any records you may have, you should do so.

"Enron" means anyone you knew was working for, or communicating on behalf of, Enron Corporation or one of its businesses.

Question One:

Between January 20, 2001, and December 2, 2001, did you have any communications with Enron relating to any energy regulation, policy, law, or other issue affecting Enron's business? (Note: This question includes communications relating to the development of the May 2001 Report of the National Energy Policy Development Group.)

YES _____ NO _____ I'D LIKE TO DISCUSS _____

Question Two:

Between January 20, 2001, and December 2, 2001, did you have any communications relating to Enron with any official or employee of any Executive Branch department or agency? (Note: The Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President are not departments or agencies.)

Hana, we must have gotten wires crossed, but I cannot do a 3:00 p.m. tomorrow with Clay Johnson, and frankly the 1:30 with Dan Bartlett is going to be very hard, although we can keep that one if Brett is pretty sure it will be short. The paper should indicate that I am unavailable tomorrow from noon through 5:30. Please reschedule Johnson and confirm that Bartlett will be short -- I MUST leave his office not a minute later than 1:50. If Brett thinks there's a danger we'll run over, we'll need to move Bartlett too.

* Karen Hughes is in Europe until the end of the month with the First Lady.
* John Howard is no longer with CEQ he is now on the White House Recycling Task Force. I have left a message for him.

I tried to set up the meetings so that you didn't have to run from one place to the other. I tried to keep them in the same buildings as much as possible during any signifcant block of meeting times. Please let me know about any changes that need to be made.

I don't think it's at all a given that the DOJ will file an amicus brief in this case, given the DOJ's varied stances as the case has moved up through the courts
during the Clinton Administration and this Administration.

Subject: Michigan preferences case

Needless to say, the Supreme Court likely will accept this case given the circuit divergence (CA5, CA6, CA9) over meaning of Bakke and the critical importance of the question whether the EP Clause bars racial preferences/diversity in admissions (or at least bars the Michigan program at issue here). The case affects this Office in two specific ways: (i) interest groups and Senators no doubt will use the existence of the case in multiple ways if there is a Supreme Court vacancy/nomination; and (ii) the Solicitor General can be expected to file an amicus brief in the Supreme Court.

Much of this testimony consists of a description of the activities of the Corporation. The testimony endorses H.R. 3263 in its penultimate paragraph. H.R. 3263 would amend section 7(a) of the Small Business Act to exempt small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans whohave been discharged or released from military service for less than 5 years from otherwise guarantee fees for SBA-guaranteed loans under the program.

STATEMENT OF MAJOR GENERAL CHARLES R. HENRY (RET.)
PRESIDENT AND CEO
THE NATIONAL VETERANS BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION
("THE VETERANS CORPORATION")

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON WORKFORCE, EMPOWERMENT, AND GOVERNMENT PROGRAMS OF THE COMMITTEE ON SMALL BUSINESS
U.S. HOURSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
21 MAY, 2002

Mr. Chairman and Distinguished Members of the Subcommittee:

Thank you for your invitation to testify today. This is my first appearance before your subcommittee and I am honored to have this opportunity. I'm also proud to tell you what we've accomplished in the 200 days since I took charge of this outstanding congressional initiative "The National Veterans Business Development Corporation," or as we call it "The Veterans Corporation."

Although the legislation that created The Veterans Corporation was enacted in August 1999, initial funding was not received until March of last year. Subsequently a search began for a permanent President and CEO that culminated with my selection in October 2001.

Since then, we have launched several high-impact initiatives to fulfill the legislative mandates of the law. In this 200 days, we have met the requirement for $2 million dollars in matching funds for Fiscal Year 2002, established four strategic business units and launched a world-class website and begun work on a state of the art electronic Veteran Marketplace. We will provide Veterans access to training, access to markets and access to capital, all critical elements in helping Veterans and Service Disabled Veterans succeed in business. This solid foundation of programs will not only help Veterans but will also help meet your mandate to make this Corporation self-sufficient and assure its survival beyond the start-up funding provided in P.L 106-50.

One of our first requirements is to build our affinity group from the approximately 24 million Veterans and estimated 4 million Veteran business owners in this country. We are launching a multimedia awareness campaign to reach Veterans incorporating our web site and through traditional print and broadcast media and direct marketing. Over our first three years, our objective is to enlist more than 40,000 Veteran business owners and prospective business owners as our partners in this endeavor. We are, and will continue to actively market this affinity group to both the public and private sectors, providing revenue opportunities for Veterans and Service Disabled Veterans businessmen and women, and revenue for The Veterans Corporation.

As we reach out to Veterans we are also working to create a new "brand awareness" about Veteran businesspeople. We are highlighting the advanced leadership and management skills members of the military develop while on active duty, along with top quality technical training that makes our service members the world's preeminent fighting force.

The law requires that we achieve five goals:

1. Increase business opportunities for Veterans and Service-Disabled Veterans.
2. Raise matching funds.
3. Develop information centers.
4. Privatize
5. Create certification standards

I'll briefly discuss each of these legislative mandates, our objectives and our progress, to date.

1. Increasing business opportunities for Veterans and service disabled Veterans This is a primary focus of the Strategic Business Units we have created. The Education and Training SBU is partnering with the Ewing Marion Kauffman Foundation, Kansas City, Kansas to make research and writings on what makes a successful entrepreneur available to Veteran and Service Disabled Veterans.

The Kauffman Foundation have permitted us to private label what is arguably the best entrepreneurial library on or off the Web www.EntreWorld.org. They will allow us to provide this material directly to Veterans from our website. In addition, we are currently designing a unique entrepreneurial training program for Veterans and Service Disabled Veterans anchored by several Kauffman products as well as strategic alliances with major computer and Internet provider corporations to provide Veterans with the tools they need for success in today's marketplace. The program will be offered to transitioning military personnel and Veterans at a very reasonable cost with our Fund Raising SBU raising the capital required to subsidize the program.

Access to capital is perhaps the single biggest roadblock for anyone wishing to start or expand a business. Our Business Development and Outreach SBU is working two initiatives to help Veterans get the funding required for success.

The first is the Veterans Venture Capital Fund. We have entered into a strategic partnership with an experienced venture capital management company, Equisource, Houston, Texas for the purpose of creating the Veterans Venture Capital Fund. The Fund will be established with capital raised from private corporations and pension plans. An application for Small Business Investment Company status is being prepared and will be submitted to SBA shortly. If approved, SBA will provide a two for one match of all private funds. Our objective is to raise up to $55 million in the private sector; if successful, the SBA match will create a $110 million investment fund. Once established and capitalized, the Fund will invest in mezzanine-level opportunities with Veteran owned businesses and businesses that support Veterans and Veteran owned businesses

We are also working to create a national network of banks that will join us in a joint marketing effort to identify qualifying Veterans and Service Disabled Veterans seeking commercial loans of $50,000 or less, what we refer to as our micro loan program. The first bank to team with us is Southern Financial Bank, licensed to do business in Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia and Washington, D.C. We are actively seeking additional banking partners to expand the reach of this program to all credit-worthy Veterans. We expect to be in a minimum of ten states by the end of this fiscal year, and nation-wide by the end of the next year.

The Veterans Marketplace is a result of a strategic partnership between our IT & E-Commerce SBU and eScout, a Kansas City based provider of electronic marketplaces, internationally. A beta version of the Marketplace is currently accessible from our website. This version is being upgraded, and we expect the full commercial version to be ready this summer. This internet-based market will allow qualified Veteran and Service Disabled Veteran owned businesses to offer their goods and services to other Veterans, Government agencies and Corporate America. Veteran and Service Disabled Veteran owned businesses will be clearly identified on the Marketplace, eliminating the age-old excuse "I would buy from Veterans or Disabled Veterans, if I could find them".

The Business Development and Outreach SBU is also close to finalizing an Affinity Insurance and Financial Services arrangement where Veteran and Service Disabled Veteran owned businesses will be able to purchase business insurance and financial products at reduced rates, with better terms or conditions, or both. We will achieve this by combining the purchasing power of the Veterans who register with us, and through an internationally recognized broker negotiate group rates for our membership. This program will start out modestly, but will grow quickly as our membership grows and as their needs become apparent. Our thinking is that if AARP can market an affinity group made up of people over 50, The Veterans Corporation should be able to market an affinity group of Veteran business owners to corporate America in a way that benefits both them, and us.

2. Raise matching funds

We are looking to corporate and individual donations as key sources of revenue until our other long-range initiatives mature and become profitable enough to sustain our operations.

Fund Raising – We have engaged and empowered a professional development team to lead a multi-year, multi-dimensional effort to raise funds. We have recently sent our first mailings for personal and corporate contributions and are making corporate visits to Fortune 500 firms and potentially large donors asking for them to help us support Veteran entrepreneurs through our MarketPlace. The focus of initial fund raising efforts is to raise money to help build infrastructure (e.g. our website and the Veterans Marketplace), and for the entrepreneurial training effort. While predicting the amounts that will be raised is a tenuous exercise at best, I think that we can raise $2 million or more in cash contributions by September 30, 2002.

In-Kind Contributions The Corporation has already received in-kind contributions in the form of extensive legal services from the law firm of Fried, Frank, Harris, Shriver and Jacobsen Washington, D.C. and technology services, educational products and services in valued excess of $1.5 million from the Kauffman Foundation and eScout. Combined cash and in-kind contributions should exceed $3.5 million during this fiscal year. Growth in both in-kind and cash contributions is expected in fiscal 2003, and we are confident that we will, more than satisfy the matching funds requirements of P.L. 106-50.

3. Develop information centers

Our ability to electronically reach veterans is the first step to providing them with needed support where they live and work. We are also carefully evaluating several other initiatives that can provide on-site training and assistance but are not yet committed to any single approach. We have met with groups representing New England and Texas for preliminary discussions on the possibility of opening local centers for the delivery of products and services. We also plan discussions with SBA and DOD representatives about strategic partnerships with Small Business Development Centers (SBDCs) and Procurement Technical Advisory Centers (PTACs). This will be a major focus of ours in fiscal year 2003.

4. Privatization

As provided by current law, our federal funding for fiscal years 2003 and 2004 will be half what it was in our first two years, and will cease altogether after 2004. Neither Congress nor our management team intends The Veterans Corporation to be a three and half year effort. Therefore, we are working to ensure that the businesses we are building, along with on-going fund raising efforts, will provide sufficient revenue to fund the continued growth and success of the Corporation.

Of the efforts begun to date, the Marketplace and the Affinity Marketing program have the potential to keep us growing in 2003 and 2004. Each transaction executed across the Marketplace results in a commission being paid by the seller to the Marketplace. We will share in nearly half those commissions. The Affinity Marketing program also generates revenues for the broker, paid by the companies the broker places insurance and other contracts with. The Veterans Corporation will share in that revenue. We believe these programs will produce sufficient revenues in fiscal 2003 to make up for the reduction in federal funding. We have worked hard to keep our fixed costs down. Our budgets for next year provide for spending at less than $200,000 per month. So the revenues raised from these programs alone can fund growth and expansion, including the costs needed to create the information centers discussed above.

In the long run, revenues from the Veterans Venture Capital Fund and our banking partnerships will help build a capital base that will provide a sound financial cushion and fund further growth in the years after federal funding disappears. I am confident that with the initiatives we've taken to date and those yet to come we will be able to generate the revenues necessary to meet the congressional mandate of privatization.

5. Create Certification Standards

The Professional Certification Advisory Board (PCAB) under the able chairmanship of Brigadier General Robert Cocroft, U.S. Army Reserve, is developing a strategic plan to work with the Department of Defense, Department of Labor and Veterans Affairs, as well as, with state, local and union officials to remove certification and licensure barriers that hinder service members from smoothly transferring their knowledge and skills to civilian sector employment. This is a highly complex area, however, initiatives like the U.S. Army's recent launch of a Credentialing Opportunities On-Line www.armyeducation.army.mil/COOL show that real progress can be made in simplifying the certification and licensure requirements for our transitioning service members.

On the Small Business Administration Veteran Program

We have a strong working relationship with the Associate Administrator and his staff in the Office of Veterans Business Development at SBA and with the Director and his staff at the Center for Veterans Enterprise at Veterans Affairs. We're confident that these relationships will ultimately promote the best balance of public/private service to our Veterans. We are pleased with the increases in staffing at the Center and at SBA's Office of Veteran Business Development and urge that the membership of the Advisory Committee on Veterans Business Affairs be selected quickly, as required by SEC. 203 of PL 106-50.

We recognize that the Federal Agencies have not met the 3% goal for Service Disabled Veterans and the 3% goal for Veterans required by PL 106-50 but strongly believe that the Veterans MarketPlace (www.Veteranscorp.org) can assist Government agencies and Corporate America in quickly identifying reputable businesses that are owned by Service Disabled-Veterans, Veterans and other diversity groups who will provide them excellent products, fast and at highly competitive prices. I am personally committed to working with senior federal procurement officials to help them succeed in reaching and surpassing these important goals.

We certainly support any Veteran entitlement that assists Veterans financially to enter business although we are mindful that other interest groups may demand the same consideration. We believe that this should be provided by Congress as an entitlement resulting from honorable service to the Nation. (ed note see end page)

Conclusion

We are proud of our efforts and grateful for this opportunity to serve Service-Disabled Veteran and Veteran entrepreneurs while improving our Nation's economic well being. We believe that by assisting Veterans in starting and expanding businesses we will also go a long way toward reducing Veteran unemployment and solving the underemployment problem of the Veteran community. Again, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for inviting us to testify before your subcommittee.

Dear Congressman ____:

Section 616 of Public Law 107-77 directs the President to submit a legislative proposal to establish "a comprehensive program to ensure fair, equitable, and prompt compensation for all United States victims of international terrorism" that occurred on or after November 1, 1979. While Section 616 has no legal effect under Article II, Section 3 of the Constitution, I am writing to offer the Administration's comments on the bills pending in Congress that would provide compensation to victims of international terrorism.

There are several bills pending in Congress to provide relief for different categories of terrorism victims. Some of these proposals are modeled after the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund. The Administration has serious concerns with such an approach, which was based upon the unique circumstances of the September 11th terrorist attacks. The Administration believes that, at a minimum, the following principles should guide consideration of any proposal to compensate victims of international terrorism.

First, a program funded by the taxpayers should provide the same benefits to those with low incomes that it provides to victims of greater means. While plaintiffs in tort suits may receive differing awards based upon their lost income, the federal government generally should not draw such distinctions in a victims compensation program. Rather, such government compensation should be without regard to the victim's income status.

Second, victims should receive compensation as quickly as possible. We should not create a lengthy, individualized administrative process that will prevent victims from quickly receiving assistance and that will force victims to relive their tragedies. The need for a prompt process for compensating victims further weighs against providing different amounts to different victims based upon their individualized circumstances.

Third, a program funded by taxpayers should recognize the importance of private insurance and other private financial measures in protecting victims' families against financial loss. The government program should not be designed to be the primary means of compensating victims and victims' families for their losses. Families of Americans who die as a result of crimes and other tragedies ordinarily do not receive compensation from the federal government. The proposal to compensate victims of international terror is based upon the premise that international terrorism is different, in part because of the difficulty of recovering compensation from the wrongdoers. That should not, however, change the fact that life insurance, savings, and other private financial measures are the primary means by which Americans protect themselves against unexpected financial hardship. Any compensation amount should be set with that premise in mind.

Fourth, the government program for terrorism victims should provide compensation on par with that provided other victims for whom the government provides compensation. It would be difficult to justify giving more money to civilian victims of international terrorism than the government gives to police officers and firefighters killed in the line of duty. Therefore, a victims of international terror program should not exceed the federal government's no-fault, $250,000 benefit for public safety officers killed in the line of duty. See 42 U.S.C. 3796.

Fifth, the victims of international terrorism program should preserve the President's ability to conduct foreign policy. Therefore, the Administration opposes the use of blocked assets to fund such compensation. Funding for any proposal to compensate victims of international terror should instead come from the International Affairs 150 Account. We are not, however, opposed to allowing victims and their families to sue those responsible either for intentional acts or for other wrongful behavior that caused injury. If an individual actually receives compensation from the defendants in such a suit, the government should have a right of subrogation in order to avoid double recovery at the expense of taxpayers.

We look forward to working with the Congress on this issue.

Very truly yours,

COLLEGIALITY AND DECISION MAKING ON THE D.C. CIRCUIT

By Harry T. Edwards

* Chief Judge, United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit. My daily interactions with my colleagues on the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit offered much food for thought as I prepared this Essay. I would like to acknowledge and offer special thanks to a few people who were singularly helpful to me in this project: Noah R. Feldman, A.B. Harvard University 1992, D.Phil. Oxford University 1994, J.D. Yale University 1997, worked tirelessly with me on the research and drafting of the Essay; Paras P. Mehta, A.B. Harvard University 1994, Ph.D. Candidate, Massachusetts Institute of Technology, gave invaluable assistance in critiquing the methodologies and data underlying the studies at issue in this Essay; Susan L. Bloch, a preeminent Professor of Law at Georgetown Law Center, who, in years past, has been a law clerk at both the D.C. Circuit and the United States Supreme Court, read and commented on drafts of the Essay; and Pamela E. Matthews, Dean of Business, Science, Mathematics, and Technology, Montgomery College, Germantown, Maryland, a long-time, distinguished mathematics professor and national consultant on mathematics education, lent an important perspective in reviewing and commenting on drafts of the Essay.

SUMMARY:
... This Essay responds to pieces recently published in the Virginia Law Review and Yale Law Journal, and it aims to debunk the myth that ideology is a principal determinant in decision making on the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. ... The one thing that is absolutely clear is that Revesz has no basis to generalize from his narrowly focused data to conclude that ideology significantly influences judicial decision making on the D.C. Circuit. ... This problem is most extreme in any sort of univariate analysis: such an analysis, as its name indicates, tests for only one variable, and therefore always allows the possibility that one or more of the multitude of other potentially relevant variables, because of its correlation with an included variable, explains the outcome better than does the variable tested. ... If the judge is likely to vote differently in the presence of one judge of the same presumed ideological predilections as he than he would in the presence of two such judges, says Revesz, deliberation is at work. ... Cross and Tiller used the same (problematic) measure of ideology used by Revesz: they reckoned a challenge to be "liberal" if brought by a non-governmental public interest organization, and "conservative" if brought by an industry group; and they assumed a judge's ideology matched the party of the President who appointed the judge. ...

Preface

This Essay responds to pieces recently published in the Virginia Law Review and Yale Law Journal, and it aims to debunk the myth that ideology is a principal determinant in decision making on the United States Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit. My purpose in writing is to refute the heedless observations of academic scholars who misconstrue and misunderstand the work of the judges of the D.C. Circuit. I will show that, even when one looks carefully at the so-called "empirical studies" that purport to analyze the work of my Circuit, it is clear that, in most cases, judicial decision making is a principled enterprise that is greatly facilitated by collegiality among judges.

Introduction

This law review recently published an article by Professor Richard Revesz, entitled Environmental Regulation, Ideology, and the D.C. [*1336] Circuit. 1 Reporting on this article for a legal community that regularly appears before the D.C. Circuit, the Legal Times offered a summary which closely paralleled the article's own introduction:

First, [Revesz] found that ideology "significantly influences" judicial decision making on the D.C. Circuit; second, that ideological voting is more prevalent in cases where purely procedural challenges are raised; and lastly, that a judge's vote is greatly affected by the party affiliation of the other judges sitting on the panel. (In the study, judges were assigned the party affiliation of the president who appointed them.) 2

In the contemporary climate of skepticism towards courts, it is unsurprising that Revesz's article was considered newsworthy. Indeed, the title of Revesz's article all but invites the casual reader to conclude that judges on the D.C. Circuit are driven by ideology. Closer examination of Revesz's article, however, calls into question the generalizing tone of the summary which reached the general public.

In my view, none of the three broadly-phrased conclusions of the study are borne out by the study's methodology and findings. Revesz's article presents some empirical data on a very narrow set of judicial dispositions in connection with review of a limited set of EPA actions in the D.C. Circuit. Because of the narrow focus of his study and the study's highly suspect methodology, the conclusions that Revesz offers are extremely questionable. His data surely do not convincingly show that "ideology" broadly influences decision making. Rather, as I will demonstrate, the Revesz data are consistent with the view that collegiality is alive and well in judicial decision making on the D.C. Circuit.

The Revesz article is so narrow in scope that it is relatively innocuous, at least once it is properly understood for what it does and does not show. The same cannot be said, however, about an even more recent essay, published in the Yale Law Journal by Professors Frank B. Cross and Emerson H. Tiller, and tantalizingly entitled Judicial Partisanship and Obedience to Legal Doctrine: Whistleblowing [*1337] on the Federal Courts of Appeals. 3 Cross and Tiller collected data on D.C. Circuit cases that, in the authors' view, raised the possibility of judicial deference to the statutory interpretations of administrative agencies under Chevron U.S.A. v. Natural Resources Defense Council. 4 They claim their data prove that D.C. Circuit judges ideologically "disobey" the Chevron doctrine when they can do so without provoking dissent, but "obey" the doctrine in contravention of their ideological biases when there is a risk that a member of a judicial panel might "blow the whistle" on their disobedience by dissenting. This essay is rather astonishing, on at least two counts: first, the authors' so-called "whistle blower" hypothesis is the product of sheer speculation, and finds no convincing support in their data; second, the hypothesis is absurd and would be understood as such by anyone familiar with the judges and operation of the D.C. Circuit.

The Revesz article and Cross and Tiller essay have the potential to engender serious confusion over judicial decision making. Even worse, these pieces may mislead the unsuspecting (who rely on secondhand reports of an article's contents) into thinking that judges are lawless in their decision making, influenced more by personal ideology than legal principles. Where the authors might have one believe that judging is entirely political, I maintain, and always have maintained, that appellate judging is fundamentally a principled practice. As one of the judges whose work is the subject of discussion in the articles, I believe that I have some standing to respond to the authors' assessments of our decision-making processes. Furthermore, I feel compelled to reply, because I cannot leave unaddressed suggestions that the members of my court are faithless to the public trust implicit in our judicial assignments.

In my view, there are four important points to be made about the Revesz article and Cross and Tiller essay:

First, Revesz's study design, accumulated data, and resulting thesis are very narrowly focused; thus, his analysis yields results of little value in the overall assessment of judicial decision making.

Second, what little can be gleaned from the two studies should be encouraging, not disheartening, to anyone interested in enlightened [*1338] judicial decision making. The studies' findings are consistent with the hypothesis that judges on the D.C. Circuit listen to the views of one another and engage sincerely and open-mindedly in the discursive process of collegial deliberation. In part because of shared legal principles, and in part because of deliberation, we almost always reach agreement on the correct judgment in a case. The most powerful proof of our collegiality is that, regardless of panel composition, very few dissenting opinions are written by the judges on the D.C. Circuit. Indeed, over each of the last three years, there have been dissents in fewer than 3% of all dispositions. 5 Unless judges are suppressing their true convictions about the application of legal principles - a notion I find laughable, for reasons I will explain - this means that most of the time the judges on the court are taking account of the views of one another and reaching consensus on the correct judgment in cases involving straightforward legal questions.

Third, both pieces and their research methodology raise grave doubts about the viability of a type of inquiry into judicial decision making that has come to be called "law and positive political theory." 6 In my view, it is essential that researchers look very carefully at the assumptions that frame the questions they ask and profoundly influence their interpretation of data. I have no doubt that careful statistical analysis, cautiously interpreted, may conceivably shed some light on judicial decision making. But serious scholars seeking to analyze the work of the courts cannot simply ignore the internal experiences of judges as irrelevant or disingenuously expressed. The qualitative impressions of those engaged in judging must be thoughtfully considered as part of the equation. 7 This is especially true where the data are subject to multiple interpretations. A researcher who assumes the existence of ideological bias or strategic behavior may "find" that these exist, while a researcher who considers alternative explanations may find that what exists is rather different. I think that the Revesz and the Cross and Tiller studies [*1339] are flawed in their quantitative and qualitative analyses, and also in their interpretation of data. These flaws cause the authors to offer highly questionable "findings."

At this late date, it should be unremarkable in the social sciences to argue that drawing hypotheses and interpreting data must account to some degree for the internal experiences of the persons who are the subjects of a study. When assumptions of ideological bias or strategic behavior infect the reasoning of a study on judicial decision making, the legal community may derive the false impression that the legal process is bankrupt. Good descriptive academic work should strive to understand judicial decision making not in the worst possible light nor in the best possible light, but in the fairest and most accurate light. Giving the public a distorted view of judges' work is bad for the judiciary and the rule of law.

Finally, both pieces seem terribly naive in their understanding of the judges on the D.C. Circuit and how we perform our work. I will aim to correct these misimpressions.

I. Revesz's Article

A. Findings

I begin by summarizing briefly Professor Revesz's claims with regard to ideology and decision making on the D.C. Circuit. Following this summary, I discuss the flawed methodology that infects the Revesz study.

In order to construct a comparative analysis of periods of time during which the composition of the D.C. Circuit was fixed, Revesz looked at ten different, overlapping periods of varying length between 1970 and 1994. 8 Each period began and ended with a change in the court's composition. Revesz began by performing a univariate analysis on data from these ten periods in which he looked at the relationship between the party of the President who appointed a judge and that judge's votes on cases involving review of EPA actions. The first four periods stretched from 1970 to the late seventies or early eighties. 9 (I will call the time frame covered by these slices of time the "first era.") In these periods, Revesz found no [*1340] statistically significant outcomes of any importance. 10 I will not devote any time to discussing the first era.

The latter six periods each begin in 1986 or 1987 and end in 1993 or 1994 (the "second era"). 11 Each and every one of these six periods of the second era overlaps almost entirely with each of the others. For three of these periods, Revesz claims that Republican-appointed judges were more likely to vote to grant petitions in cases brought by industry groups seeking review of EPA actions than were Democrat-appointed judges. For all six periods, he claims that Democrat-appointed judges were more likely to vote to grant petitions for review brought by environmentalist groups than were Republican-appointed judges. However, when Revesz omitted en banc cases, he could claim statistically significant results for only two of the six periods. 12

Analyzing the same six periods in the second era by individual judge, Revesz found that, generally, Republican-appointed judges voted more often than did Democrat-appointed judges to grant petitions for review cases brought by industry groups, whereas Democrat-appointed judges generally voted more often than did Republican-appointed judges to grant petitions for review brought by environmentalist groups. 13 Revesz found that not all the differences between individual judges appointed by different parties were statistically significant; however, he thought enough differences were significant to support the conclusion that Democrat-appointed judges and Republican-appointed judges differed in their tendencies in EPA challenges depending upon the identity of the challenger. This meager evidence apparently provides the basis for Revesz's broad claim that "ideology significantly influences judicial decisionmaking on the D.C. Circuit." 14

Revesz went on to compare petitions to review EPA statutory interpretations with cases involving claims that EPA action was arbitrary and capricious for want of reasoned decision making. He found that in statutory cases brought by industry groups, Republican-appointed judges' and Democrat-appointed judges' votes were [*1341] almost indistinguishable. 15 In statutory cases brought by environmentalist groups, the differences were not statistically significant except in one period. 16 Revesz thus concluded that "ideology" did not drive decision making in statutory cases. This evidence provides part of the basis for Revesz's claim that "ideological voting is more prevalent in cases, such as those raising procedural challenges, that are less likely to be reviewed by the United States Supreme Court." 17

Revesz then looked at what he calls "procedural challenges." These so-called "procedural challenges" exclude all statutory claims brought by petitioners under Chevron. Rather, "procedural challenges" involve only claims that an EPA action is arbitrary and capricious for lack of reasoned decision making. He found that in "procedural challenges" brought by environmentalist groups, there were no statistically significant differences between the votes of judges appointed by Presidents of the two parties. 18 In the context of "procedural challenges" brought by industry groups, however, Republican-appointed judges were significantly more likely to vote to grant the petition for review than were Democrat-appointed judges. 19

Finally, Revesz analyzed panel composition. During three of the six periods in the second era, he found evidence that a Democrat-appointed judge was more likely to vote to grant a petition for review in industry challenges when there was only one Democrat-appointed judge on the panel than when there were two; 20 and that in five of the six periods, a Democrat-appointed judge was more likely to grant a petition for review in industry challenges when there was only one Democrat-appointed judge on the panel than when there were two or three. 21

In the context of petitions for review filed by industry groups, Revesz claims statistically significant evidence that during one of the six periods, Republican-appointed judges were more likely to [*1342] grant a petition when there were two Republican-appointed judges rather than one; 22 in two periods, that Republican-appointed judges were more likely to grant a petition

when there were three Republican-appointed judges rather than two; 23 and that in four periods Republican-appointed judges were more likely to grant a petition when there were two or three Republican-appointed judges rather than one. 24 On the basis of this evidence, Revesz drew the conclusion that "a judge's vote (not just the panel outcome) is greatly affected by the identity of the other judges sitting on the panel; in fact, the party affiliation of the other judges on the panel has a greater bearing on a judge's vote than his or her own affiliation." 25

In the final analytic section of his article, Revesz performed a multivariate analysis on the data to isolate further the effects of panel composition. He produced what he saw to be meaningful results only with regard to petitions for review brought by industry groups, and only for two of ten periods, one in the first era and one in the second era. 26 In the one period in the second era, the results were "consistent with those of the univariate analysis." 27 When the multivariate analysis was done according to judge, it revealed, in the later period, that in cases involving petitions for review brought by industry groups and based on "procedural challenges" to EPA actions, panel composition had a significant effect. When two Democrat-appointed judges sat with one Republican appointee, the probability of granting a petition for review ranged from 2% to 13%; when two Republican-appointed judges sat with one Democrat appointee, the probability of granting a petition for review ranged from 54% to 89%. 28 This underscored what Revesz claims as [*1343] "perhaps the central insight" of his article: that "the effects of panel composition are far greater than the effects of individual ideology." 29

B. Methodology

1. Appropriateness of Sample

A serious preliminary error of omission pervades the Revesz study, and the Cross and Tiller study as well. Both pieces assume that the only data relevant to the work of the D.C. Circuit are to be found in the published opinions of the court. As anyone familiar with the work of the court knows, literally hundreds of cases are decided each year without published opinion. For example, in 1997, the court issued 1298 lead-case dispositions, but only 259 of those dispositions resulted in published opinions. 30 Likewise, in 1996, there were 1247 dispositions, but only 288 opinions, 31 while in 1995 there were 1226 dispositions and only 276 opinions were issued. 32

The two studies take no account whatsoever of cases in which no published opinion was issued, even though such cases include many different panels of the court deciding the kinds of EPA and Chevron cases that the studies respectively claim to be studying. The results in cases with no published opinion almost always produce unanimous judgments; so, of course, the omitted data would not be helpful to the theses propounded by Revesz and by Cross and Tiller. The omission of cases of which the court disposes without opinions therefore materially skews the sample of the "population" under analysis. The failure to consider these cases is a glaring mistake. 33

A second, equally obvious flaw in Revesz's study derives from the relationship between the nature of the sample and the conclusions drawn. Revesz loosely generalizes from his study of EPA cases to draw conclusions about the court's character in all circumstances. When he summarizes his conclusions, he does not say that ideology influences the D.C. Circuit's decision making in certain environmental cases, but rather that "ideology significantly influ [*1344]

ences judicial decisionmaking." 34 Similarly, he phrases his conclusions about the prevalence of ideological voting in cases involving so-called "procedural challenges" and about panel composition in general terms, with no reference to the EPA sample. 35

It is obvious, or should be, that one cannot generalize from a skewed and limited sample of EPA cases to conclusions about how the court behaves the rest of the time. There is absolutely no reason to believe, nor does Revesz ever suggest, that his limited sample of environmental cases is representative of the D.C. Circuit's jurisprudence generally. I almost hesitate to make such a self-evident point, but, by the overly broad and heedless language of his "conclusions," Revesz leaves me no choice.

These initial observations cast doubt on the appropriateness of the sample, and therefore on the conclusions of Revesz's study. Even taking Revesz's study on its own terms, however, one finds many flaws in the study's methodology and data interpretation. I turn to those problems now.

2. Scope of Sample

The first observation to be made regarding Revesz's methodology is that Revesz found no statistically significant results in many of the time periods and circumstances studied. Where he reached this outcome, however, he was never deterred: instead, he turned to other configurations of data, apparently in the hopes of producing more interesting results. In other words, this was hardly an experimental methodology designed to discover and report whatever outcome emerged; instead, it represented a winnowing process in which progressively fewer and fewer of the data were considered as the author set his sights on finding some set of data that might produce notable consequences. By the final multivariate analysis of the second era, which he claims produced a significant result, Revesz was studying just one of the six slices of data that covered that period. Within that slice, he was analyzing only the petitions for review brought by industry groups, and within that slice, only so-called "procedural challenges" to EPA action, and not statutory claims.

[*1345] This data selection process is methodologically strange, at best. The result of this winnowing is that we must ask why allegedly significant results were found only for these comparatively narrow circumstances, and what significance, if any, we should give to the other findings that did not produce such significance. 36 Put another way, one must wonder if the narrow set of cases for which Revesz reaches conclusions represents a statistically significant sample of all the ways Revesz might have cut the data. The one thing that is absolutely clear is that Revesz has no basis to generalize from his narrowly focused data to conclude that ideology significantly influences judicial decision making on the D.C. Circuit. His data do not come close to supporting such a claim.

3. Coding

Then there is the question of the methodology Revesz used to code and classify the cases that provided the raw data for the study. In the technical terminology of agency review, a panel of the court may grant or deny a petition for review of agency action. When it grants a petition for review, the panel may vacate the action under review. Such a vacation may 37 or may not 38 be accompanied by an express remand to the agency for further action or explanation. While remand often includes vacation of an order, it need not do so. The court may remand without vacating an order, thus leaving the order in place pending further explanation. 39 The court may even dismiss the petition for review but still remand. 40

In other words, there is considerable nuance in the options available to the reviewing court. Revesz ignores this range of nuances, [*1346] possibly because taking account of their subtlety would have made it more difficult for him to draw sweeping conclusions.

Revesz also makes a technical error that may skew his data: he simply treats all remands as "reversals" of agency action, 41 ignoring the possibility of remand without vacation of the order, under which remand is explicitly not accompanied by reversal. Such remands without vacation do occur; and they do not fit Revesz's metric. The existence of such remands without vacation underscores the complexity of the review process, which is in some ways a dialogue between the court and the agency. It is precisely this complexity and dialogic character that Revesz misses by referring to case outcomes as "affirmances" or "reversals."

The most crucial piece of information for Revesz's method of analysis, also derived from the coding process, is whether the petition for review was brought by an industry group or an environmental group. Revesz uses this measure as a proxy for the sympathies of judges. Revesz too easily assumes that no cases are brought by environmental groups who actually are sympathetic to industry interests, and that no industry groups (for example, clean-up industry groups) ever support tougher environmental protection. But more crucially, nowhere does Revesz explain how he made this determination of who brought the challenge. The question is not without significance: frequently, multiple parties challenge an EPA action as both under-protective and over-protective of the environment, and such petitions are typically consolidated for disposition by the court. We cannot know how often such situations arose in the data set, or what Revesz has done with these cases, because he does not tell us.

Finally, there is the important distinction Revesz makes between judicial review of "statutory" cases and "procedural challenges," the criteria of which he also leaves unstated. It is frequently the case that petitioners raise both types of challenges to EPA actions. In other words, petitioners often claim that an EPA action both violates a statutory command and is arbitrary and capricious. The court may grant or deny such a double-barreled petition on either or both grounds. Revesz nowhere explains how he has dealt with such combined challenges. A reader would want to know about this and the other barriers to easy coding in any case. In the Revesz [*1347] study, these matters seem especially important, because it appears that the coders knew what hypotheses were being put to the test. Without an explanation of the coding process, a reader is justified in wondering about bias entering the data sample.

"Ideology"

As Revesz's title suggests, "ideology" is a major component of his study. Here choice of language matters tremendously. The loaded word "ideology" makes headlines and attracts attention; it is therefore very striking that Revesz never bothers to proffer a definition of this all-important term. Rather, he explains that he will use as a proxy for ideology "the views generally held by the party of the appointing President." 42 This approach raises a number of serious problems.

The threshold problem is that Revesz does not provide an explanation of the usefulness of the proxy of the party of the appointing President as a basis for judicial ideology. He simply cites to a variety of a studies which he himself characterizes as methodologically "suspect." 43 Rather obviously, the categories "Democrat" and "Republican" do not necessarily match sympathy towards greater or lesser degrees of environmental protection. The policies of individual Presidents - to say nothing of judges - may diverge greatly on such a complex topic. Without providing some statistical measure of the significance of the asserted correlation between political party and environmental policy, it is suspect for Revesz to assume that his ideological proxy is meaningful.

Beyond his one self-undercutting citation, Revesz merely asserts, without providing any proof, that "given the D.C. Circuit's high political profile,...this proxy is likely to be fairly good." 44 His support for the alleged high political profile of the D.C. Circuit turns out to be that two judges who sat on the court in the 1980s and 1990s had served in Congress, and three others had served in appointed positions in the Justice Department. 45 Revesz makes no attempt to [*1348] compare the D.C. Circuit with other circuit courts, even anecdotally. Nor does he explain what is meant by a "high political profile."

But more importantly, Revesz never explains why the supposed high political profile of the D.C. Circuit, even if it were established fact, would ensure a close connection between the ideology of an appointing President and the ideology of an individual judge. The Supreme Court is often thought to have a "high political profile," despite the fact that none of the sitting Justices served in Congress and only two, Chief Justice Rehnquist and Justice Scalia, served in the Justice Department. 46 Yet, numerous Supreme Court Justices, past and present, have famously disappointed the parties of the Presidents who appointed them by their independence and unpredictability. This would seem to undermine the casual assertion that judges on high political profile courts vote or think in accordance with the preferences of the parties of the Presidents who appointed them.

Revesz adds to his abbreviated account of ideology the offhanded suggestion that D.C. Circuit judges might actually be more likely to vote in accordance with "ideology" than other appellate judges. That several sitting D.C. Circuit judges were nominated to the Supreme Court during the 1980s and 1990s, he suggests, might encourage D.C. Circuit judges to vote with "their party" to improve their chances of nomination. 47 This is a harsh indictment indeed, to suggest without good basis that judges ignore legal principles in favor of a "party line" in the hope of improving their chances for appointment to the Supreme Court.

Revesz's association of voting patterns with career advancement calls to mind the Admiral in H.M.S. Pinafore, himself an attorney elected to Parliament, who "always voted at [his] party's call, and...never thought of thinking for [himself] at all." 48 Gilbert and Sullivan's character did rather well for himself by this strategy. As the Admiral picturesquely put it: "[I] thought so little, they rewarded me, by making me the ruler of the Queen's Navy." 49 But as the politicized confirmation battles of the last decade or so suggest, it is surely open to debate whether ideological voting [*1349] would today garner a judge the sort of support necessary for nomination and confirmation. A scholar who aspires to do social science research must do better than rely on armchair speculation, especially when the integrity of judges is being called into question and the cornerstone of his study is at stake.

The term "ideology" also requires scrutiny to the extent that it is typically thought to have negative connotations in the context of judging. It sounds like "ideology" to say that one person (or party) is pro-industry, and another pro-environment. But it may or may not be useful to employ the term "ideology" to capture a tendency for one person to look more skeptically than another on certain kinds of agency actions. Contrary to the popular perception - and to Revesz's terminology - the D.C. Circuit does not require certain agency outcomes or in any specific way set substantive agency policy. Instead, in cases challenging agency action as arbitrary and capricious (Revesz's so-called "procedural challenges"), the court serves only as a check on the reasonableness and procedural adequacy of agency action. When agency action in such cases is found to be unreasonable, the agency (not the court) reconsiders the disputed questions for ultimate resolution.

If one judge tends to be skeptical of policy that he believes disadvantages industry, and another skeptical of policy that she worries might harm the environment, the most either may do is vote to require the agency to take a second look at the reasoning by which it reached its decision. The judges cannot dictate a different policy outcome. Nor must they necessarily intend a different policy outcome when they vote to grant a petition for review. In other words, "ideology" conjures up an image of judges definitively deciding the course of future events by their decisions; but in the agency cases Revesz actually discusses, the policy determination always continues to rest with the agency. Accordingly, it is highly misleading for Revesz to speak uncritically of "ideology" as the variable he is studying.

In response to my criticism of his approach to the notion of ideology, Revesz might protest that the proof of his approach lies in the pudding: if he can show trends that differentiate between judges appointed by Democrats and those appointed by Republicans, he might argue, that should suffice to convince his readers that the ideology proxy with which he began is useful. But such a [*1350] response fails to take into account the potentially serious problems of incomplete specification that infect Revesz's approach.

5. Incomplete Specification of the Model

"Omitted variable bias" refers to the possibility that factors which are correlated with the variables studied, but are not included in a study's analytic framework, actually explain the data better than do the factors considered by the investigator. 50 A variable omitted from the study, which is itself related to one or more of the included variables, may explain the data better than the included variables. This problem is most extreme in any sort of univariate analysis: such an analysis, as its name indicates, tests for only one variable, and therefore always allows the possibility that one or more of the multitude of other potentially relevant variables, because of its correlation with an included variable, explains the outcome better than does the variable tested. 51

Revesz acknowledges the danger of omitted variable bias in univariate analysis when it comes to studies performed by others. Indeed, he proclaims that his multivariate analysis "exposes an important methodological flaw in all prior work on judicial voting in multimember courts that sit on three-judge panels." 52 But this observation does not appear to affect Revesz's willingness to rely on his own univariate analysis as a basis for drawing definitive-sounding conclusions. Revesz performed his multivariate analysis on just one slice of the data for the second era, and only for industry challenges during that era. His broad conclusions, therefore, apparently, rest at least in some part on the univariate analysis, which he performed on all his data.

A second type of incomplete specification also vexes Revesz's univariate analysis. Revesz failed to examine whether other variables, excluded from his analysis, but independent of the party of the appointing President, explain some significant portion of the variance in the judges' voting. 53 In other words, we do not know how powerful was the effect of the variable that Revesz studied, because we do not know whether other, independent variables were also at work. The possible alternative variables I mentioned above (job experience, years on the bench, etc.) might have no correlation to the party of the appointing President, but might still, on their own, explain a significant portion of variance. Univariate analysis never accounts for such independent excluded variables any more than it accounts for related omitted variables that might introduce bias.

The problem of omitted variable bias is similar for the multivariate analysis. A multivariate analysis is only as good as the variables it isolates and considers. Revesz did look at party, panel composition, and the basis for the petition for review in challenges [*1352] brought by industry groups in the lone period from the second era. He did not, however, consider any of the other possible variables mentioned above, nor did he attempt to consider a more refined version of his analysis of the types of arguments proffered (i.e., claims that the EPA failed to explain its reasoning, or failed to respond to comments, or provided a reason that was logically incoherent). Thus, any of these other variables might have explained the data better than the variables selected by Revesz.

Moreover, Revesz startlingly never explains why he selected only one slice of the second era data. Regardless of what the other slices of data reveal under multivariate analysis, normal scholarly procedure demands that the outcomes be reported. 54 By failing to provide the results of multivariate analysis for the rest of his data, Revesz calls into question his entire study. Revesz's silence about these data slices also means that his broad conclusion at the outset of the article must rest at least in part on the univariate analysis he performed on all the data. Because, as I have suggested, univariate analysis tells us little, it follows that Revesz's broad conclusions are unwarranted.

In short, the problems of incomplete specification, like other difficulties with Revesz's methodology, provide reason for great caution in considering Revesz's purported "findings." In the absence of a broader and more nuanced analysis on the basis of a greater number of variables, there is no legitimate way for Revesz to press the sweeping claims that he seeks to advance.

6. Deliberation and Dissent

As I mentioned earlier, Revesz claims that "perhaps the central insight" of his article is that panel composition has an effect "far greater" than that of "individual ideology." 55 Revesz proposes two possible hypotheses to explain this finding, which he calls the "deliberation hypothesis" and the "dissent hypothesis." The deliberation hypothesis, in his account, is the proposition that deliberation among panel members affects outcomes, so that the more judges [*1353] on the panel appointed by a President of one party, the more likely the panel is to reach the result consistent with that party's ideology. 56 The dissent hypothesis asserts that a judge sitting with two other judges appointed by a President of a different party from the President who appointed him "moderates his or her views in order to avoid having to write a dissent." 57

The way to distinguish these hypotheses, in Revesz's view, would be to determine whether a judge, sitting with one colleague appointed by a President of the same party as he, is likely to vote in the same way he would if both other panel members were appointed by a President of the same party as he. If the judge is likely to vote differently in the presence of one judge of the same presumed ideological predilections as he than he would in the presence of two such judges, says Revesz, deliberation is at work. If the judge is likely to vote the same way with one presumed like-minded colleague as with two, then judges are avoiding dissent. The reason Revesz gives is that under the dissent hypothesis, "the single judge of the one party is the only one to moderate his or her views." 58 Under the deliberation hypothesis, by contrast, the "majority" judges should be influenced by the "minority" judge. Revesz concludes that the data do not suffice to disentangle the two hypotheses. 59

Yet, it is worth noting in passing that the mechanism Revesz proposes for distinguishing the two hypotheses is uncertain at best. Revesz assumes that deliberation must operate in a linear fashion, so that the more judges who hold one view, the greater the effect of that view on the panel. But there is no reason to think that three judges who agree on an outcome should have an intensifying effect on one another as a result of deliberation. The three judges may share the same view that two of them would still share if the third panel member held a different view. If this were so, then there would be no reason to expect that a judge sitting with one presumed like-minded colleague would vote differently than a judge sitting with two presumed like-minded colleagues.

[*1354] In other words, "deliberation" might easily include the tendency for two judges who see a case the same way to try to bring the third judge to see the case their way. The two judges might be less inclined to see the third judge's opinion as convincing. This would produce an effect in which deliberation led to more moderation of the views of a judge inclined to dissent than of a judge safely in the majority: but the effect would be an artifact of deliberation, not of fear of dissent. There would be no statistical difference between this kind of deliberation and what Revesz labels the "dissent hypothesis."

Revesz's odd assumption that "deliberation" must operate according to the abstract idea that every view influences a judge equally is of a piece with the rest of his analysis. By ignoring an obvious plausible explanation of decision-making behavior - that the view of the majority is more influential than that of the minority in the deliberative context - Revesz reveals his method of framing the most cynical hypothesis in pursuit of a significant-sounding formulation. Deliberation, as I will argue shortly, is indeed a regular feature of the D.C. Circuit's decision making. But it cannot easily be reduced to an abstract formula and it must be considered in its institutional framework. Before examining that framework, I turn to Cross and Tiller's study and its shortcomings.

II. Cross and Tiller's Essay

A. Findings

In their study, Professors Cross and Tiller examined panel composition in cases decided by the D.C. Circuit between 1991 and 1995 that cited Chevron U.S.A. v. Natural Resources Defense Council, 60 a landmark decision in the area of administrative law. Chevron holds that where Congress has explicitly or implicitly delegated authority to an agency to implement a statute, 61 the courts must defer to that agency's reasonable statutory interpretation. Cross and Tiller looked at all kinds of administrative cases, not only environmental cases; and their analysis was limited to statutory petitions for review, not the kind of Administrative Procedure Act "procedural challenges" on which Revesz focused. [*1355] Thus, the two studies are not precisely comparable. Cross and Tiller used the same (problematic) measure of ideology used by Revesz: they reckoned a challenge to be "liberal" if brought by a non-governmental public interest organization, and "conservative" if brought by an industry group; and they assumed a judge's ideology matched the party of the President who appointed the judge. 62

Cross and Tiller compared outcomes in cases where, on their definitions, two of the three judges had a presumed policy preference against deferring to the agency's statutory interpretation, with cases in which all three judges shared a presumed policy preference against deferring to the agency's statutory interpretation. They found that in the former case, the majority deferred 62% of the time, while in the latter case the majority deferred only 33% of the time. 63 In other words, Cross and Tiller concluded, the presence of a judge on the panel whose presumed preference in favor of deference differed from the majority's presumed preference against deference led to a moderating effect.

It is important to note that this outcome is entirely consistent with the hypothesis that collegiality and deliberation, rather than the desire to avoid dissent, plays an important role in the possible moderating effects of panel composition. Cross and Tiller, however, did not conclude that a moderating collegial or deliberative effect existed. This was partly so because, when they examined the difference between panels where two judges had the assumed preference to defer with those where three judges had the presumed preference to defer, they found no statistically significant difference between them. 64 This led Cross and Tiller to conclude that the panels composed of two judges with a presumed preference not to defer were avoiding the "whistleblower effect" of dissent by the third judge with a presumed different preference. 65

B. Methodological Flaws

Cross and Tiller's study, like Revesz's analysis, suffers from the problem of omitted variable bias. 66 Any number of factors other [*1356] than the party of the appointing President and panel composition might account for some or all of their findings. This problem appears not to have troubled them at all.

The most glaring problem, however, with Cross and Tiller's study is that it fundamentally misunderstands the meaning of Chevron in a way that is fatal to the entire hypothesis. Cross and Tiller speak as if Chevron simply commands a court defer to an agency's statutory interpretation in all cases. They purport to acknowledge that Chevron "did not command mechanistic deference." 67 Yet, they go on to characterize the legal structure of Chevron as creating a "loophole" for courts seeking to avoid deference. 68 They refer throughout their article to deference as "obeying Chevron" and non-deference as "disobeying Chevron." This tell-tale formulation, around which their entire approach is based, makes it very clear that Cross and Tiller believe Chevron to require deference as a normative matter all of the time.

Of course, Chevron says no such thing. Where the terms of a statute are clear, a court must enforce the statute as written by Congress and not as otherwise construed by an agency. 69 Chevron only requires deference to an agency's interpretation of a statute where Congress has delegated authority 70 and the agency's interpretation is reasonable. 71 This is no "loophole," but the very logic of the doctrine itself. Thus, it is odd, if not bizarre, to argue as Cross and Tiller do that the majority of a panel "fears" that a dissent will somehow call attention to a violation of the doctrine. There is not, and can in principle never be, some a priori determination of whether deferring to or reversing agency interpretation under Chevron is "correct." It all depends on the specific agency interpretation. If agencies were to become more aggressive in statutory interpretation, more frequently going beyond the plain meaning of statutes or reasonableness, deference rates would presumably de [*1357] cline; if they were to become more cautious, deference rates might well rise.

Furthermore, the concept of "whistle blowing" makes little sense once one realizes that Chevron does not "command" any one outcome. There is nothing inherently troubling or problematic about a court's refusal to defer. The key point is that a court has no reason to hide its refusal to defer, which is in any case by necessity explained in the opinion itself. And a petition to the D.C. Circuit for rehearing en banc or to the Supreme Court for certiorari would be certain to point to the lack of deference, dissent or no dissent.

Cross and Tiller's troubles do not end, however, with this embarrassingly basic legal error. Amazingly, they provide no account of why judges appointed by a President of a party different from the appointing party of the other two judges actually do dissent in Chevron cases. That is, they offer no explanation for the operation of the fear of dissent which supposedly motivates the majority to moderate its position in some cases. This failure to discuss dissents by minority-appointed judges in cases where the majority votes not to defer casts further doubt on the hypothesis.

Cross and Tiller might respond with the theoretical claim that such dissents are rare because the majority has successfully sought to avoid them. This potential response, which is not inherently illogical, still calls to my mind the New England eccentric who claims that by clapping his hands he can keep away the alligators. When his crusty Cape Cod neighbors ask him how he knows this technique works, he slyly responds: "Seen any alligators around here lately?" Of course, it could be true that the absence of dissent results from fear of dissent. But it is impossible to prove solely on the basis of the absence of dissent that fear of dissent motivates judges on the D.C. Circuit. There would have to be independent reasons to draw this conclusion. Given that Cross and Tiller provide no discussion of those cases where dissent actually does occur, and given the existence of good reasons to doubt that fear of dissent motivates suppression of dissent, it is difficult to take Cross and Tiller's argument seriously.

C. The Possibility of Collegiality

As I noted earlier, Cross and Tiller ignored the possibility of collegiality, apparently because they found no statistically signifi [*1358] cant difference between panels in which two or three judges had the preference to defer. However, this finding does not preclude the possibility of collegial deliberation.

In a Chevron case, once it has been established that Congress delegated authority and that the agency interpretation is not precluded by the statute's plain meaning, the agency's interpretation need only be reasonable to be upheld. So long as the agency has not done something egregious, there arises a kind of presumption in favor of the agency. In such a case, deference is the norm. And, indeed, Cross and Tiller found that deference was by far the most common result overall.

Thus, when Chevron deference is granted, the court need not spend as much time and energy explaining and justifying its conclusion as it must when it finds the agency's interpretation unreasonable. One would therefore expect that a judge with a presumed preference favoring non-deference (the unusual outcome) would not require as much convincing as would a judge whose presumed preference favored deference (the usual outcome). In other words, one would expect that the moderating effect of collegial deliberation in Chevron cases would manifest itself primarily (or only) where the minority judge would "prefer" to support deference. Sad to say, this explanation does not appear in Cross and Tiller's article. It would upset their own major hypothesis, which is that panel majorities fear the "whistle blowing" of a spurned dissenting judge calling attention to their failure to "obey Chevron."

III. Collegiality

A. View from the Court

My own view is that if panel composition turns out to have a "moderating" effect on judges' voting behavior, this is a sign that panel members are behaving collegially: that is, they are discussing the case with each other and reaching a mutually acceptable judgment based on their shared sense of the proper outcome. In such a collegial deliberative process, we would expect to find that the presumed political views of different judges push the outcome towards the center of the spectrum (where there is a spectrum). The Revesz [*1359] and the Cross and Tiller studies are both consistent with the phenomenon of collegiality. 72

In explaining my view of collegiality I start with three observations drawn from many years of working and talking with my colleagues on the D.C. Circuit. First, judges on my court who are convinced that the law requires a certain result in a case do not decline to take a position simply to avoid registering a dissent. Second, judges who are in the majority and convinced that the law requires a certain result do not moderate their views because they fear that a dissent will somehow draw attention to flaws in the majority opinion. Finally, the judges on a panel usually agree on the correct result in a case. And when there is initially no clear view as to what the judgment should be in a particular case, we normally work hard in our deliberations to find the correct result.

The main reason I am astonished by the hypotheses advanced by scholars like Revesz and Cross and Tiller is that my colleagues and I dissent so rarely from the opinions of panels on which we sit. The statistics are stark: for the last three years (1995-1997), our overall dissent rate, covering all dispositions, has been between 2% and 3%. 73 In cases where the court published an opinion, the dissent rate was between 11% and 13%. 74 Of those dissents, between one-third and two-thirds involved cases in which the dissenter and the two judges in the majority were appointed by Presidents of different parties. 75 In aggregate, only 47 out of 94 dissents over the last three years followed presumed "party" lines. 76 Thus, even where there was dissent, the dissent only occurred along presumed "party" lines around half of the time. 77 This is, in my view, extremely strong prima facie evidence of consensus among judges about the correct judgment in a given case. It is very striking to me [*1360] that both Revesz and Cross and Tiller do not squarely confront this phenomenon, but instead seem determined to explain away this consistent pattern of consensus.

In Revesz's case, this evasive impulse leads to a strange contradiction. Revesz wants to maintain that the D.C. Circuit is ideologically driven. But at the very same time, he wants to explain away our consensus as the product of strategic thinking by observing that voting patterns seem to transcend what he calls ideology. This leaves him in the uncomfortable position of saying that the D.C. Circuit is both too ideological and somehow not ideological enough: at once impelled by dogmatic personal ideology and by strategic suppression of ideology in favor of avoiding dissent. We judges are damned if we do, damned if we don't. If we are individually consistent, then we must be ideological. If we strive for consensus, we must be strategic. Cross and Tiller are not much better on this front. They claim that D.C. Circuit judges vote ideologically and also that D.C. Circuit judges strategically deviate from their ideological stance.

I am not sure how we judges could effectively hide our views, given our obligation to explain our reasons in a public way. More importantly, however, I can assert that we as judges have no desire at all to shield from the public the reasons for our published opinions. We are not afraid of open disagreement, as anyone who has ever attended one of our oral arguments could readily attest.

On the other hand, we do spend a great deal of time listening to each other's views and considering arguments each of us makes. This dynamic process of discussion and dialogue is what I have in mind when I speak of collegial deliberation. Deliberation is a necessary part of doing our jobs well. I take it that one reason we judge in randomly selected panels of three judges, rather than alone, is that the institution of the three-judge panel gives us a chance to consider our own initial positions in light of the considered views of other experienced judges. This opportunity for deliberation is particularly helpful, because the different areas of experience and expertise each judge brings to the table help the other judges as the panel encounters questions from the many areas of law we must consider.

It is inevitable and probably salutary that judges' different professional and life experiences have some bearing on how they initially [*1361] confront various problems that come before them. This natural variation, if I might call it that, provides a good justification for the constitutional practice of appointing judges by presidential nomination and Senate confirmation, as opposed to the selection of judges through more regularized bureaucratic means that is practiced in some other countries. A court composed of judges with a diversity of different professional experiences and perspectives makes for better-informed discussion. It provides for constant input from judges who have seen different kinds of problems in their pre-judicial careers, and indeed have sometimes seen the same problems from different angles. 78 We all take advantage of this diversity, not by deferring to one another inappropriately, but by listening to and taking seriously the views of our colleagues.

Let me add that collegiality may be necessary, but it is not automatic. There have been times, some of them well-publicized, during which the D.C. Circuit was not a model of collegiality and mutual respect. But together, we have consciously worked hard to remedy the occasional breaches in collegiality. By and large, I think we can say without boasting that we have done a pretty good job. We still disagree with one another, and on some issues we even disagree vociferously. This is entirely appropriate: collegiality does not mean universal consensus, nor should it. Collegiality means only that we discuss each other's views seriously and respectfully, and that we listen with open minds. That modest goal I think we achieve nearly all the time.

It follows from our practice of collegiality that our views are sometimes affected by our deliberations with the other judges. It should be obvious that this is a good thing, not a bad one. If we never affected one another, that would be a sign that our discourse was not productive, that we were not listening with open minds, or perhaps not listening to one another at all. This fact of collegiality, more than anything else, I think, explains that part of the evidence collected by Revesz and by Cross and Tiller that shows what Revesz calls "panel composition effects." We judges often begin from different perspectives; we disagree, we deliberate, we listen, and sometimes we moderate or change our views. This should hardly [*1362] come as a surprise, but if it does surprise anyone, the surprise should be happy.

B.

"Procedural Challenges" in Administrative Cases Compared with More Traditional Legal Decisions

It is also worth noting that Revesz's article deals with a set of cases (i.e., the so-called "procedural challenges") where disagreement among judges differs in some important ways from disagreement on cases that raise issues relating to the meaning of statutory law. When the court reviews non-Chevron agency action under the Administrative Procedure Act (Revesz's so-called "procedural challenges"), we apply a statutorily mandated standard and we proceed by legal-style reasoning. But unlike what we do most of the time when we consider pure questions of law on appeal from the District Court or in agency Chevron cases, we do not try to figure out whether the agency has decided the question before it correctly in non-Chevron agency cases. Rather, our task consists of something less rule-bound: we usually must determine whether the agency explained its actions adequately, which is to say logically, clearly, and pursuant to prescribed procedures. This task inevitably requires us to make sense of policy matters that are often complex and on which reasonable minds can differ. After all, even where we find that an agency has acted unreasonably, we do not think that those who wrote the order were stupid or illogical people. We simply think their explanation to have been less than the law requires.

I say this by way of explaining that non-Chevron administrative review calls for more "judgment calls" than does review of questions of pure law. When we decide questions of law, we are tightly constrained by precedent and statutes and these constraints are far greater than the more limited analogical precedent we face in non-Chevron administrative contexts. These formal constraints are augmented by techniques of textual interpretation and legal reasoning that are broadly shared by the interpretive community of judges and legal practitioners. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that Revesz found that ideology did not drive decision making in statutory cases. Given this finding, Revesz was largely stuck with having to study only so-called "procedural challenges."

In administrative cases involving so-called "procedural challenges," the differing backgrounds and attitudes of judges are likely [*1363] to express themselves more than they would in the context of purely legal questions. This is true because, as I have suggested, understanding and parsing policy is, whether we like it or not, a task affected by one's experiences and ideas. In other words, the determination as to whether an agency's action is arbitrary and capricious does not always admit of any easy answer. The legal strictures defining "reasoned decision making," under seminal decisions such as Overton Park 79 and State Farm, 80 are more jurisprudential guide-posts than strict rules of law.

Thus, in cases involving so-called "procedural challenges," Supreme Court decisions dictate a method but rarely an outcome. And the large body of D.C. Circuit precedent in the area of administrative law generally does not constrain and mandate a certain conclusion in "procedural challenges," but only points to analogies with the case under review. All this means that when we grapple with these so-called "procedural challenges," we are not operating under the same set of constraints that the legal system normally imposes on us. It follows that our experiences and our views will find more room for expression in this context than they do in the very constrained context of purely legal questions.

Furthermore, the relative influence of background and perspectives on cases involving "procedural challenges" is a good thing, not a bad one. When Congress gave the D.C. Circuit the special authority to review a huge fare of administrative cases under the Administrative Procedure Act, it knew full well that it was not creating jurisdiction for just another set of purely legal cases. Congress was assigning to the court a special review function, and thereby giving the court an integral role in the Administrative Procedure Act's dynamic structure of rule making. In this review function, the court needs to rely to some extent on its own commonsense understanding of the world. Because understandings and perspectives differ, it is valuable for these different perspectives to inform our assessment of the logic of agency decisions. If we judges were all identical and all carried the same experiences and views, we might unconsciously succumb to agency bias. Because we differ and because we discuss the perspectives that flow from our [*1364] differences, we can and do check one another. On the whole, our diversity of views enhances the sensibleness of our work product.

The lesson that one should draw from this discussion and from the studies, then, is simply this: judges behave collegially. In administrative cases involving "procedural challenges," where we must assess the logic of an agency's policy, it is hardly surprising that we sometimes begin from different starting points. We then talk about our views, deliberate and discuss, and reach judgments as a product of that collegial deliberation. This process enables us to do a better job than we would if we were all the same or if we sat on cases alone. However, even in cases involving "procedural challenges," when we are bound by legal principles emanating from the Administrative Procedure Act and relevant case law, we follow those principles, not personal ideology.

IV. Qualitative Analysis and the Interpretation of Data

I believe that judges' views on how they decide cases should be relevant to understanding how judges in fact decide cases. Indeed, I find it strange that I have to convince anyone of this proposition. Yet, apparently I must, because the practitioners of "law and positive political theory" seem to have adopted the position that a judge's qualitative input has no bearing on their undertaking. 81 If I understand them correctly, the word "positive" in their self-declared title is supposed to limit their inquiry to positivist description, to the exclusion of description from within the practice.

Both Revesz's article and Cross and Tiller's essay suggest that non-partisan, rule-based judging is a foolish idea, easily refuted by empirical analysis demonstrating pervasive bias among judges. It seems that I am among the fools who are the subject of ridicule, for I have written some articles explaining judicial decision making as a principled, constrained practice. In one I said that "members of the federal judiciary strive, most often successfully, to decide cases in accord with the law rather than with their own ideological or partisan preferences." 82 In another I wrote that "it is the law - and not the personal politics of individual judges - that controls judicial [*1365] decision-making in most cases resolved by the court of appeals." 83 Other judges on my court have written in the same vein. 84 Revesz 85 and Cross and Tiller 86 are good enough to cite some of these statements as examples of a point of view that they do not bother to discuss at any length. They simply drop a footnote, shrug their shoulders in apparent disbelief, and move on to formulate their own hypotheses regarding the strategic and ideological character of judicial decision making.

Some judges might believe that the judiciary should not take a public stand on the processes of decision making, even to assure the public of their basic fairness. Obviously I do not share this opinion. I think it is useful for judges to explain judicial decision making. But I do not write articles about the nature of judicial decision making merely to add one more voice to the public discussion about politics and the judiciary. The public can hear the message that judges try to act in accordance with law from any number of sources. I have published these articles discussing judicial methodology for the specific reason that I believe the qualitative experience of the actual judges who decide actual cases matters profoundly for the understanding of judicial decision making.

So I must say that I find the positive political theorists' dismissal of such input puzzling. Ignoring the self-description of judges would be one thing if judging were a mechanical process, or one performed by people incapable of self-consciousness. But judging is a human activity, performed by human beings trained to think critically about their endeavor. To understand it fully requires considering the way those who perform the activity understand it.

Let me say a little bit about why the input of the judge should matter for anyone who wants to provide a convincing and useful account of how judging operates. The first step is to ask, what is the goal or purpose of articles purporting to explain judging? Are they designed as guides for lawyers or parties who appear before the court? As data for public policy recommendations? As contri [*1366] butions to the study of institutional behavior? If the answer is any of these - and I imagine it is some of each - then it will matter tremendously what the judges think they are doing. Judges' views of the process will provide guidance for lawyers and parties who want to convince courts of how to decide cases. Judges' views will help those engaged in public policy understand how to shape institutional arrangements in such a way as to maximize positive effects and minimize negative ones. Most importantly, judges' perceptions of their activities and decisional processes shed light on the institutional and decisional mechanisms of the court in ways that no other data can. Our perceptions tell the world a great deal about how we act, and why.

By their nature, our judicial deliberations take place privately. Under normal circumstances, it is difficult for a researcher to have access to the way we proceed in our analysis and deciding of cases. This means that our own descriptions of what we do, in interviews or in writing, are often the only basis for studies trying to explain our processes. This qualitative data source is especially crucial for research that intends to understand the processes by which we decide cases. A researcher who wants to study processes, but has limited access to the details of those processes, may choose to analyze case outcomes. Analysis of case outcomes, however, can provide only a very limited picture of the internal processes by which we decide cases. This is so because outcome-based analysis always necessarily proceeds by the interpretive mode of projecting backwards from outcome to process.

The pitfall inherent in projecting processes from outcomes is obvious: a variety of different processes might all produce similar-looking results. In other words, when the researcher takes the crucial steps of formulating hypotheses and interpreting data, he or she will often be faced with several choices. It is at this point that the researcher's own biases can come glaringly to the fore. A researcher who wants to understand the process she or he is studying may, in the manner of enlightened social scientists, use the input of the subjects of a study to help form hypotheses and choose among various interpretations of the data. Or, alternatively, a researcher may take the route of ignoring the judges' self-description and relying upon purely game-theoretical assumptions about strategic action. The researcher who takes the latter position expresses a clear bias: [*1367] the researcher believes, on the basis of certain assumptions about the likelihood of certain behavior, that he or she knows better than do the judges themselves what is truly motivating judicial action.

One salutary example of a social scientist drawing upon qualitative data collected in extensive interviews to reach cautious conclusions about judicial decision making is H.W. Perry's book, Deciding to Decide: Agenda Setting in the United States Supreme Court. 87 Perry does not rely exclusively on qualitative or quantitative data in his analysis of the certiorari process. 88 Instead he brings the two to bear upon one another, and uses his own interview data in concert with empirical research. 89 Perry's work has been rightly praised for its methodological ecumenicism. 90 It contributes to the understanding of an important phenomenon, while largely avoiding reductionist formulations.

For examples of biased approaches one need look no further than the article of Revesz and the essay of Cross and Tiller. In hypothesis formation and in data interpretation, both consistently and repeatedly assume that judicial decision making has nothing to do with principle or internal coherence. This leads them to make some shockingly ill-reasoned statements. For example, consider Revesz's finding that there appeared to be no significant difference in the way judges appointed by Presidents of different parties decided statutory cases, whereas some effect was found in a narrowly limited sample of cases involving so-called "procedural challenges." One could easily conclude from this that statutory cases simply present less room for debate and difference than do "procedural challenges." As I have suggested above, this is a rather obvious conclusion in light of the structural differences between the two categories of cases. But Revesz, with no further data, draws a radically different conclusion: he argues that because the Supreme [*1368] Court reviews statutory cases more often than "procedural challenges" (a claim which, by the way, he never substantiates statistically), the judges of the D.C. Circuit strategically express their political preferences in procedural review cases, where they are unlikely to be overturned. 91

Professor Revesz is a fine law professor, so he has reason to know that this interpretation is tenuous at best. He himself admits that "an alternative explanation is that the legal standards for procedural challenges are more malleable than for statutory challenges, thus making it easier for judges to indulge their ideological preferences." 92 If one leaves out the incendiary language and the entirely unjustified second clause, this is no more than a recognition that judges in statutory cases might be more constrained by legal strictures than in other administrative cases. Revesz rejects this possibility out of hand, though, by simply asserting that statutory cases might be just as "malleable." 93 Why this might be so, he does not say.

Recall that at the front of his article, Revesz lists as one of his conclusions that "ideological voting is more prevalent in cases, such as those raising procedural challenges, that are less likely to be reviewed by the United States Supreme Court." 94 This spurious parading of correlation as causation is highly questionable scholarship. 95 Revesz knows perfectly well he has not done anything at all to show that the likelihood of Supreme Court review accounts for the differential he has described. Input from judges suggests, at least, that there are alternative explanations which must be examined before conclusions are drawn. Ignoring this input allows the researcher to produce an exciting headline, but it does nothing to advance scholarship.

Revesz is not alone in this tendency to push the data into bogus interpretations. Cross and Tiller do much the same thing when they describe their finding as one of "whistle blowing." They postulate by this term the existence of a heretofore undiscussed phenomenon: the majority's "fear" of a dissent. As I showed above, their attempt to prove that their data support this conclusion is undercut [*1369] by the possibility of an alternative explanation: that the choice not to defer to an agency's statutory interpretation requires more discussion and deliberation than does the choice to defer. Cross and Tiller's failure to consider how in the world a majority could be "hiding" its decision not to defer is also emblematic of the tendency to aim for headlines at the expense of careful conclusions.

These examples merely draw attention to something which is, or should be, a commonplace in social scientific inquiry into institutional processes: that self-description is a relevant and significant source of data. 96 That does not mean that a social scientist must accept uncritically what judges say. But a researcher ignores it at his or her peril. We in the law and in the legal academy should by now be above the kind of self-confuting argumentation that postulates that judges are irresponsibly ideological and at the same time are somehow too affected by the views of other judges of opposite ideological bias. Both studies discussed here want to pillory judges on both fronts, to condemn judges as ideologically biased if they appear too consistent, and to characterize them as "strategic" and therefore inconsistent if they appear to be flexible.

I want to say a final word on the dangers of untidy arguments when it comes to drawing conclusions about judicial decision making. It matters what the legal community and the public think about the way judges do their job. Judging is part of the public business, and judges hold a public trust. I am not in favor of mythologizing or mystifying judges and judging: if our public votes shed light on how we do our jobs, then it is perfectly legitimate for academics to collate and discuss those votes. But we must never forget that when it comes to a public trust, perception is significant. If the public develops a false perception of our actions or our intentions, there will eventually be consequences for the legitimacy of our legal system.

The public today is constantly treated to rhetoric and innuendo about the purported politicization of the judiciary. Such rhetoric has become an all-too-familiar part of our political landscape. No one group has a monopoly on it. Scholars who seek the truth, however, and particularly scholars who purport to positive description, really ought to be careful not to add to this rhetoric without a [*1370] convincing basis for doing so. It is no excuse to say that the public will always misinterpret one's scholarship. Even though this may be true, it is merely another reason for scholars to express their conclusions in measured terms and with a clear sense of what conclusions are and are not supported by data.

Conclusion

My message should be clear. The studies discussed here do not support most of the conclusions urged by their authors. They are, however, consistent with the view that the D.C. Circuit is today blessed by "the collegiality that is indispensable to judicial decisionmaking." 97 That is, we deliberate with one another, and are affected by that deliberation in valuable ways. The story, then, may well have a happy ending for anyone who values the idea that human judges can act in a principled fashion and produce reasonably fair judgments. The judge's voice may not be the only one raised in explaining how judicial decision making works. But judges should at least be allowed to join the choir and to affect the way the song is sung.

TEXT:
[*837] I. INTRODUCTION

During my third year as a member of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, I was invited to give a paper on "The Role of a Judge in Modern Society." Although it was much too early then for me to offer any conclusive views on the subject, I used the occasion to develop a thesis that appellate judging is for the most part a highly principled exercise, in which the personal ideologies of judges play a strictly limited role. .lnfootnotes {text-decoration:none; font-weight:bold; color:#0000FF; font-size:7pt} 1 In essence, I argued that appellate judges are, and feel themselves to be, meaningfully constrained in their decisionmaking. I must admit that, when I first reflected on the role of a judge, I could not be sure whether my thesis mirrored the workings of the federal judiciary or merely expressed an operational goal; nonetheless, I was then, and remain even today, firm in my conviction that "principled decisionmaking" is essential to the credibility and success of the judicial function.

Within two years after I wrote The Role of a Judge, I undertook a modest defense of my thesis of principled decisionmaking. During my first five years on the bench, I had come to realize that many persons in our society shared what I considered to be a distorted view of the judiciary as a fundamentally political institution. To dispel the myth that appellate courts in general, and the D.C. Circuit in particular, are mostly engaged in partisan ideological struggles over policy issues, I wrote an article on "Public Misperceptions Concerning the 'Politics' of Judging." 2 In this second article, I detailed some of the constraints [*838] imposed on judicial decisionmaking, including legal precedent, the discipline of the judicial craft and the internal operating practices of the D.C. Circuit. I also pointed out that, "contrary to popular view, members of the D.C. Circuit rarely disagree[d] over the disposition of cases. Between July 1, 1983, and June 30, 1984, for example, the court decided a total of 1,146 cases . . . [and] more than 94% of these cases were decided without a dissent." 3 Based on this, and on other quantitative and qualitative measures of judicial performance, I concluded that members of the federal judiciary strive, most often successfully, to decide cases in accord with the law rather than with their own ideological or partisan preferences. Although I recognized in Public Misperceptions that there are some who doubt the applicability of principle in the legal process, I argued that the pursuit of principled decisionmaking is the essence of the judicial function. 4

Today, more than eleven years after becoming a judge, I am less sanguine in my views. I still believe in and subscribe to principled decisionmaking, but it is no longer entirely clear to me that partisan politics and ideological maneuvering have no meaningful influence on judicial decisionmaking. My current perspective is not a product of self-righteousness, nor is it intended to be accusatory. Indeed, in my view, most judges still share a belief that principled decisionmaking is the essence of the judicial function. What has changed, I think, is the nature of certain external pressures felt by judges; these pressures are both created and exacerbated by the continuing distortion of public perceptions, in which the judicial function is increasingly viewed as just one more "political" enterprise.

We all know that perceptions often far exceed reality. One consequence of this is that an accusation premised on a false perception can be as damaging as the alleged injury of which it complains. Even more troubling is when persons who make damning statements based on false perceptions do not even recognize the accusatory nature of their remarks. In either event, the false perception can create a new reality which is a horror to behold.

The more that judges are assessed in terms of "political" (result-oriented) decisionmaking, the more likely it is that this will become a self-fulfilling prophecy. Even if judges are able to resist the temptation to conform to the false perception, continued assessments of judicial performance in political terms will promote a "new reality," for most people will come to believe that the judicial function is nothing more than a political enterprise. No matter how good the intentions of its servants, the judiciary will be sharply devalued and incompetent to [*839] fulfill its role as mediator in a society with lofty but sometimes conflicting ambitions. This would be a horror to behold.

II. THE "WAR ON DRUGS": A STRUGGLE AGAINST UNPRINCIPLED DECISIONMAKING

The problems of which I speak are manifested in several different ways. Thus, result-oriented decisionmaking may be prompted by partisan politics, ideology or personal whim. Such decisionmaking is unprincipled in the sense that it focuses on preferred results, rather than on permissible precepts of adjudication (such as a constitutional norm, a statutory provision or a case precedent). To my mind, there is no point in distinguishing between these various forms, for any purely result-oriented decisionmaking is unacceptable. Different forms of result-oriented decisionmaking may be curbed in different ways, but, in my view, all forms are equally bad.

An interesting, and troubling, example of what I mean is seen in connection with the recent course of the government's "War on Drugs." I am confident that every judge believes that the elimination of illegal drug trafficking should be a national priority. At the same time, however, there is every reason to be deeply troubled if, in pursuing this goal, the War on Drugs destroys the individual rights and liberties of American citizens. In other words, our legitimate desire to defend against the very real (and dangerous) threat of drug trafficking cannot overtake our commitment to more enduring values. We simply cannot sacrifice constitutional protections to the cause of a battle of less than constitutional magnitude.

I have discussed elsewhere my conviction that this trade of rights for results is both mistaken as a matter of policy and prohibited as a matter of law. 5 I raise the subject here not to reiterate these general concerns, but because the drug crisis and the "war" it has occasioned pose, I think, especially difficult challenges for the federal judiciary. To say that we should not trade rights for results does not make this an easy issue. Most judges will feel no sympathy for a drug dealer who has been found with a huge cache of illegal drugs -- not even when the drug dealer has been the victim of an illegal search. Too many people have died due to illegal drugs, and the lives of too many young people have been lost to drug addiction. So the pressure to uphold the conviction [*840] of one who has been found with illegal drugs often is very real in the mind of any judge. The pressure to uphold the constitutional principle prohibiting illegal searches should be no less significant in the mind of the judge, but -- in reality -- this consideration may seem less urgent to the judge (especially when the defendant has been caught with goods-in-hand). Judges are affected by normal human emotions, so a situation like this poses a dilemma of a sort for any decisionmaker. Nonetheless, in my view, the way in which judges face challenges such as these says a great deal about our capacity and our willingness to realize the ideal of principled adjudication.

A first step, it seems to me, is to place the current crisis in the proper temporal perspective. This requires that judges cultivate and maintain a long view, a sense of history and a feel for the future that transcends the passions and short-term interests of the moment. From this perspective, two things are clear: first, that the War on Drugs will, like societal wars before it, come to an end, and second, that when it does, we will regret deeply any constitutional sacrifices we have made on its behalf. The judicial long view is, at its best, informed by an understanding that departures from constitutional norms, however well-intentioned, often have serious and lasting effects on the development of legal doctrine and legal rights.

To amplify this point, I consider in Part III some historical instances in which claims of national emergency have led to the abridgement or even the abolition of fundamental civil liberties. My argument in this connection is that this kind of crisis-driven decisionmaking, in many ways the very antithesis of principled adjudication, has real and often unintended consequences. History shows, I think, that constitutional principles, once abandoned, are not easily reclaimed.

The example of the drug crisis also affects my thinking about the current activities and practices of the D.C. Circuit, to which Part IV of this article is devoted. The War on Drugs is an example of an "external pressure" that may lead to result-oriented decisionmaking. Likewise, for members of the D.C. Circuit, the continuing distortion of public perceptions -- which tend to view and categorize the judicial function as an essentially political enterprise -- is equally dangerous. As I mentioned earlier, these public misperceptions may cause people to believe that the judicial function is nothing more than a political enterprise; or, even worse, these misperceptions may become self-fulfilling prophecies. Thus, now, more than ever, it is vital that the judiciary reject result-oriented decisionmaking and adhere strictly to the ideal of principled decisionmaking, both to defend constitutional liberties and to defend itself against an institutional devaluation in the eyes of the public.

The final section of the Article reflects very briefly on the relationship between the judiciary and the legal profession, and on the [*841] degree to which departure from or adherence to principle in one institution finds itself reflected in the attitudes of the other. Specifically, I fear that a certain professional amorality, over which I have elsewhere expressed my concern, 6 could ultimately encourage the development of a more result-oriented, instrumental form of appellate adjudication. On the other hand, I remain hopeful that by reaffirming the ideal of principled decisionmaking, the judiciary can contribute to the reclamation by the legal profession of a more "public-spirited" approach to its work.

III. THE PERSPECTIVE FROM HISTORY: CRISIS-DRIVEN DECISIONMAKING AND ITS EFFECTS

The proposition which I consider in this part of the Article may seem, stated in the abstract, somewhat unremarkable: that law made in response to particular crisis conditions, real or perceived, is not readily cabined. Once validated by the courts, emergency curtailments of constitutional rights take on legal lives of their own. As Justice Jackson warned in his dissenting opinion in Korematsu v. United States, "[a]ll who observe the work of courts are familiar with what Judge Cardozo described as 'the tendency of a principle to expand itself to the limits of its logic.'" 7 With this expansive tendency comes a very real danger that what is intended as a narrow or minor adjustment in constitutional law will have far-reaching and lasting impact on legal doctrine and on the way we think about our system of justice.

It is not my intention here to expand upon this thesis in theoretical terms. Instead, I would like to lend a more concrete dimension to the discussion by considering the actual effects of some historically notable departures from constitutional principle. My hope is that this kind of analysis can help to reveal the hidden costs of crisis-driven decisionmaking, as well as to emphasize its more evident shortcomings.

I begin with Korematsu v. United States, perhaps the most "justly infamous episode" 8 in which the judiciary permitted claims of national emergency to supersede basic notions of constitutional law and governance. After the Japanese bombing of Pearl Harbor in 1941, the President authorized, and Congress endorsed, a system of curfew, exclusion and internment for all persons of Japanese ancestry on the West Coast, including American citizens whose loyalty was not and could [*842] not be questioned. 9 The Supreme Court upheld this mass deprivation of civil liberties in Korematsu, deferring to a "judgment of the military authorities and of Congress that there were disloyal members of that population, whose number and strength could not be precisely and quickly ascertained," making group exclusion and internment a "military imperative." 10

With one stroke, the Supreme Court abandoned what had been a traditional constitutional commitment to the idea that guilt is personal, and punishment premised on individual action. Accepting in its stead a presumption of "racial guilt," 11 the Court subordinated both personal freedoms and national ideals to a dubious claim of military exigency. 12 The costs of that decision, I submit, have been extraordinarily high.

The most significant cost, of course, was born directly by the approximately 120,000 Japanese Americans incarcerated and dispossessed for the sole reason that they were of Japanese ancestry at the wrong time in American history. Reparations, long overdue, hardly begin to redress this wrong. 13 Korematsu is, without any doubt, a tragically poignant and bitter reminder of the real suffering that may follow in the wake of judicial default. 14 [*843] Other costs of the Korematsu decision, though less grievous in human terms, demand consideration. Difficult to quantify, but nonetheless compelling, is the price paid in terms of judical stature. From the day it was announced over the dissents of three Justices, at least two of which were unusually vehement, 15 Korematsu was roundly condemned by legal scholars and observers as a tragic miscarriage of justice. 16 Though lower federal courts have since vacated the convictions of individual Japanese Americans who violated curfew and internment orders during World War II, 17 the Supreme Court has yet to overrule or repudiate Korematsu. The case stays with us, "an evil blotch upon our national legal conscience and our law," 18 and each subsequent generation's perceptions of the judicial system, its competence and its integrity, are undoubtedly shaped accordingly.

Moreover, it should be noted that because Korematsu remains on the books as precedent, the case has quite tangible effects on the decisionmaking of lower courts. Bound themselves by the constraints of principle, the courts generally have rejected the idea that Korematsu, decided during war, may be minimized as precedent during peace. 19 [*844] Therefore, in cases dealing with issues as varied as pretrial preventive detention, 20 questioning of nonimmigrant aliens during times of international tension, 21 mass arrests of anti-war protestors, 22 conscription under the Selective Service Act 23 and warrantless searches during declared emergency, 24 the courts are required to address Korematsu, distinguishing it where possible and following it when necessary. On doctrine as well as on judicial status, Korematsu continues to exert its adverse influence.

Though it is perhaps the most graphic example of crisis-driven decisionmaking and its results, Korematsu does not stand alone. Like World War II, the Cold War claimed serious constitutional casualties on the domestic front. In a climate made almost hysterical by fear of communist infiltration, the Government engaged in battle against ideas, waging war against speech and associational activities seen as dangerously disloyal. That the judiciary did not act decisively to protect First Amendment freedoms during this period also represents a failure of significant proportions. Its reverberations echoed for years, in the lives of those directly affected and in the distorted and disjointed development of First Amendment doctrine.

Two lines of Supreme Court decisions from the Cold War era provide examples of what I have in mind: freedom-of-speech cases involving convictions for subversive advocacy under the Smith Act, and freedom-of-association cases involving forced disclosure of Communist Party affiliations by the House Un-American Activities Committee, or "HUAC." My argument here is that the "communism exception" to the First Amendment, crafted in response to a temporal crisis of confidence, ultimately proved difficult to contain. Both in duration and in scope, the First Amendment exceptions carved during the Cold War displayed the expansive tendencies of all departures from constitutional principle.

[*845] The Court's Cold War experience with seditious speech, for instance, interrupted the development of free speech doctrine so thoroughly that recovery took close to twenty years. Until the Cold War, the trend in First Amendment law was steadily progressive. Restrictive World War I speech cases, upholding convictions for subversive advocacy under the Espionage Act of 1917, 25 were by the 1940s a thing of the past. In their stead, the Court gradually had adopted the "clear and present danger" test and applied it ever more protectively to shield subversive advocacy from prosecution. 26

This increasingly expansive reading of First Amendment free speech rights came to an abrupt end in 1951 with Dennis v. United States. 27 In a decision viewed by some as epitomizing the Court's abdication during the McCarthy period, 28 the Supreme Court affirmed the convictions of national Communist Party leaders under the Smith Act for conspiring to "teach" and "advocate" the overthrow of the government. In essence, the simple teaching of Marxist-Leninist doctrine, absent any evidence of incitement to violence, became a crime. To substantiate this outcome, the Court was required to take a kind of judicial notice of the perceived ultimate evil and hazard of the Communist Party itself. 29 And to accommodate this new line of analysis, the Court was required to modify the clear-and-present-danger standard, to wit: where the threatened danger is sufficiently grave, an invasion of free speech may be justified no matter how small the probability that the danger will actually come to pass. 30 In other words, a danger as "clear" as that posed by the Communist Party need not be "present," nor imminent nor even especially plausible, to warrant suppression.

[*846] I do not wish here to belabor the obvious point that Dennis and its departure from precedent and principle are explicable only by reference to the anti-communist political tenor of the moment. 31 Instead, I want to emphasize the extent to which Dennis set back the development of First Amendment doctrine and freedoms over time. It is by now well understood that Dennis was substantially undermined six years after its issuance by Yates v. United States, 32 in which the Court distinguished protected advocacy of doctrine from unprotected advocacy of action and reversed the Smith Act convictions of a number of Communist Party members. Yates, however, reached its result by "reinterpreting" rather than by overruling Dennis, 33 and so missed the chance to contain entirely the damage done to the First Amendment.

Yates did, it is true, effectively end Smith Act prosecutions of Communist Party members for subversive advocacy. But it did not restore First Amendment doctrine to a fully speech-protective formulation. While identifying advocacy of abstract belief as a protected sphere of speech, the Yates Court conceded as unprotected the advocacy of revolutionary action, including action to be taken at some indefinite future date. 34 Thus, like Dennis, Yates allowed for restrictions on speech regardless of the likelihood or immediacy of the threatened harm. By itself, Yates did little to return the "present" component to the clear-and-present-danger test.

Indeed, it was not until 1969, in Brandenburg v. Ohio, 35 that the Supreme Court appeared to revitalize the clear-and-present-danger test. Reversing the conviction of a Ku Klux Klan leader under Ohio's criminal syndicalism statute, the Court held that speech could not be restricted under the clear-and-present-danger standard unless it was both directed at inciting imminent lawless action and likely to produce such action. 36 Eighteen years after Dennis, First Amendment jurisprudence [*847] finally returned to its pre-Cold War progressive course. The communism exception to free speech law had proved durable, however; it outlasted the Cold War that spawned it and initiated a detour of nearly two decades in the development of First Amendment doctrine.

Like the subversive advocacy cases, the legislative inquiry and compelled disclosure cases arising during the Cold War period represent something less than the judiciary's finest hour. Faced with the specter of a congressional committee calling individuals before it for the purpose of publicly exposing their alleged ties to a disfavored political group, a practice inimical to any system of free association, the Supreme Court again declined to take a strong stand for principle. Instead, it upheld HUAC's notorious activities against a First Amendment challenge in Barenblatt v. United States, 37 finding that Congress' interest in demanding disclosure of Communist Party affiliations outweighed any interest of an unwilling witness in withholding that information under the relevant First Amendment "balance."

The Court was not, to be sure, entirely comfortable with the position it announced in Barenblatt, and in other cases it sought to curb HUAC's reach by imposing various procedural limits on the Committee's investigatory powers. 38 These procedural hurdles, however, proved easy to overcome and offered little meaningful protection to HUAC's victims. Ultimately, the Court's efforts to extend some minimal but nonsubstantive aid to HUAC targets served only to produce yet another troubling legacy of Cold War decisionmaking: a confused and contradictory body of law on the limits of legislative inquiry. 39

The judiciary's abdication of its role as defender of individual rights and liberties also exacted an enormous human toll during this period. Unimpeded by constitutional constraints, HUAC applied itself to the task of ferreting out "subversives" with unmitigated zeal. Those unfortunate enough to catch the attention of the Committee often found themselves publicly exposed and humiliated, "blacklisted" by their professions and forced to "name names" of fellow sympathizers. It is by now a matter of public record that lives were destroyed. 40

[*848] The impact of the HUAC decisions on First Amendment doctrine is somewhat less clear than that of the Smith Act cases, in part because the Court's various pronouncements in the area combined to form such an obscure body of law. The legislative inquiry cases do, however, display the same expansive tendencies as their subversive advocacy counterparts. Again, the

"communism exception" to the First Amendment threatens to extend beyond its intended bounds; here, however, the threatened extension is not so much over time as it is across forms of political association.

Specifically, during roughly the same period that the First Amendment rights of suspected "subversives" were being subjugated to HUAC's purported needs, the Court faced a number of cases involving legislative inquiries into the membership of civil rights organizations, particularly the NAACP. Armed only with the minimally protective balancing test of Barenblatt, the Court worked mightily to defend the NAACP against legislative harassment. That it was, for the most part, successful is a tribute both to the clumsiness of state efforts to justify compelled disclosure 41 and to the willingness of the Court to create fine legal distinctions where none seemed readily apparent. 42 Thus, at some cost to the perceived integrity of its decisionmaking process, the Court has been able, thus far, to check the reach of its Barenblatt rule; whether it can continue to do so indefinitely remains, of course, to be seen. 43

As for the War on Drugs, it is yet too soon for a determinative appraisal of the judicial response. But even this brief history of crisis-driven decisionmaking provides, I think, a useful context for a discussion of contemporary appellate adjudication in the face of yet another national emergency. One point should emerge quite clearly from the preceding review: principled decisionmaking is not some luxury we [*849] can forgo in times of crisis without feeling the loss. On the contrary, our prior departures from constitutional principle, however persuasively justified or well-intentioned, seem always to exact real and lasting costs. When the war comes to an end, we inevitably regret the constitutional sacrifices we have made during the battle.

IV. THE PERSPECTIVE FROM THE BENCH: APPELLATE DECISIONMAKING ON THE D.C. CIRCUIT

With this historical perspective in mind, I turn now to a discussion of contemporary appellate decisiomaking on the D.C. Circuit. My discussion here is not intended to criticize or to rebuke; on the contrary, I find that much of the Circuit's work reflects a process that is faithful to the ideal of principled decisionmaking. Rather, may purpose here is to reflect on what I see as potential danger zones in the practice of appellate judging. By frankly acknowledging and examining these vulnerabilities, I hope to give support to the ongoing efforts of my colleagues and others to minimize the role of politics in appellate decisionmaking.

I begin my analysis with a look at popular perceptions of decisionmaking on the D.C. Circuit. Though I believe that current perceptions of ideological and result-oriented judging are often without basis in fact, they demand our attention, if only because such misperceptions can have very real negative consequences for the judicial process. In the second part of my discussion, I consider some of what I see as the realities of appellate decisionmaking. Though I am troubled -- more so today than I was eleven years ago -- by the potential for politicization of our decisionmaking, I remain confident that if we face these issues squarely, we can and will reaffirm the judicial commitment to the ideal of principled adjudication.

A. Perceptions of Appellate Decisionmaking on the D.C. Circuit

I said at the outset of this article that I am less sanguine in my views, because it is no longer clear to me that partisan politics and ideological maneuvering have no meaningful influence on judicial decisionmaking. In offering this observation, part of what I mean to say is that, as a member of the federal bench, I have felt damned by an increasingly common image of the judiciary, and particularly of the D.C. Circuit, as a fundamentally political body.

This vision of a politicized judiciary, in which cases are decided on ideological grounds and judges defined by their partisan affiliations, seems to grow more popular each year. By now, it is almost taken for granted by much of the media, and doubtlessly accepted as truth by [*850] significant portions of the bar and the public as well. This is a depressing reality, for, in my view, it is the worst indictment for judges to be labeled political partisans and to be seen as result-oriented in their decisionmaking. These are frightening accusations, for they suggest that there can be no "justice" in our judicial system. I continue to resist the indictment; but I remain astonished and frustrated by the persistence and force of the attack, which is, I think, born of a public perception that measures judges against a standard best suited for "political hacks."

In recent years, for instance, the media has focused on what it describes as the "increasing polarization" of the D.C. Circuit, attributing its attention to claims, like one seen in the Wall Street Journal, that "ideological differences in the appeals court for the District of Columbia could have an impact throughout the country." 44 This "impact" is never clearly defined, apart from the implicit suggestion that judicial decisionmaking and partisan politics go hand-in-hand. Thus, the public is led to believe that judges cast their votes on judicial decisions as if in Parliament, i.e., strictly along party lines.

Because the consuming public seems to hunger for mostly political portrayals of the court's work, and the press seems determined to satiate this hunger, individual decisions often are reported as partisan wins or losses, with an emphasis on the assumed party affiliation of participating judges. For example, a decision not to reconsider a panel ruling allowing Eastern Airlines to furlough thousands of employees is described as a win for "the Reagan appointees" and a defeat for "the liberals"; the same story, in an effort at a novel brand of nonpartisanship, is quick to point out that "the conservatives were the losers last October," when "[f]our Reagan appointees lost a bid to rehear a decision" involving attorneys' fees. 45 Such news reports are by no means unique; many of our decisions, with significant and complex effects on people's lives and on legal doctrine, and with no discernible ideological issue, are nonetheless reduced by the press and other commentators to simple political head-counts. 46

arrival of new judges Karen LeCraft Henderson and Raymond Randolph was greeted with discussion of the effect the two Bush appointees would have on the partisan makeup of the court. 50

Often, in discussing the courts of appeals and appointments to them, commentators fail to recognize that lower appellate judges cannot be equated with Justices of the Supreme Court. The ideological leanings of prospective appointees to the Supreme Court are seen by some as significant, in part because the Court considers so many "very hard" cases in which a Justice's ideology may be influential in decisionmaking. 51 The same is not true at the courts of appeals, however, because very few of our cases are "very hard" and a great many are "easy"; thus, ideology rarely should have any bearing on the work of a court of appeals judge. 52

[*852] This reality seems totally lost on many commentators. So entrenched is the political vision of the circuit court that commentators can find partisan overtones in even quite neutral court activities. When, for instance, Judge Wald stepped down as Chief Judge in the fall of 1990 and Judge Mikva, as the next most senior judge, took her place, press reports across the country gave wide circulation to rumors that the transition was made in order to prevent Judge Silberman, a Reagan appointee, from assuming the post of Chief Judge. 53 The press assertion that there was a "plot by Democratic judges to keep Republican Judge Laurence Silberman from ever assuming the reins" 54 was absolutely absurd, based on nothing but crass and ill-founded speculation. But the foolishness of the rumor did not deter its spread, thus giving further credence to public perception of partisan divisions on the D.C. Circuit.

Perhaps most telling is the fact that commentators are often moved to comment on an absence of ideological disharmony in contexts where the absence should be totally unremakable. Thus, for instance, it has become newsworthy that two judges appointed by the same President disagree over the constitutionality of a drug testing program; 55 of note that "[e]ven liberal judges on the ideologically divided [D.C. Circuit]" speak of Soliiitor General Starr with warmth; 56 and remarkable that concerns about the quality of appellate advocacy are shared by circuit judges "from both ends of the political spectrum." 57 It is both frivolous and demeaning for a court to be assessed in these terms on such matters.

What passing comments like these share with the more substantive reports previously noted is a core assumption that "beneath the surface" of the D.C. Circuit lurk "ideological frictions," 58 manifesting themselves in bouts of political decisionmaking. Both the existence and the consequences on decisionmaking of these alleged "ideological frictions" are accepted as articles of faith. Judges are perceived as creatures of their ideological preferences; their decisionmaking, as simply an expression of their partisan preferences.

I recognize that judges may lend fuel to misguided public perceptions when the press finds some credence to rumors of in-house bickering. 59 [*853] I also believe that persistent fractures in collegiality can lead to subtle problems in the disposition of some "hard" and "very hard" cases, for judges inadvertently may fall prey to partisan decisionmaking out of anger or vindictiveness. But an occasional failure in collegiality should not, I submit, be equated with unprincipled decisionmaking. The nature of the judicial enterprise is such that judges will at times disagree in very sharp terms. 60 Whether or not this is viewed as questionable in terms of collegiality, it should not be seen as necessarily symptomatic of result-oriented decisionmaking. It is important for the public to understand that sharp disagreements among judicial "colleagues" do not invariably lead to partisan decisionmaking.

The point of the foregoing discussion is to suggest that our judicial system will be unable to tolerate public misperceptions beyond a certain point of distortion. Our tolerance level has not yet been surpassed, but I think that we are on a fast track heading in the wrong direction. And if we continue on this course, we will destroy our grand vision of a judicial function premised on principled decisionmaking.

In expressing this concern, I am aided by a New York Times article published in February of this year, discussing the image of the D.C. Circuit held by lawyers practicing regularly before it. 61 According to these attorneys, the identity of the three judges assigned to hear a given case is such a strong indication of the ultimate result that some litigants, faced with a panel that "isn't favorable to their side, . . . might be more inclined to settle." 62 In other words, many attorneys and litigants believe that appellate decisionmaking is so much a function of the personal politics and preferences of judges that outcomes are virtually predetermined by panel selection, without regard to the legal merits of a case. Indeed, the article, and most of the attorneys cited therein, fail even to distinguish between "easy," "hard" and "very hard" cases 63 -- thus, at bottom, the extraordinary premise of the article is that in all cases, even those involving simple and straightforward applications of legal doctrine, attorneys and their clients believe that judges will render decisions guided chiefly by their political or ideological leanings.

[*854] My first response to this vision of appellate decisionmaking is that it is dead wrong as a descriptive matter. There is simply no significant statistical support for its underlying premise -- i.e., that judicial results invariably flow from judges' politics, rather than from legal principles. 64 I will address this point more thoroughly in the following section, but it bears mention here, as well. In the rare instance when the court is confronted with a "very hard" case -- i.e., one in which there is no discernible "right answer" -- it may be true that a judge's views are influenced by his or her political or ideological beliefs. 65 It is absolutely false, however, that judges' politics routinely determine the outcomes of cases.

That it is without basis in fact, however, does not mean that this misperception of appellate decisionmaking is without consequences for the judicial process. Not all of those consequences, to be sure, are negative. To some extent, the false reality to which I refer may encourage litigants and lawyers with weak cases on the merits to withdraw before argument. Indeed, in the D.C. Circuit, the names of the judges who are assigned to hear an appeal are announced well in advance to encourage such settlements. By blaming their withdrawal on the composition of judicial panels, rather than on the merits of their cases, lawyers are able to save face while simultaneously freeing the court system of unnecessary burdens. If this provides a palatable excuse and thus increases settlements, then the false image of a politicized judiciary may have some salutary effect.

By and large, however, I would expect over the long term to see far more damaging consequences follow from this misperception. After all, what is at stake is no less than the popular understanding of the way our legal system works. And the understanding that is beginning to emerge is a truly terrible one: individual judges and their politics govern outcomes, and justice and principle are relevant only secondarily, if at all. The toll exacted by this misperception is necessarily immense, in terms of the perceived integrity of the judicial system and the willingness of the public to accept its decisions as law. It is not at all clear to me that our country's confidence in its judiciary can survive infection by this poisonous idea.

The dangers posed by these misperceptions cannot be underestimated. This realization has hit home for me as I have noticed in recent years that more and more judges' law clerks commence work on the court with "fire in their eyes," as if readying for an ideological crusade. [*855] For example, not too long ago, after oral argument in the court of appeals, one of my colleague's law clerks told my law clerk that he disagreed with the premise underlying some of the questions that I had put to counsel during the oral argument. My law clerk explained to my colleague's clerk that my line of inquiry had been prompted by my concerns over a "split in the circuits" regarding the controlling legal principle. The complaining law clerk was unimpressed, however, and insisted that the three-judge panel could only decide the case as the clerk saw it. The clerk then added something to the effect of: "and if the panel dares to go any other way in its decision, we will rehear this case en banc and reverse the panel so fast that it will make your head spin!" The law clerk's use of "we" was intended to refer to the so-called "conservative" judges on my court; and his attempt at a threat obviously was founded on an assumption that there are camps of "conservatives" and "liberals" at war on the court. When I reported the incident to the judge for whom this law clerk worked, my colleague was both surprised and dismayed, and he assured me that he would deal with the matter promptly.

Some might be inclined to minimize the law clerk's remarks as attributable to an obnoxious personality, extraordinary arrogance or a rare case of immaturity and chutzpah. Unfortunately, the problem cannot be dismissed so easily, for it is not unusual these days to find instances of excess zeal among law clerks -- conservatives and liberals alike -- in support of preferred ideological positions. Thus, it would seem that the public perception of result-oriented decisionmaking has had an impact even in quarters where one might expect good sense to reject, or at least filter, the misperception.

Moreover, I think it would be a mistake to assume that judges themselves are immune from the effects of the widespread misperceptions regarding politics and the judicial function. Though it is not readily subject to empirical proof, we should at least consider the idea that judges, told often enough that their decisionmaking is crucially informed by their politics, will begin to believe what they hear and to respond accordingly. The more the D.C. Circuit is portrayed as divided into warring ideological camps, the more D.C. Circuit judges may see themselves as engaged in an ideological struggle and view every case in these terms. The chief advantage of granting life tenure to judges is that it leaves the judiciary one critical step removed from the political world. By inserting partisan politics into the judicial sphere, the misperception of a politicized judiciary may in the end become a self-fulfilling prophecy that does irreparable harm to our system of justice.

B. The Realities of Appellate Decisionmaking on the D.C. Circuit

perception. There is no doubt that [*856] there are ideological differences among the judges and that these differences may have an impact in the disposition of certain "very hard" (and even "hard") cases. It is also true that the decisionmaking process probably has been more vulnerable to politicization in recent years, in part because of changing public perceptions (including the "fallout" from the Senate's rejection of Judge Bork's nomination to the Supreme Court 66). For the most part, however, the judges on the court are, and feel themselves to be, meaningfully constrained in their decisionmaking, and they adhere to the conviction that "principled decisionmaking" is essential to the credibility and success of the judicial function. Perhaps the most fundamental reality of D.C. Circuit decisionmaking is that, contrary to popular belief, circuit judges rarely disagree with one another over the disposition of particular cases. The vast majority of case dispositions involve unanimous decisions. In the court's 1983-84 year, for instance, dissents were filed in only 5.8% of the total cases decided; of those cases decided by full opinion, only 13% generated a dissent. 67 A statistical analysis of 1989-90 reveals that dissents were filed in only 2.6% of the total cases decided; of those cases decided by full opinion, only roughly 10% included a dissent. 68 Thus, the rate of dissents in 1989-90 actually dropped below the rate for 1983-84. Most notably, the dissent rate on what I call "mixed panels" -- panels with judges appointed by Presidents of different political affiliations -- did not exceed the general dissent rate in either year. 69 Clearly, the image of an ideologically divided circuit court on which judges heed some political call to action is far from the truth.

Not all cases, of course, are the same; some are more likely than others to generate unanimity among deciding judges, and some are more likely to generate dissent. The likelihood of dissent does not depend, however, on the composition or politics of the panel, but on the underlying merits of the case. In other words, dissent is not a symptom of politicized decisionmaking, but generally the result of an exceptionally difficult case that admits of no clear answer.

In my view, most cases are "easy," in that the pertinent legal rules are readily identified and applied to the facts at hand, revealing a single "right answer." I continue to find that roughly one-half of the cases I hear each year are "easy" and virtually all of these are disposed of [*857] without dissent. Very few such cases give rise to any discernable political concerns.

In a second category of cases, which I call "hard," each party is able to advance at least one plausible legal argument in its favor. Resolution of such disputes frequently requires judges to consider which among competing legal principles and precedents are most applicable, analyze the purposes of various statutory and constitutional provisions, evaluate complex agency records and perform other similarly sophisticated decisionmaking tasks. At the conclusion of such research and review, however, the arguments of one party to a "hard" case seem to me demonstrably stronger than those of the other, and the case is decided accordingly. I have estimated that approximately 35 to 45% of the cases before the court are "hard" in this sense. In my experience, judges hearing these cases generally feel themselves bound by their view of the law, and identify the sounder arguments without recourse to their own political opinions. Not surprisingly, therefore, there is substantial agreement among judges as to the proper disposition of "hard" cases.

That leaves from 5 to 15% of our cases in the "very hard" category, making it by far the smallest of the three. In this narrow set of cases, careful research and reflection fail to yield conclusive answers. The relevant legal materials, thoroughly studied, show only that the competing arguments advanced by the parties are equally strong, and the judges who must decide are left in a state of equipoise. Disposition of this small number of cases, then, requires judges to exercise a measure of discretion, drawing to some degree on their own social and moral beliefs. That judges may find themselves in disagreement as to the outcome of these "very hard" cases is thus to be expected, and represents something quite different from stark political decisionmaking.

The important point, I think, is that so-called "very hard" cases are viewed as such not because they raise situations in which judges are inclined to engage in result-oriented decisionmaking, but, rather, because these cases admit of no clear answer. And when there is no discernible "right" answer to a case, it is more likely (although not inevitable) that decisionmaking may be influenced by political or ideological considerations.

This general formulation of the appellate decisionmaking process is the same one I advanced shortly after becoming a judge in 1983, and then again in 1985. 70 I continue to believe that my rough breakdown accurately reflects the way decisions are made on the D.C. Circuit, both in its emphasis on judicial adherence to legal norms and in its core [*858] assumption that principled decisionmaking is possible and in fact realized in every category of appellate case. At the same time, however, perhaps as a natural outgrowth of my continued experience, I have grown more concerned about the vulnerability of this decisionmaking process to politicization. Increasingly familiar with the practice of appellate adjudication, I become increasingly sensitive to the scope and the gravity of the threat posed by political decisionmaking.

"Easy" cases are, I think, more or less immune from this threat. Because "easy" cases so readily admit of single correct answers, judges deciding these cases feel themselves to be and are tightly bound by legal principles; little or no room remains for the insertion of ideological concerns. "Hard" cases, on the other hand, provide considerably more space for ideological maneuvering. In the choice of applicable principles and precedents, in the search for congressional intent, in the emphasis or deemphasis of individual facts in extensive agency records -- in all of these exercises, there is the potential for political decisionmaking and partisan mischief. It is still true, I believe, that this potential remains largely untapped, and that judges on our court generally do their best to decide these cases in accord with their understanding of the law. Nonetheless, the threat of politicization exists, and we must be on guard against it.

For example, most judges would agree that heightened collegiality eases the burden of decisionmaking. When judges respect one another and are amicalbe in their dealings, the decisionmaking process runs smoothly: the judges' post-hearing conference focuses on the applicable legal precedent and record facts, with each judge openly airing concerns about difficulties seen with the case; there are post-conference memoranda and discussions between chambers which are thoughtful and helpful in narrowing the issues before the panel and in pursuing the correct answer to the case; if and when the judge who is assigned to write the case runs into unexpected difficulties, these matters are discussed with judicial colleagues with an aim to reaching a mutually satisfactory accord; and, once a draft opinion is circulated, comments from judicial colleagues are given to improve the opinion, e.g., to correct record citations, to question applications of circuit precedent and to offer suggestions for language changes where the draft opinion is unclear. There is no enmity in this process; there are no hidden political agendas at stake; there are no ideological leanings affecting the dialogue between the judges. Fortunately, this process predominates in connection with most dispositions of the court, even with so-called "mixed panels" of the court. 71

[*859] There can be snags, however, when there are breakdowns in collegiality. When judges are otherwise angry with one another, it is easy to fall back to one's original "political" base and forget that principled decisionmaking is the essence of the judicial function. If law clerks who are on an ideological crusade are given too much room to maneuver, either in opinion-drafting or in inter-chambers relations, ugly rumors and disagreements will adversely affect the court's decisionmaking process, even though the rumors and disagreements usually develop over matters that are (or should be) utterly irrelevant to case dispositions.

There is also the problem of judges' friends with political axes to grind. Some of these "friends" are prone to see the court as a politically divided institution. If the views of these friends are given credence, judges may begin to believe what they hear and respond accordingly. Judges on my court (from every political persuasion) have faced pressure -- from friends and family alike -- to avoid "straying" in their presumed ideological thinking. What is most amazing, however, is that even in the face of these pressures, most judges in most situations remain faithful to principled decisionmaking.

A related but separate threat to principled decisionmaking in "hard" cases is posed if judges begin to treat such cases as "very hard," so as to allow for the exercise of individual discretion where none is properly employed. It is crucial to my formulation of the decisionmaking process that cases do not become "very hard" simply by virtue of being ideologically charged. Even cases with obvious and significant political content are not "very hard" unless the applicable legal rules and materials provide no basis for choice between competing arguments. So long as one argument is legally stronger than another, the case must be disposed of accordingly, without recourse to discretion informed by political views.

An example of a case which was "hard," but not "very hard," is Brogsdale v. Barry, 72 a civil rights action in which prisoners injured in a riot and ensuing fire at the District of Columbia jail sought damages from the Mayor and other municipal officials. The District Court granted summary judgment to the plaintiffs, holding that the officials had violated the prisoners' rights through a policy of permitting overcrowded and unsafe conditions at the jail, and rejecting the officials' claim of qualified immunity.

Brogsdale was potentially a politically charged case, involving as it did the rights of prisoner-plaintiffs. It was also a "hard" case, as I have used that term, because the District Court employed a somewhat expansive standard in concluding that the prisoners' civil rights had been violated. Yet, the panel, despite being "mixed," 73 managed to [*860] reach a principled decision, vacating the judgment on the ground that the defendants were protected by qualified immunity because the constitutional norms with respect to prison overcrowding were not sufficiently clear at the time of the incident to permit the imposition of liability. Thus, a "hard" case was decided on the basis of the stronger legal argument, without resort to the individual politics or preferences of the panel members.

There are borderline situations, however, where judges may honestly disagree over whether a case is "hard" or "very hard." By way of illustration, I would point to Christian Knights of the Ku Klux Klan Invisible Empire v. District of Columbia, 74 a case heard in 1990 involving the Klan's proposed march from the Washington Monument to Capitol Hill. Citing a risk of violence and a lack of manpower to police the proposed route, the District issued a permit allowing the Klan to march a shorter distance. The District Court, without questioning the sincerity or accuracy of the District's determination that it could not ensure the safety of the marchers over the entire route, nonetheless ordered the District to allow the march over the full distance.

The Klan case was, by anybody's standards, very hard in the common sense in which the words are used. On one side were fundamental First Amendment values of free expression; on the other, a group whose general philosophy many find morally repugnant. A more ideologically loaded and personally taxing case is difficult to imagine.

Nonetheless, the Klan case was not, in my view, a "very hard" case in the sense I have in mind. Though each party could advance a viable legal argument in its favor, making the case "hard," the resolution of the dispute was, I thought, governed by established legal principles as applied to the record before the court. The District Court order was, in my view, insupportable in the absence of certain factual findings, among them a finding as to whether the threat of violence was real and uncontrollable, or only a subterfuge for impermissible discrimination. However I might have chosen to exercise my discretion had I been faced with a "very hard" case, I felt constrained in this instance by controlling law, and voted to return the matter to the District Court for further factual development.

What is interesting about the Klan case is that there was no unanimous opinion for the court. My colleague Judge Wald believed that the Klan march was fully protected by the First Amendment, and she would have affirmed the judgment of the District Court without reconsideration on remand; my colleague Judge Randolph, on the other hand, believed that the city had not infringed any constitutional rights in limiting the Klan's proposed march. Each of us, I think, was convinced [*861] that the case was "hard" but not "very hard"; and each of us issued a judgment premised solely on legal principles, not on a preferred result. We could not agree, however, on which of several competing legal principles controlled, so a case that each of us viewed as "hard" was rendered "very hard" by virtue of an honest disagreement over applicable legal precedent. The main point, I think, is that even though Klan was rendered "very hard," it was not a situation in which the judges reached out to make a case "very hard" in order to allow for unfettered discretion in judicial decisionmaking.

Of course, even if we resist the temptation to view "hard" cases as "very hard" in order to carve out space for discretionary decisionmaking, we are left with some small percentage of cases that are genuinely "very hard." And how we handle these cases, it seems to me, says a great deal about the strength of our commitment to principled decisionmaking. For "very hard" cases, though they do require us to exercise some degree of individual discretion, need not become the occasion for strictly partisan adjudication. Instead, such cases, precisely because they offer no clear answers, should provide an opportunity for us to reason and struggle toward principled bases for decision. That such decisionmaking will inevitably be informed by our private social and moral beliefs need not mean that it will be marred by our private partisan agendas.

An illustration of the kind of "very hard" decisionmaking I have in mind is provided by our 1984 en banc decision in Ollman v. Evans, 75 a defamation case pitting the individual interest in reputation against the press' First Amendment interest in free speech. By a vote of six to five, the circuit affirmed a District Court decision dismissing a suit by a Marxist political science professor against two syndicated columnists, based on an article which arguably suggested that the professor was a "political activist" who used the classroom to indoctrinate students. The opinion of the court ultimately concluded that the allegedly defamatory statements were not actionable because they would be understood, in context, as expressions of opinion. 76

What has always struck me as notable about Ollman is that it so clearly exhibits a decisionmaking process in which eleven judges, faced with a "very hard" case yielding no evident answers, struggle mightily to find some reasoned and principled basis for decision without regard to their presumed political affiliations. 77 Rather than producing a neat partisan split on the court, the decision generated opinions by seven [*862] different judges; so-called political alliances were so blurred that it was difficult to discern which positions should be considered "liberal" and which "conservative." Was, for instance, the concurring opinion of Judge Bork, considering the effects of defamation actions on press self-censorship and joined by Judges Ruth B. Ginsburg, Wilkey and MacKinnon, the "conservative" argument? 78 Or was the conservative stance that of Judge Wald, joined by Judge Scalia and myself, arguing in dissent that the contested language was a statement of fact and hence actionable under defamation law? 79 My intention here is not to answer that question, but simply to note that its very existence bespeaks the kind of principled decisionmaking we should strive for in "very hard" cases.

It may be instructive to compare with Ollman a facially similar en banc case decided in 1990, New York Times Co. v. NASA. 80 Again, the rights of the individual -- here, privacy rights -- were arrayed against the rights of the press. The galvanizing dispute in this case involved NASA's claim that it was entitled to withhold, under an exemption to the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA"), a tape of voice communications made aboard the ill-fated Challenger space shuttle. Again in a six-to-five decision, the court concluded that the tape was covered by the relevant FOIA exemption as "information applying to a particular individual," and hence nondisclosable if release would intrude on privacy concerns.

In the New York Times case, however, the court found itself divided along more evidently political lines. The opinion for the court was ultimately joined by every circuit judge appointed by a Republican president; the dissenting opinion I filed was joined by every circuit judge appointed by a Democrat. I do not mean to suggest that the existence of what appears to be a clean partisan split on the court is proof of political decisionmaking; I, myself, sometimes wonder how the New York Times configuration came to be. But to the extent that such splits in "very hard" cases do suggest the exercise of discretion on an ideological basis, we have cause for concern. I worry that the search for principled bases for decision in "very hard" cases, difficult as it is, would be a likely and costly first casualty of politicized decisionmaking.

The same axiom, of course, applies in the reverse, so that the existence of what appears to be cross-partisan agreement in controversial cases suggests a reassuring absence of political decisionmaking. For the Legal Times, for instance, it is "strikingly odd" that judges of different political affiliations should agree, and judges of similar political [*863] leanings disagree, on the constitutionality of various drug testing programs. 81 It thus becomes newsworthy that Judge Mikva, appointed by President Carter, should agree with Judge Silberman, appointed by President Reagan, that a particular testing program is justified under the Fourth Amendment. 82 For me, however, such agreement is no more startling than that exhibited in another drug testing case decided the same day, in which Judges Mikva, Silberman and I unanimously struck down another testing program as unconstitutional. 83 Indeed, I note this kind of apolitical alliance with pride as indicative of the way our circuit can, and does, decide cases: by searching for principles that quite naturally cut across so-called liberal-conservative lines.

It is fitting, perhaps, that I find myself returning to the subject of the drug crisis, so intimately connected to my reflections on appellate decisionmaking and principled adjudication. My earlier writings on appellate judging were possibly a little naive, in that they underestimated the vulnerability of our decisionmaking process to political infection, and the dangers that such infection could pose. Now, however, I have grown more sensitive to the ways in which our decisionmaking might be compromised. With the War on Drugs a real threat to basic civil liberties and the judiciary positioned as a last line of defense, it seems to me more critical than ever that we guard against any such compromise and work to reaffirm our commitment to principled decisionmaking.

V. POSTSCRIPT: PRINCIPLED DECISIONMAKING AND THE LEGAL PROFESSION

As a postscript to the foregoing reflections, it seems appropriate to offer a brief word on the relationship between the judiciary and the legal profession and academy. In my view, the issue of principled decisionmaking is best understood in the context in which it arises, as part of a larger legal order in which judges, lawyers and academics together shape the perceptions and realities of the system they inhabit.

The judiciary does not, of course, stand by itself, in isolation from the rest of the legal world. Judges obviously deal with lawyers on a [*864] regular basis and, in part because those lawyers (like judges' law clerks) are lawschool-trained, indirectly with the legal academy as well. The consequences of this interaction are, I think, quite significant for all parties involved. Though difficult to prove empirically, it seems highly likely as an intuitive matter that the attitudes of one group will have some effect on the others, and, specifically, that the emphasis placed on principle by one group will find itself reflected in the work of the others.

Under this hypothesis, a court's departures from principle may well have repercussions that extend beyond the judiciary to the legal system as a whole. It is only natural that legal professionals and academics should take their cues from judges, whom they are taught to accept as the ultimate arbiters of the law. The judiciary, therefore, bears a heavy institutional responsibility to nurture a conception of law and justice as principled ventures, distinct from politics and devoted to some larger conception of the public good. If the judiciary abdicates this responsibility, we should expect to see that abdication mirrored in the work and attitudes of lawyers, professors and even law students as they contemplate and interact with the legal system.

I have elsewhere noted my profound distress at the disjunction that seems to exist between the current state of the legal profession and its traditional and highest ideals. 84 Specifically, I worry that too many attorneys have abandoned their positive duty to practice law with a "public spiritedness" that encompasses a meaningful commitment to the public good. For this traditional standard of "public spiritedness," I fear we have substituted a certain professional amorality that accepts and even demands a suspension of individual moral judgment. Many lawyers see themselves as engaged in the pursuit of results, rather than justice; most tellingly, many truly believe that they are acquitting themselves in accord with professional norms.

The causes of this departure from the standard of "public spiritedness" are, of course, many and complex. Among them must be included both the corporatization of the legal profession and a growing indifference within the legal academy to the way in which law is actually practiced and to the problems encountered by practicing lawyers. It is not, then, my contention that departures from principle by the judiciary are by themselves to blame for the professional amorality I have described. But it is my view that any such judicial departures from principle, real and perceived, may well contribute to the decline of "public spiritedness" within the profession. We cannot and should not expect practicing attorneys to achieve professional ideals that the judiciary appears to have abandoned.

[*865] The relationship I posit should, naturally, work both ways. The light in which the judicial system is perceived may, as I have mentioned above, exert a subtle influence on the decisionmaking process. If lawyers, in pursuit of billable hours, adopt an attitude that "winning is the only thing that matters," and winning is "whatever your client thinks it is in a particular case," 85 the courts will become nothing more than fora in which amoral "hired guns" appear to do battle. Lawyers will come to believe that a winning result, no matter how unprincipled, is what matters most. This win-at-all-costs mentality is seen in arguments before the court of appeals more often than I care to admit. In one recent case presented to the court, appellant's counsel concluded his argument with an impassioned claim that it would be a "miscarriage of justice" if his client's appeal was denied. In light of the patently frivolous nature of the case, this argument was quite astonishing to all who heard it. Following oral argument, during the judges' conference, one of my colleagues commented that the only "miscarriage of justice" was the attorney's decision to file suit in the first place. Of course, if the lawsuit was seen merely as a means to make a buck, or to take a "crap shoot" on a contingency fee, then it never may have occurred to counsel that pursuit of a frivolous claim can be damaging to our system of justice. For those cynics who believe that the final output of the judicial system can be no better than the input, it will come as no surprise if result-oriented lawyering of this sort breeds result-oriented decisionmaking.

The relationship between the judiciary and the legal profession and academy need not, of course, work to such grim effect. If departures from principle by one institution may be mirrored in the others, then adherence to principle by one institution should also find itself reflected in the work of the others. It is this intuition that leads me to approach the subject of principled decisionmaking with both urgency and a strong sense of optimism. For I am confident that reaffirmation by the judiciary of its commitment to principled decisionmaking can reverberate throughout the legal system, ultimately finding voice in the reclamation by the legal profession of its traditional "public spiritedness."

Later developments seriously weakened the already questionable claim of military urgency advanced by the government in Korematsu. The argument that time did not permit the making of individual loyalty determinations, critical to the Court's decision in Korematsu, was derived from an official report of the General charged with executing the exclusion and internment program. An original version of that report, however, deliberately withheld from the Supreme Court during its consideration of Korematsu and discovered only recently, makes clear that time was not of the essence in the General's thinking. Rather than relying on any purported military exigency, the original report rested on the blatantly racist understanding that "because of traits peculiar to citizens of Japanese ancestry it would be impossible to separate the loyal from the disloyal . . . ." Hohri involved a takings claim by Japanese Americans based on their dispossession during World War II and, secondarily, the extent to which Korematsu remains viable legal precedent. A majority of circuit judges agreed with the panel that the takings claim was effectively barred by Korematsu, at least until both Congress and the executive branch acknowledged the error of the internment policy, thus tolling the applicable statute of limitations. "[L]itigants do not have the academic luxury . . . of insisting that the Supreme Court does not really mean what it says, or that a peacetime Court should not hesitate to repudiate a wartime Court for ignoring the Constitution's requirements." 793 F.2d at 314. The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
United States House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515 [Identical Letter to the President of the Senate]

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I am pleased to transmit herewith a draft bill "To amend the Customs user fee statute, and for other purposes." Specifically, the bill would amend section 13031 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (COBRA), as amended, (19 U.S.C. 58c), to implement the President's FY 2003 Budget as it relates to COBRA.

The bill would increase air and sea passenger user fees. Excess fees, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, would be deposited in the Customs User Fee Account and would remain available until expended for reimbursement of Customs operations costs not otherwise reimbursed under COBRA, as available to the extent provided for in appropriations Acts.

It would be appreciated if you were to lay the draft bill before the House of Representatives. An identical draft bill has been transmitted to the President of the Senate.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that the transmittal of this draft bill is in accord with the President's program.

Sincerely,

David D. Aufhauser

Enclosure

A BILL

T To amend the Customs user fee statute, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

(1) in subsection (a)(5)--

in subparagraph (A),

(A) by deleting "$5." and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"(1) $5 base fee, and

"(2) subject to subsection (f)(7), an additional fee of $6."; and

in subparagraph (B),

(B) by deleting "$1.75." and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"(1) $1.75 base fee, and

"(2) subject to subsection (f)(7), an additional fee of $0.25."; and

(2) in subsection (f)--

(A) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking "and";

(B) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking the period at the end and inserting instead ", and";

(C) by inserting at the end of paragraph (1) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) the portion of such fees that is determined by the Secretary to be increased amounts under paragraph (7)."

(D) in paragraph (3)(A), by striking "paragraph (5)" and inserting "paragraphs (5) and (7)"; and

(E) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7) any additional amounts from the increase in fees under subsection (a)(5) (A)(2) and (B)(2) shall be collected and available for obligation only to the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations acts.".

STATEMENT OF
ERIC SOLOMON
DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARY (REGULATORY AFFAIRS)
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Coyne, and Members of the Subcommittee:

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss with you today the Administration's program of tax incentives designed to foster the revitalization of economically disadvantaged communities. I would like to start by thanking the Subcommittee for holding a hearing on this important issue.

The President is firmly committed to directing public funds toward developing economically distressed communities. However, the President also believes that there is a limit on what the Federal government can accomplish directly. Consequently, the President's Budget for FY 2003 contains initiatives to encourage further involvement by individuals, businesses, and faith-based and community-based organizations in working to eliminate pockets of economic distress wherever they exist in this country. In particular, the Administration proposes making the brownfields tax incentive permanent. Under current law, this incentive is scheduled to expire on December 31, 2003. The revenue cost of a permanent extension is estimated to be $1.1 billion over five years. The Administration also proposes the creation of a tax credit, similar in design to the low-income housing tax credit, for developers of affordable single-family housing. The credit would take effect in 2003 and cost $2.4 billion over 5 years.

Furthermore, thanks in large part to the leadership shown by the Ways and Means Committee, many of the Administration's tax proposals have been enacted or are included in legislation that the House passed last summer. Administration tax proposals benefiting low-income individuals or distressed communities that have already been enacted include the following: (1) extension of the work opportunity tax credit through 2003; (2) extension of the welfare to work credit through 2003; (3) extension of authority to issue qualified zone academy bonds through 2003; (4) providing tax-exempt private activity bonds to finance reconstruction in the area surrounding the World Trade Center in New York City devastated by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks; (5) creation of a new 10 percent income tax bracket; and (6) doubling of the child tax credit to $1000.

We look forward to working with this Subcommittee as it considers the remainder of the Administration's initiatives related to encouraging community renewal.

The remainder of my testimony will provide a more detailed discussion of current law and the Administration's budget proposals.

INCENTIVES FOR DISTRESSED COMMUNITIES

Current law tax incentives for distressed communities

The Internal Revenue Code currently includes numerous incentives to encourage the development of economically distressed areas. They include tax incentives for businesses located in empowerment zones, enterprise communities and renewal communities, the new markets tax credit, qualified zone academy bonds, certain categories of tax-exempt bonds, special incentives for investment and employment on Indian reservations, the low-income housing tax credit, the work opportunity tax credit, and the deductibility of environmental remediation costs.

Empowerment Zones

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA 93) authorized a demonstration project under which nine empowerment zones, six in urban areas and three in rural areas, were designated through a competitive application process. State and local governments nominated distressed geographic areas, which were selected on the strength of their strategic plans for economic and social revitalization. The urban areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The rural areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 added two urban Round I zones and authorized 20 Round II zones (15 urban and five rural). The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized nine Round III zones (seven urban and two rural). There are currently 30 urban zones and 10 rural zones. Designation of Round I, Round II or Round III status generally will apply until December 31, 2009.

Qualifying businesses in empowerment zones are eligible for certain tax benefits. These benefits include the following: (1) a 20-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional expensing for qualified zone property; and (3) tax-exempt financing for certain qualifying zone facilities. In addition, taxpayers may elect to defer capital gains from certain sales and re-investments in qualified empowerment zone assets. Taxpayers may also exclude certain gain from the sale of qualifying empowerment zone stock that is held for more than five years.

The wage credit provides a 20 percent subsidy on the first $15,000 of annual wages paid to residents of empowerment zones by businesses located in these communities, if substantially all of the employee's services are performed within the zone. By lowering the cost of labor, the wage credit encourages new businesses to locate in zones, and encourages those businesses already there to expand, providing jobs and opportunities for self-sufficiency for zone residents.

Enterprise zone businesses are allowed to expense the cost of certain property up to an additional $35,000 above the amounts generally available under section 179 of the Internal Revenue Code. In addition, only 50 percent of the cost of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing. This incentive is designed to increase investment in machines, computers and other tangible business property within empowerment zones by small businesses.

Enterprise zone businesses are also permitted access to a special class of tax-exempt private activity bonds. Limits are placed on the amount of such financing available to each zone. Rural zones are allowed $60 million of such financing, urban zones with less than 100,000 residents are allowed $130 million of such financing and urban zones with at least 100,000 residents are allowed $230 million of such financing. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 added two provisions to limit capital gains taxation on certain investments within empowerment zones to encourage greater private investment in the zones. Taxpayers are allowed to roll over the capital gain from the sale of qualified empowerment zone assets held more than one year, if a replacement qualified empowerment zone asset is purchased in the same zone as the asset sold. Qualified empowerment zone assets include certain stock and partnership interests in an enterprise zone business and certain tangible property used in an enterprise zone business. This provision applies to assets acquired after December 21, 2000.

In addition, taxpayers other than corporations are allowed to exclude 60 percent of the gain on the sale or trade of qualified small business stock held more than 5 years, if the business also qualifies as an enterprise zone business. Taxpayers are normally allowed to exclude 50 percent of the gain on the sale of qualified small business stock. This provision applies to stock acquired after December 21, 2000.

Enterprise Communities

In addition to Empowerment Zones, OBRA 93 provided for the designation of 95 Enterprise Communities, 65 in urban areas and 30 in rural areas. Qualified businesses in these communities are entitled to the same favorable tax-exempt financing benefits as those in empowerment zones. Many of these enterprise communities have subsequently been re-designated as part of an empowerment zone or a renewal community and are no longer designated as an enterprise community. Currently, 68 enterprise communities qualify for tax-exempt financing, 40 in urban areas and 28 in rural areas.

Renewal Communities

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized 40 renewal communities, at least 12 of which must be in rural areas. The renewal communities were chosen through a competitive application process similar to that used for empowerment zones. The 40 communities were recently designated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and that designation continues through 2009.

Taxpayers may utilize the renewal community tax benefits beginning this year. These benefits include the following: (1) a 15-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional section 179 expensing for qualified renewal property; (3) a commercial revitalization deduction; and (4) an exclusion for capital gains on qualified community assets held more than 5 years.

The wage credit and increased section 179 expensing operate in a similar fashion as in empowerment zones. The primary difference is that the wage credit is smaller, equal to 15 percent for the first $10,000 of wages.

The commercial revitalization deduction is designed to foster the development or rehabilitation of commercial real estate in renewal communities. This deduction is applicable to certain nonresidential real property or other property functionally related to nonresidential real property. A taxpayer may elect to either: (1) deduct one-half of any qualified revitalization expenditures that would otherwise be capitalized for any qualified revitalization building in the tax year the building is placed in service, or (2) amortize all such expenditures over a 120-month period beginning with the month the building is placed in service. A qualified revitalization building is any building and its structural components placed in service by the taxpayer in a renewal community. If the building is new, the original use of the building must begin with the taxpayer. If the building is not new, the taxpayer must substantially rehabilitate the building and then place it in service. The total amount of qualified revitalization expenditures for any building cannot be more than the smaller of $10 million or the amount allocated to the building by the commercial revitalization agency for the state in which the building is located. A $12 million dollar cap on allowed commercial revitalization expenditures is placed on each renewal community annually.

In order to help stimulate private investment in renewal communities, qualified capital gain earned on qualified community assets is excluded from gross income. A qualified community asset includes stock or a partnership interest in a qualified renewal community business and certain tangible property used in a renewal community business. To qualify for the capital gain exclusion, the asset must be purchased after December 31, 2001 and before January 1, 2010, and it must be held for at least five years.

District of Columbia Incentives

A special set of incentives was enacted in 1997 to help redevelop the District of Columbia. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 included tax incentives for both residents and businesses to locate in the District of Columbia. A $5,000 income tax credit for first-time home purchasers was designed to attract new homeowners to the District. A second set of incentives, similar to those provided in empowerment zones, was intended to encourage the establishment of new businesses in the District as well as new investment in existing enterprises.

Subject to certain income restrictions, the $5,000 credit is available to first-time purchasers of a principal residence in the District of Columbia who have not owned houses in the District during the year preceding the purchase. Although the credit was initially available for property purchased through the end of 2000, subsequent legislation extended the incentive through the end of 2003.

Other tax incentives offer a range of economic inducements to businesses operating in the more economically disadvantaged parts of the District. With the exception of a provision related to the sale of capital assets, these incentives are available only to businesses located either within the boundaries of the D.C. Enterprise Community, or located in census tracts elsewhere in the

District where the poverty rate exceeds 20 percent. These areas are collectively known as the DC Zone. With certain minor adjustments, businesses in the DC Zone may claim the same wage credit, expensing of certain capital investment, and tax exempt bond financing as businesses in an empowerment zone. In addition, as in renewal communities, capital gains realized from the sale of certain assets are excludable from the income of the seller. For the purposes of this provision alone, the DC Zone is expanded to include all census tracts in the District in which the poverty rate exceeds 10 percent.

New York Liberty Zone

While the area around the World Trade Center in New York City would not have been described as an economically distressed community prior to the extraordinary events of September 11, 2001, the incredible destruction of life and property in that area due to the terrorist attacks prompted both the Administration and the Congress to support tax incentives targeted to helping New York City recover economically. I commend you, Mr. Chairman, and other members of the Ways and Means Committee for the leadership you exhibited in helping to enact the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Some of the tax incentives provided in the New York Liberty Zone are similar to the tax incentives offered in empowerment zones, while others were designed to meet the unique challenges facing New York City in the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks. As in empowerment zones, qualified businesses are allowed a wage credit, increased section 179 expensing, and access to tax-exempt financing. Provisions specific to the New York Liberty Zone include 30 percent expensing of certain property, accelerated depreciation of qualified leasehold improvement property, extension of the replacement period for certain property involuntarily converted, and an additional advance refunding of bonds for facilities located in New York City.

The wage credit is allowed for certain employees who work in New York City through an extension of the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC). The new targeted group for the WOTC includes employees of businesses located in the New York Liberty Zone if substantially all of the employee's services for the business are performed within the New York Liberty Zone. In addition, the new targeted group includes employees of businesses that relocated from the New York Liberty Zone due to the physical destruction or damage of their workplaces by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks to another location within New York City, provided that substantially all of the employee's services are performed within New York City. Only businesses with an average of 200 or less employees during the taxable year are eligible for the credit. The credit is effective for wages paid or incurred for work performed during calendar year 2002 or 2003.

An increase in section 179 expensing of $35,000 is allowed for property placed in service by taxpayers after September 10, 2001, and before January 1, 2007, if the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone commences with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 and substantially all of the use of the property is in the New York Liberty Zone. As in empowerment zones and renewal communities, only 50 percent of the value of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing.

The Governor of New York State and the Mayor of New York City are each given an allowance to issue up to $4 billion of tax-exempt private activity bonds before January 1, 2005. The bonds may be used to finance construction and rehabilitation of nonresidential real property, residential rental real property, and public utility property in the New York Liberty Zone. The Governor and the Mayor may each designate up to $1 billion of such bond proceeds for the acquisition, construction, and rehabilitation of certain commercial real property located outside the New York Liberty Zone and within New York City. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

A taxpayer is allowed an additional first-year depreciation deduction equal to 30 percent of the adjusted basis of qualified New York Liberty Zone property. In order to qualify for this partial expensing, the property must be (1) a property with a MACRS recovery period of 20 years or less, (2) computer software other than computer software covered by section 197, (3) water utility property, or (4) certain nonresidential real property and residential rental property. Nonresidential real property and residential rental property is eligible for the partial expensing only to the extent such property rehabilitates real property damaged, or replaces real property destroyed or condemned, as a result of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. This provision applies neither to property that would otherwise qualify for 30 percent expensing under section 168(k), nor to qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property. Furthermore, to qualify for the partial expensing, substantially all of the use of the property must be in the New York Liberty Zone and the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone must commence with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 (except for certain leased property). Finally, qualified property must be purchased by the taxpayer after September 10, 2001, and placed in service before January 1, 2007, or for nonresidential property and residential rental property, January 1, 2009.

Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property placed in service after September 10, 2001 and before January 1, 2007 is treated as 5-year property for the purposes of section 168 depreciation rules, with deductions taken using the straight-line method. Under the alternative depreciation system (section 168(g)), such property has a class life of 9 years. Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property is qualified leasehold improvement property as defined in section 168(e)(6) that is placed in service in the New York Liberty Zone.

When property used in a trade or business is damaged or destroyed, the taxpayer may deduct any loss sustained to the extent that the loss is not compensated by insurance or otherwise. When insurance or other compensation results in a gain from the damage or destruction of property, then the taxpayer may elect to reduce the current recognition of gain by purchasing a replacement property within a specific time period which is similar or related in use to the damaged or destroyed property (section 1033(a)). For property in the New York Liberty Zone that was involuntarily converted as a result of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, the replacement period is extended from 2 years to 5 years if substantially all of the use of the replacement property is in New York City.

Finally, certain bonds for facilities located in New York City are given one additional advance refunding. There is an aggregate limit of $9 billion advance refunding bonds that may be issued before January 1, 2005.

New Markets Tax Credit

The new markets tax credit was created by the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 to encourage capital investments in businesses that are located in low-income communities. The new markets tax credit provides a tax credit to investors who make "qualified equity investments" in privately-managed investment vehicles called "community development entities," or "CDEs." The CDEs are required to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in low-income communities. For example, CDEs may make loans or capital investments in companies that operate in low-income communities.[1]

Eligible investors in a CDE are entitled to claim tax credits over a seven-year period beginning on the date of the initial investment. The value of the credits to investors will be about 30 percent of the amount of the qualified equity investment on a present value basis.

In order for an entity to qualify as a CDE, it must meet three requirements. First, the primary mission of the entity must be to serve or provide investment capital for low-income communities or low-income persons. Second, the entity must maintain accountability to residents of low-income communities through their representation on the entity's governing or advisory board. Third, the entity must be certified as a CDE by the Treasury Department's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (CDFI Fund).

In order for a CDE to issue qualified equity investments with respect to which new markets tax credits may be claimed, the CDE must apply for and receive from the CDFI Fund an allocation of credit authority for those investments.

A total of $15 billion of equity investments will be able to qualify for this authority on a phased-in basis between 2001 and 2007. The CDFI Fund will allocate this authority among CDEs based on a competitive application process. In making these allocations, the CDFI Fund is required to give priority to any entity (1) with a record of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities, or (2) which intends to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in one or more businesses in which persons unrelated to the entity hold the majority equity interest. [In the next couple of weeks, the CDFI Fund will issue a notice seeking applications from CDEs for allocation of credit authority.]

Qualified Zone Academy Bonds

State and local governments can issue qualified zone academy bonds (QZABs) to fund the improvement of certain eligible public schools. An eligible holder of a QZAB receives annual Federal income tax credits. These annual credits compensate the holder for lending money and, therefore, are treated like taxable interest payments for Federal tax purposes.

[1] For these purposes, "low-income community" is defined as any population census tract if (1) the poverty rate for the tract is at least 20 percent, or (2) the median family income for the tract does not exceed 80 percent of statewide median family income (or, in the case of metropolitan areas, metropolitan area median family income, if greater).

Eligible holders are banks, insurance companies, and corporations actively engaged in the business of lending money. The credit rate for a QZAB is set on its day of sale by reference to credit rates established by the Department of the Treasury. The maximum term of a QZAB issued during any month is determined by reference to the adjusted applicable Federal rate (AFR) published by the Internal Revenue Service for the month in which the bond is issued.

This provision was enacted in the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, which established authority to issue $400 million of QZABs per year for 1998 and 1999. This authority was extended to 2000 and 2001 by the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act of 1999. The Administration proposed that this authority be extended through 2003, which was accomplished in the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002. The annual cap is allocated among the States in proportion to their respective populations of individuals with incomes below the poverty line. Unused authority to issue QZABs may be carried forward for two years (three years for authority arising in 1998 and 1999) after the year for which the authority was established.

A number of requirements must be met for a bond to be treated as a QZAB. First, the bond must be issued pursuant to an allocation of bond authority from the issuer's State educational agency. Second, at least 95 percent of the bond proceeds must be used for an eligible purpose at a qualified zone academy. Eligible purposes include rehabilitating school facilities, acquiring equipment, developing course materials, or training teachers. A qualified zone academy is a public school (or an academic program within a public school) that is designed in cooperation with business and is either (1) located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community, or (2) attended by students at least 35 percent of whom are estimated to be eligible for free or reduced-cost lunches under the National School Lunch Act. Third, private entities must have promised to contribute to the qualified zone academy certain property or services with a present value equal to at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

Mortgage Revenue Bonds

Mortgage revenue bonds ("MRBs") are bonds issued by or on behalf of a State or local government to finance the purchase, or qualifying rehabilitation or improvement, of single-family, owner-occupied homes located within the jurisdiction of the issuer of the bonds. Interest on MRBs is excluded from gross income for federal income tax purposes if they meet the requirements for "qualified mortgage bonds" or "qualified veterans' mortgage bonds." In addition, in some circumstances, "mortgage credit certificates" may be issued as an alternative to qualified mortgage bonds.

In general, qualified mortgage bonds must finance residences for first-time home buyers, the purchase price of the residence may not exceed certain amounts, and the purchaser must satisfy certain income limitations. In addition, certain special rules apply with respect to "targeted areas." A targeted area is defined as (1) a census tract in which 70 percent or more of the families have incomes that are 80 percent or less of the Statewide median family income, or (2) an area of chronic economic distress designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. At least 20 percent of the lendable proceeds of each qualified mortgage bond issue (but not more than 40 percent of the average mortgage activity in the targeted area) is required to be made available for owner-financing in targeted areas for a period of at least one year.

The volume of certain tax-exempt private activity bonds, including qualified mortgage bonds, that States and local governments may issue in each calendar year is limited by State-wide volume limits. The current annual volume limits are $50 per resident of the State or $150 million if greater. The current limits increase to $75 per resident of each State or $225 million, if greater, beginning in calendar year 2007. The increase is ratably phased in, beginning with $55 per capita or $165 million, if greater, in calendar year 2003.

Qualified governmental units may elect to exchange all or any portion of their private activity bond volume limitation for authority to issue mortgage credit certificates ("MCCs"). MCCs entitle home buyers to nonrefundable income tax credits for a specified percentage of interest paid on mortgage loans on their principal residences. MCCs generally are subject to the same eligibility and targeted area requirements as qualified mortgage bonds.

Indian Employment Credit

Unfortunately, many residents of Native American communities continue to struggle economically. The Indian Employment Credit provides an incentive for job growth in these communities. Employers may claim an Indian Employment Credit on the qualified wages and employee health insurance costs paid to an enrolled member of an Indian tribe in compensation for services performed on or near a reservation. The credit amount is equal to 20 percent of the excess of the employer's current year qualified wages and employee health insurance costs over the sum of the corresponding amounts paid or incurred by the employer during calendar year 1993. The aggregate amount of qualified wages and health insurance costs may not exceed $20,000 per person per year. This incentive was due to expire at the end of 2003, but has been extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Depreciation of Property Used on Indian Reservations

Another tax incentive that encourages economic development on Indian reservations is the accelerated depreciation of qualified Indian reservation property. This accelerated depreciation is accomplished through the use of shorter recovery periods for certain property. In order to qualify for this provision, a property must (1) be used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an Indian reservation, (2) not be used outside the Indian reservation on a regular basis, (3) not be acquired from a person related to the taxpayer, and (4) not be used for the purpose of certain gaming activities. In addition, property for which the alternative depreciation system is applied is not eligible for this provision. This provision was scheduled to expire for property placed in service after 2003, but was extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Low-income housing tax credit

Taxpayers who invest in qualified low-income rental units are eligible for the low-income housing tax credit (LIHTC). The LIHTC may be claimed over a 10-year period for a portion of the cost of rental housing occupied by tenants having incomes below specified levels. The credit percentage for newly constructed housing that is not federally subsidized is adjusted monthly by the Internal Revenue Service so that generally the 10 annual credit amounts have a present value of 70 percent of qualified basis. The credit percentage for new buildings that are federally subsidized and for existing buildings is calculated to have a present value of 30 percent of qualified basis. In general, the aggregate first-year credit authority allocated to each State is $1.75 per capita in 2002 and will be indexed for inflation in following years. Tax credits are allocated to particular projects by State or local housing agencies pursuant to publicly announced plans for allocation. Authority to allocate credits may be carried forward by agencies to the following calendar year. Unused credit allocations may be returned to an agency for reallocation. Credit allocations may revert to the agency if less than 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected qualifying basis is expended within 6 months after receiving the allocation. Authority not used in a timely manner reverts to a national pool for distribution to States requesting additional authority. Generally, a qualifying building must be placed in service in the year the credit is allocated unless at least 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected basis in the property is expended in the year of allocation or within 6 months after the allocation date. Rules are provided for the allocation of costs to individual units in multi-unit projects and to property that is part of a project but used for purposes other than rental housing. The tax credit period begins with the taxable year in which a qualified building is placed in service (or, in certain circumstances, the succeeding taxable year). Credits are recaptured if the required number of units is not rented to qualifying tenants for a period of 15 years.

Work Opportunity Tax Credit

Employers are generally entitled to the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC) for the first $6,000 of wages paid to several targeted groups of economically disadvantaged workers or workers with disabilities. For workers employed between 120 and 400 hours, the credit rate is 25 percent of qualified wages. For workers employed over 400 hours, the credit rate is 40 percent. Employers must reduce their deduction for wages paid by the amount of the credit claimed. Current WOTC target groups include qualified: (1) recipients of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families; (2) veterans; (3) ex-felons; (4) high-risk youth; (5) participants in State-sponsored vocational rehabilitation programs; (6) summer youth; (7) food stamp recipients; and (8) Supplemental Security Income recipients.

A qualified high-risk youth employee listed above is an individual at least 18 years old but less than 25, who lives within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. A qualified summer youth employee works for the employer between May 1 and September 15, is 16 or 17 years old, and resides within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. The limit on the wages of a summer youth employee that qualify for the credit is reduced to $3,000.

At the time the Administration proposed the FY 2003 budget, the WOTC was scheduled to expire at the end of 2001. The Administration proposed that the WOTC be extended through 2003. This was accomplished by the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

The House has just passed (is considering?) the Encouraging Work and Supporting Marriage Act of 2002. The bill would combine the WOTC and the welfare to work (WTW) credit by making persons eligible for WTW a WOTC target group with special rules. The WTW credit enables employers to claim a tax credit for eligible wages paid to certain long-term welfare recipients. The changes contained in the House bill will simplify the computation of the credit for employers that hire members of the economically disadvantaged targeted groups. We commend the proposed tax simplification.

Brownfields remediation costs

A brownfield site is real property, the expansion, redevelopment, or reuse of which may be complicated by the presence or potential presence of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant. Because lenders, investors, and developers fear the high and uncertain costs of cleanup, they avoid developing contaminated sites. Blighted areas of brownfields hinder the redevelopment of affected communities and create safety and health risks for residents. The obstacles in cleaning these sites, such as regulatory barriers, lack of private investment, and contamination and remediation issues, are being addressed through a wide range of Federal programs, including the tax incentive for brownfields remediation.

To encourage the cleanup of contaminated sites, the brownfields tax incentive permits the current deduction of certain environmental remediation costs. Environmental remediation costs qualify for current deduction if the expenditures would otherwise be capitalized (generally costs incurred to clean up land and groundwater that increase the value of the property) and are paid or incurred in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site. A qualified contaminated site generally is any property (1) that is held for use in a trade or business, for the production of income, or as inventory; (2) at or on which there has been a release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance; and (3) that is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency as to the release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance. Sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) do not qualify as qualified contaminated sites. The brownfields tax incentive applies to expenditures paid or incurred before January 1, 2004.

Administration budget proposals

The President's Budget for FY 2003 includes two proposals to improve upon these tax incentives and further encourage development in economically distressed communities.

Brownfields remediation costs

The Administration believes that encouraging environmental remediation is an important national goal. The brownfields provision encourages the cleanup of contaminated brownfields, thereby enabling them to be brought into productive use in the economy and mitigating potential harms to public health. The current-law incentive was made temporary to encourage faster cleanup of brownfields. Experience has shown, however, that many taxpayers are unable to take advantage of the incentive because environmental remediation often extends over a number of years. For that reason, the President's budget proposed a permanent extension of the brownfields tax incentive. Extending the special treatment accorded to brownfields on a permanent basis would remove doubt among taxpayers as to the future deductibility of remediation expenditures and would promote the goal of encouraging environmental remediation. The Administration's brownfields proposal was introduced by Mr. Coyne and Mr. Weller as H.R. 1439.

The revenue cost of the proposal is estimated to be $1.1 billion over FY 2003-2007. Treasury estimates that the proposal, at a $300 million annual cost, will leverage approximately $2 billion per year in private investment.

Single-family housing tax credit

The Administration believes that quality of life in distressed neighborhoods can be improved by increasing home ownership. Existing buildings in these neighborhoods often need extensive renovation before they can provide decent owner-occupied housing. Renovation may not occur because the costs involved exceed the prices at which the housing units could be sold. Similarly, the costs of new construction may exceed their market value. Properties will sit vacant and neighborhoods will remain blighted unless the gap between development costs and market prices can be filled. The Administration has proposed the creation of a single-family housing tax credit (SFHTC) to expand the possibility of home ownership for low-income families.

First-year credit authority of $1.75 per resident would be made available annually to States (including U.S. possessions) beginning in calendar year 2003. The per capita amount would be indexed for inflation beginning in 2004. Pursuant to a plan of allocation, State or local housing credit agencies would award first-year credits to housing units comprising a project for the development of single-family housing in census tracts with median incomes of 80 percent or less of area median income, based initially upon 2000 census data. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply regarding carry forward and return of unused credits and a national pool for unused credits. Credits allocated to a project would revert to the agency unless expenditures equal to 10 percent or more of reasonably expected qualifying costs were made within 6 months after receipt of the allocation. Units in condominiums and cooperatives could qualify as single-family housing. Credits would be awarded as a fixed amount for individual units comprising a project. The present value of the credits with respect to a unit, as of the beginning of the credit period (described below), could not exceed 50 percent of the qualifying costs of the unit. For these purposes, present value would be determined based on the mid-term Applicable Federal Rate in effect for the date the agency allocated credits to the project. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply to determine eligible costs of individual units. The Treasury Department would have the authority to promulgate necessary reporting requirements.

The taxpayer (developer or investor partnership) owning the housing unit immediately prior to the date of sale to a qualified buyer (or, if later, the date a certificate of occupancy was issued) would be eligible to claim SFHTCs over a 5-year period beginning on that date. No credits with respect to a housing unit would be available unless the unit was sold within a 1-year period beginning on the date a certificate of occupancy is issued with respect to that unit.

Eligible homebuyers would have incomes at 80 percent (70 percent for families with less than 3 members) or less of applicable median family income. They would not have to be first-time homebuyers. Homebuyers would be subject to recapture provisions in certain circumstances. In particular, recapture rules would apply if the homebuyer (or a subsequent buyer) sold the property to a nonqualified buyer within 3 years after the date of initial sale of the unit. The recapture tax would equal the lesser of (1) 80 percent of the gain upon resale and (2) a recapture amount. The recapture amount would equal the value of the credits allocated to the housing unit being resold, reduced by 1/36th of that value for each month between the initial sale and the sale to a nonqualified buyer. No recapture provision would apply to taxpayers eligible to claim SFHTCs. If a housing unit for which any credit is claimed were converted to rental property by the initial homebuyer within the first 5 years following the purchase, no deductions for depreciation or property taxes could be claimed with respect to that unit during that time period.

The proposal would be effective beginning with first-year credit allocations for calendar year 2003. The revenue cost of this proposal is expected to be $2.4 billion over FY 2003-2007.

Administration spending proposals for distressed communities

In addition to the tax incentives just described, the Administration's FY 2003 Budget contains several initiatives on the spending side to revitalize economically disadvantaged communities. These initiatives include the following: (1) a $100 million increase for the HOME block grant, a flexible program that localities can tailor to their particular housing needs; (2) reforms to the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program so that more money will be targeted at communities with the greatest economic need, plus an increase of $95 million for the CDBG formula program; (3) a four-fold increase in the President's Down Payment Assistance Initiative from its 2002 level to $200 million to provide matching grants to state and local governments to provide down payment assistance to first-time homeowners; (4) a three-fold increase in funding to $65 million for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity program, which helps families realize homeownership through sweat equity; and (5) funding for four competitive grant programs targeted at faith- and community-based organizations that can provide innovative services, including $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund to help charitable organizations start or expand, $25 million for mentoring children of prisoners, $20 million for promoting responsible fatherhood, and $10 million for maternity group homes.

CONCLUSION

I would like to thank Mr. Houghton, Mr. Coyne and the members of the Subcommittee for providing the chance today to discuss these important issues. I hope that, working together, we can ensure that all Americans share in our country's prosperity and have even greater opportunity in the future. While this concludes my prepared testimony. I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

I have a couple thoughts, but they're substantive, so we should probably discuss before you take the trouble to try to incorporate any.

DRAFT
11:30 A.M.

May __, 2002

Dear Chairman Lieberman:

We have received your letter of May 16 and were surprised and disappointed at its content and tone. We respectfully believe that you are acting precipitously -- and in a manner inconsistent with governing case law and the constitutional accommodation process -- by threatening a subpoena at this juncture in your inquiry.

As I wrote you yesterday, we are taking numerous steps to gather information requested by the Committee. We are gathering and reviewing documents. We are gathering and reviewing e-mails. We are gathering and reviewing visitor entry records. We are interviewing individuals with relevant information. We are preparing to respond soon to assist the Committee's inquiry. With all of that underway, the threat of a subpoena is misplaced.

You imply that our extensive efforts are too late because you sent your initial letter on March 27. With respect, that is unfair. First, with all respect, your March 27 letter was confusing in many respects. It frankly would have been far easier had the Committee simply asked -- in a straightforward manner -- for information about (i) communications with Enron relating to law, regulation, policy, or appointments affecting Enron's business and (ii) communications with non-EOP federal departments and agencies about Enron. The Committee's request instead was both confusing and ambiguous. We did not fully understand some aspects of the Committee's request until your April 24 letter, and it was not until our May 9 meeting that additional ambiguities were resolved. In addition, it bears mention that we lost one full week because your staffer in charge was on vacation the week of April 1, the week when we first contacted her to arrange a meeting.

Moreover, when we did meet with your staff on April 11, there was no suggestion that we would be threatened with a subpoena regardless whether we made reasonable efforts to gather information for the Committee. And your April 24 letter further confirmed for us that you expected reasonable efforts. We believe that our efforts have plainly met that standard.

All of that said, I want to look forward. Your letter states that you would not seek a subpoena next week if I can assure you:

> (1) [we] will promptly take steps to broaden the search along the lines discussed above and in the Committee's May 3 letter in order to obtain all information sought in the Committee's March 27 letter, and (2) [we] will provide the Committee all information sought in the Committee's March 27 letter by the end of May.

As to your first condition, we believe we can satisfy you by submitting the Enron surveys to all employees of the Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President. We will do so promptly.

As to your second request, we think your demand premature. It would be irresponsible, in my judgment, for any Counsel to the President to commit in advance to provide information to Congress before he has reviewed it or even has an idea what the information will be. Let me emphasize that we have no intention of unnecessarily provoking a confrontation with the Committee. But we also believe it extraordinary for a congressional committee to threaten a subpoena simply because the President's counsel has not committed in advance to provide the Committee every shred of information it can gather -- no matter how sensitive to the Presidency, no matter how extraneous to the Committee's inquiry.

We respectfully believe the Committee's all-or-nothing, now-or-never approach to be inconsistent with governing case law. The D.C. Circuit has held -- contrary to the Committee's request and your most recent letter -- that Congress seldom needs a "precise reconstruction of past events" in order to legislate. Senate Select Committee on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725, 731 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (en banc). And even when Congress has authority to inquire, it may not intrude unduly on presidential prerogatives or demand all information within the scope of a presidential privilege. Rather, a committee must establish that "the subpoenaed evidence is demonstrably critical to the responsible fulfillment of the Committee's functions." Id. We have serious doubts whether the Committee's request meets those high standards.

But the case law recognizes that, as here, there may be inter-Branch disputes about whether Congress has a sufficient predicate and, if so, whether it is unduly intruding on Executive Branch prerogatives. The case law recognizes, in particular, that the respective interests of the two Branches may conflict when Congress seeks to oversee the Executive Branch -- especially when it seeks to inquire into activities of the Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President. The case law thus dictates a process of compromise. As the D.C. Circuit has stated:

> The framers . . . expect[ed] that where conflicts in scope of authority arose between the coordinate branches, a spirit of dynamic compromise would promote resolution of the dispute in the manner most likely to result in efficient and effective functioning of our governmental system. . . . [E]ach branch should take cognizance of an implicit constitutional mandate to seek optimal accommodation through a realistic evaluation of the needs of the conflicting branches in the particular fact situation. . . . The Constitution contemplates such accommodation. Negotiation between the two branches should thus be viewed as a dynamic process affirmatively furthering the constitutional scheme.

Consistent with this case law, we have taken extensive steps to accommodate the Committee's request notwithstanding our serious doubts whether the Committee's request is within the proper scope of its legislative authority and our concerns that the Committee is seeking to intrude inappropriately into the deliberative processes of the President and his advisors, particularly with respect to Presidential appointments and development of policy. But we do not believe that the Committee has similarly engaged in the process of dynamic compromise and optimal accommodation required by the case law.

In sum, I respectfully suggest that a Committee subpoena at this time would be unnecessary and unwise and contrary to the governing case law. I ask that you reconsider and withdraw the threat of a subpoena until, at a minimum, you see what information we provide to the Committee.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales
Counsel to the President

STATEMENT OF
ERIC SOLOMON
DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARY (REGULATORY AFFAIRS)
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Coyne, and Members of the Subcommittee:

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss with you today the Administration's program of tax incentives designed to foster the revitalization of economically disadvantaged communities. I would like to start by thanking the Subcommittee for holding a hearing on this important issue.

The President is firmly committed to directing public funds toward developing economically distressed communities. However, the President also believes that there is a limit on what the Federal government can accomplish directly. Consequently, the President's Budget for FY 2003 contains initiatives to encourage further involvement by individuals, businesses, and faith-based and community-based organizations in working to eliminate pockets of economic distress wherever they exist in this country. In particular, the Administration proposes making the brownfields tax incentive permanent. Under current law, this incentive is scheduled to expire on December 31, 2003. The revenue cost of a permanent extension is estimated to be $1.1 billion over five years. The Administration also proposes the creation of a tax credit, similar in design to the low-income housing tax credit, for developers of affordable single-family housing. The credit would take effect in 2003 and cost $2.4 billion over 5 years.

Furthermore, thanks in large part to the leadership shown by the Ways and Means Committee, many of the Administration's tax proposals have been enacted or are included in legislation that the House passed last summer. Administration tax proposals benefiting low-income individuals or distressed communities that have already been enacted include the following: (1) extension of the work opportunity tax credit through 2003; (2) extension of the welfare to work credit through 2003; (3) extension of authority to issue qualified zone academy bonds through 2003; (4) providing tax-exempt private activity bonds to finance reconstruction in the area surrounding the World Trade Center in New York City devastated by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks; (5) creation of a new 10 percent income tax bracket; and (6) doubling of the child tax credit to $1000.

We look forward to working with this Subcommittee as it considers the remainder of the Administration's initiatives related to encouraging community renewal.

The remainder of my testimony will provide a more detailed discussion of current law and the Administration's budget proposals.

INCENTIVES FOR DISTRESSED COMMUNITIES

Current law tax incentives for distressed communities

The Internal Revenue Code currently includes numerous incentives to encourage the development of economically distressed areas. They include tax incentives for businesses located in empowerment zones, enterprise communities and renewal communities, the new markets tax credit, qualified zone academy bonds, certain categories of tax-exempt bonds, special incentives for investment and employment on Indian reservations, the low-income housing tax credit, the work opportunity tax credit, and the deductibility of environmental remediation costs.

Empowerment Zones

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA 93) authorized a demonstration project under which nine empowerment zones, six in urban areas and three in rural areas, were designated through a competitive application process. State and local governments nominated distressed geographic areas, which were selected on the strength of their strategic plans for economic and social revitalization. The urban areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The rural areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 added two urban Round I zones and authorized 20 Round II zones (15 urban and five rural). The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized nine Round III zones (seven urban and two rural). There are currently 30 urban zones and 10 rural zones. Designation of Round I, Round II or Round III status generally will apply until December 31, 2009.

Qualifying businesses in empowerment zones are eligible for certain tax benefits. These benefits include the following: (1) a 20-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional expensing for qualified zone property; and (3) tax-exempt financing for certain qualifying zone facilities. In addition, taxpayers may elect to defer capital gains from certain sales and re-investments in qualified empowerment zone assets. Taxpayers may also exclude certain gain from the sale of qualifying empowerment zone stock that is held for more than five years.

The wage credit provides a 20 percent subsidy on the first $15,000 of annual wages paid to residents of empowerment zones by businesses located in these communities, if substantially all of the employee's services are performed within the zone. By lowering the cost of labor, the wage credit encourages new businesses to locate in zones, and encourages those businesses already there to expand, providing jobs and opportunities for self-sufficiency for zone residents.

Enterprise zone businesses are allowed to expense the cost of certain property up to an additional $35,000 above the amounts generally available under section 179 of the Internal Revenue Code. In addition, only 50 percent of the cost of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing. This incentive is designed to increase investment in machines, computers and other tangible business property within empowerment zones by small businesses.

Enterprise zone businesses are also permitted access to a special class of tax-exempt private activity bonds. Limits are placed on the amount of such financing available to each zone. Rural zones are allowed $60 million of such financing, urban zones with less than 100,000 residents are allowed $130 million of such financing and urban zones with at least 100,000 residents are allowed $230 million of such financing. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 added two provisions to limit capital gains taxation on certain investments within empowerment zones to encourage greater private investment in the zones. Taxpayers are allowed to roll over the capital gain from the sale of qualified empowerment zone assets held more than one year, if a replacement qualified empowerment zone asset is purchased in the same zone as the asset sold. Qualified empowerment zone assets include certain stock and partnership interests in an enterprise zone business and certain tangible property used in an enterprise zone business. This provision applies to assets acquired after December 21, 2000.

In addition, taxpayers other than corporations are allowed to exclude 60 percent of the gain on the sale or trade of qualified small business stock held more than 5 years, if the business also qualifies as an enterprise zone business. Taxpayers are normally allowed to exclude 50 percent of the gain on the sale of qualified small business stock. This provision applies to stock acquired after December 21, 2000.

Enterprise Communities

In addition to Empowerment Zones, OBRA 93 provided for the designation of 95 Enterprise Communities, 65 in urban areas and 30 in rural areas. Qualified businesses in these communities are entitled to the same favorable tax-exempt financing benefits as those in empowerment zones. Many of these enterprise communities have subsequently been re-designated as part of an empowerment zone or a renewal community and are no longer designated as an enterprise community. Currently, 68 enterprise communities qualify for tax-exempt financing, 40 in urban areas and 28 in rural areas.

Renewal Communities

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized 40 renewal communities, at least 12 of which must be in rural areas. The renewal communities were chosen through a competitive application process similar to that used for empowerment zones. The 40 communities were recently designated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and that designation continues through 2009.

Taxpayers may utilize the renewal community tax benefits beginning this year. These benefits include the following: (1) a 15-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional section 179 expensing for qualified renewal property; (3) a commercial revitalization deduction; and (4) an exclusion for capital gains on qualified community assets held more than 5 years.

The wage credit and increased section 179 expensing operate in a similar fashion as in empowerment zones. The primary difference is that the wage credit is smaller, equal to 15 percent for the first $10,000 of wages.

The commercial revitalization deduction is designed to foster the development or rehabilitation of commercial real estate in renewal communities. This deduction is applicable to certain nonresidential real property or other property functionally related to nonresidential real property. A taxpayer may elect to either: (1) deduct one-half of any qualified revitalization expenditures that would otherwise be capitalized for any qualified revitalization building in the tax year the building is placed in service, or (2) amortize all such expenditures over a 120-month period beginning with the month the building is placed in service. A qualified revitalization building is any building and its structural components placed in service by the taxpayer in a renewal community. If the building is new, the original use of the building must begin with the taxpayer. If the building is not new, the taxpayer must substantially rehabilitate the building and then place it in service. The total amount of qualified revitalization expenditures for any building cannot be more than the smaller of $10 million or the amount allocated to the building by the commercial revitalization agency for the state in which the building is located. A $12 million dollar cap on allowed commercial revitalization expenditures is placed on each renewal community annually.

In order to help stimulate private investment in renewal communities, qualified capital gain earned on qualified community assets is excluded from gross income. A qualified community asset includes stock or a partnership interest in a qualified renewal community business and certain tangible property used in a renewal community business. To qualify for the capital gain exclusion, the asset must be purchased after December 31, 2001 and before January 1, 2010, and it must be held for at least five years.

District of Columbia Incentives

A special set of incentives was enacted in 1997 to help redevelop the District of Columbia. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 included tax incentives for both residents and businesses to locate in the District of Columbia. A $5,000 income tax credit for first-time home purchasers was designed to attract new homeowners to the District. A second set of incentives, similar to those provided in empowerment zones, was intended to encourage the establishment of new businesses in the District as well as new investment in existing enterprises.

Subject to certain income restrictions, the $5,000 credit is available to first-time purchasers of a principal residence in the District of Columbia who have not owned houses in the District during the year preceding the purchase. Although the credit was initially available for property purchased through the end of 2000, subsequent legislation extended the incentive through the end of 2003.

Other tax incentives offer a range of economic inducements to businesses operating in the more economically disadvantaged parts of the District. With the exception of a provision related to the sale of capital assets, these incentives are available only to businesses located either within the boundaries of the D.C. Enterprise Community, or located in census tracts elsewhere in the

District where the poverty rate exceeds 20 percent. These areas are collectively known as the DC Zone. With certain minor adjustments, businesses in the DC Zone may claim the same wage credit, expensing of certain capital investment, and tax exempt bond financing as businesses in an empowerment zone. In addition, as in renewal communities, capital gains realized from the sale of certain assets are excludable from the income of the seller. For the purposes of this provision alone, the DC Zone is expanded to include all census tracts in the District in which the poverty rate exceeds 10 percent.

New York Liberty Zone

While the area around the World Trade Center in New York City would not have been described as an economically distressed community prior to the extraordinary events of September 11, 2001, the incredible destruction of life and property in that area due to the terrorist attacks prompted both the Administration and the Congress to support tax incentives targeted to helping New York City recover economically. I commend you, Mr. Chairman, and other members of the Ways and Means Committee for the leadership you exhibited in helping to enact the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Some of the tax incentives provided in the New York Liberty Zone are similar to the tax incentives offered in empowerment zones, while others were designed to meet the unique challenges facing New York City in the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks. As in empowerment zones, qualified businesses are allowed a wage credit, increased section 179 expensing, and access to tax-exempt financing. Provisions specific to the New York Liberty Zone include 30 percent expensing of certain property, accelerated depreciation of qualified leasehold improvement property, extension of the replacement period for certain property involuntarily converted, and an additional advance refunding of bonds for facilities located in New York City.

The wage credit is allowed for certain employees who work in New York City through an extension of the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC). The new targeted group for the WOTC includes employees of businesses located in the New York Liberty Zone if substantially all of the employee's services for the business are performed within the New York Liberty Zone. In addition, the new targeted group includes employees of businesses that relocated from the New York Liberty Zone due to the physical destruction or damage of their workplaces by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks to another location within New York City, provided that substantially all of the employee's services are performed within New York City. Only businesses with an average of 200 or less employees during the taxable year are eligible for the credit. The credit is effective for wages paid or incurred for work performed during calendar year 2002 or 2003.

An increase in section 179 expensing of $35,000 is allowed for property placed in service by taxpayers after September 10, 2001, and before January 1, 2007, if the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone commences with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 and substantially all of the use of the property is in the New York Liberty Zone. As in empowerment zones and renewal communities, only 50 percent of the value of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing.

The Governor of New York State and the Mayor of New York City are each given an allowance to issue up to $4 billion of tax-exempt private activity bonds before January 1, 2005. The bonds may be used to finance construction and rehabilitation of nonresidential real property, residential rental real property, and public utility property in the New York Liberty Zone. The Governor and the Mayor may each designate up to $1 billion of such bond proceeds for the acquisition, construction, and rehabilitation of certain commercial real property located outside the New York Liberty Zone and within New York City. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

A taxpayer is allowed an additional first-year depreciation deduction equal to 30 percent of the adjusted basis of qualified New York Liberty Zone property. In order to qualify for this partial expensing, the property must be (1) a property with a MACRS recovery period of 20 years or less, (2) computer software other than computer software covered by section 197, (3) water utility property, or (4) certain nonresidential real property and residential rental property. Nonresidential real property and residential rental property is eligible for the partial expensing only to the extent such property rehabilitates real property damaged, or replaces real property destroyed or condemned, as a result of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. This provision applies neither to property that would otherwise qualify for 30 percent expensing under section 168(k), nor to qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property. Furthermore, to qualify for the partial expensing, substantially all of the use of the property must be in the New York Liberty Zone and the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone must commence with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 (except for certain leased property). Finally, qualified property must be purchased by the taxpayer after September 10, 2001, and placed in service before January 1, 2007, or for nonresidential property and residential rental property, January 1, 2009.

Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property placed in service after September 10, 2001 and before January 1, 2007 is treated as 5-year property for the purposes of section 168 depreciation rules, with deductions taken using the straight-line method. Under the alternative depreciation system (section 168(g)), such property has a class life of 9 years. Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property is qualified leasehold improvement property as defined in section 168(e)(6) that is placed in service in the New York Liberty Zone.

When property used in a trade or business is damaged or destroyed, the taxpayer may deduct any loss sustained to the extent that the loss is not compensated by insurance or otherwise. When insurance or other compensation results in a gain from the damage or destruction of property, then the taxpayer may elect to reduce the current recognition of gain by purchasing a replacement property within a specific time period which is similar or related in use to the damaged or destroyed property (section 1033(a)). For property in the New York Liberty Zone that was involuntarily converted as a result of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, the replacement period is extended from 2 years to 5 years if substantially all of the use of the replacement property is in New York City.

Finally, certain bonds for facilities located in New York City are given one additional advance refunding. There is an aggregate limit of $9 billion advance refunding bonds that may be issued before January 1, 2005.

New Markets Tax Credit

The new markets tax credit was created by the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 to encourage capital investments in businesses that are located in low-income communities. The new markets tax credit provides a tax credit to investors who make "qualified equity investments" in privately-managed investment vehicles called "community development entities," or "CDEs." The CDEs are required to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in low-income communities. For example, CDEs may make loans or capital investments in companies that operate in low-income communities.[1]

Eligible investors in a CDE are entitled to claim tax credits over a seven-year period beginning on the date of the initial investment. The value of the credits to investors will be about 30 percent of the amount of the qualified equity investment on a present value basis.

In order for an entity to qualify as a CDE, it must meet three requirements. First, the primary mission of the entity must be to serve or provide investment capital for low-income communities or low-income persons. Second, the entity must maintain accountability to residents of low-income communities through their representation on the entity's governing or advisory board. Third, the entity must be certified as a CDE by the Treasury Department's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (CDFI Fund).

In order for a CDE to issue qualified equity investments with respect to which new markets tax credits may be claimed, the CDE must apply for and receive from the CDFI Fund an allocation of credit authority for those investments.

A total of $15 billion of equity investments will be able to qualify for this authority on a phased-in basis between 2001 and 2007. The CDFI Fund will allocate this authority among CDEs based on a competitive application process. In making these allocations, the CDFI Fund is required to give priority to any entity (1) with a record of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities, or (2) which intends to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in one or more businesses in which persons unrelated to the entity hold the majority equity interest. [In the next couple of weeks, the CDFI Fund will issue a notice seeking applications from CDEs for allocation of credit authority.]

State and local governments can issue qualified zone academy bonds (QZABs) to fund the improvement of certain eligible public schools. An eligible holder of a QZAB receives annual Federal income tax credits. These annual credits compensate the holder for lending money and, therefore, are treated like taxable interest payments for Federal tax purposes.

[1] For these purposes, "low-income community" is defined as any population census tract if (1) the poverty rate for the tract is at least 20 percent, or (2) the median family income for the tract does not exceed 80 percent of statewide median family income (or, in the case of metropolitan areas, metropolitan area median family income, if greater).

Eligible holders are banks, insurance companies, and corporations actively engaged in the business of lending money. The credit rate for a QZAB is set on its day of sale by reference to credit rates established by the Department of the Treasury. The maximum term of a QZAB issued during any month is determined by reference to the adjusted applicable Federal rate (AFR) published by the Internal Revenue Service for the month in which the bond is issued.

This provision was enacted in the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, which established authority to issue $400 million of QZABs per year for 1998 and 1999. This authority was extended to 2000 and 2001 by the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act of 1999. The Administration proposed that this authority be extended through 2003, which was accomplished in the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002. The annual cap is allocated among the States in proportion to their respective populations of individuals with incomes below the poverty line. Unused authority to issue QZABs may be carried forward for two years (three years for authority arising in 1998 and 1999) after the year for which the authority was established.

A number of requirements must be met for a bond to be treated as a QZAB. First, the bond must be issued pursuant to an allocation of bond authority from the issuer's State educational agency. Second, at least 95 percent of the bond proceeds must be used for an eligible purpose at a qualified zone academy. Eligible purposes include rehabilitating school facilities, acquiring equipment, developing course materials, or training teachers. A qualified zone academy is a public school (or an academic program within a public school) that is designed in cooperation with business and is either (1) located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community, or (2) attended by students at least 35 percent of whom are estimated to be eligible for free or reduced-cost lunches under the National School Lunch Act. Third, private entities must have promised to contribute to the qualified zone academy certain property or services with a present value equal to at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

Mortgage revenue bonds ("MRBs") are bonds issued by or on behalf of a State or local government to finance the purchase, or qualifying rehabilitation or improvement, of single-family, owner-occupied homes located within the jurisdiction of the issuer of the bonds. Interest on MRBs is excluded from gross income for federal income tax purposes if they meet the requirements for "qualified mortgage bonds" or "qualified veterans' mortgage bonds." In addition, in some circumstances, "mortgage credit certificates" may be issued as an alternative to qualified mortgage bonds.

In general, qualified mortgage bonds must finance residences for first-time home buyers, the purchase price of the residence may not exceed certain amounts, and the purchaser must satisfy certain income limitations. In addition, certain special rules apply with respect to "targeted areas." A targeted area is defined as (1) a census tract in which 70 percent or more of the families have incomes that are 80 percent or less of the Statewide median family income, or (2) an area of chronic economic distress designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. At least 20 percent of the lendable proceeds of each qualified mortgage bond issue (but not more than 40 percent of the average mortgage activity in the targeted area) is required to be made available for owner-financing in targeted areas for a period of at least one year.

The volume of certain tax-exempt private activity bonds, including qualified mortgage bonds, that States and local governments may issue in each calendar year is limited by State-wide volume limits. The current annual volume limits are $50 per resident of the State or $150 million if greater. The current limits increase to $75 per resident of each State or $225 million, if greater, beginning in calendar year 2007. The increase is ratably phased in, beginning with $55 per capita or $165 million, if greater, in calendar year 2003.

Qualified governmental units may elect to exchange all or any portion of their private activity bond volume limitation for authority to issue mortgage credit certificates ("MCCs"). MCCs entitle home buyers to nonrefundable income tax credits for a specified percentage of interest paid on mortgage loans on their principal residences. MCCs generally are subject to the same eligibility and targeted area requirements as qualified mortgage bonds.

Indian Employment Credit

Unfortunately, many residents of Native American communities continue to struggle economically. The Indian Employment Credit provides an incentive for job growth in these communities. Employers may claim an Indian Employment Credit on the qualified wages and employee health insurance costs paid to an enrolled member of an Indian tribe in compensation for services performed on or near a reservation. The credit amount is equal to 20 percent of the excess of the employer's current year qualified wages and employee health insurance costs over the sum of the corresponding amounts paid or incurred by the employer during calendar year 1993. The aggregate amount of qualified wages and health insurance costs may not exceed $20,000 per person per year. This incentive was due to expire at the end of 2003, but has been extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Depreciation of Property Used on Indian Reservations

Another tax incentive that encourages economic development on Indian reservations is the accelerated depreciation of qualified Indian reservation property. This accelerated depreciation is accomplished through the use of shorter recovery periods for certain property. In order to qualify for this provision, a property must (1) be used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an Indian reservation, (2) not be used outside the Indian reservation on a regular basis, (3) not be acquired from a person related to the taxpayer, and (4) not be used for the purpose of certain gaming activities. In addition, property for which the alternative depreciation system is applied is not eligible for this provision. This provision was scheduled to expire for property placed in service after 2003, but was extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Low-income housing tax credit

Taxpayers who invest in qualified low-income rental units are eligible for the low-income housing tax credit (LIHTC). The LIHTC may be claimed over a 10-year period for a portion of the cost of rental housing occupied by tenants having incomes below specified levels. The credit percentage for newly constructed housing that is not federally subsidized is adjusted monthly by the Internal Revenue Service so that generally the 10 annual credit amounts have a present value of 70 percent of qualified basis. The credit percentage for new buildings that are federally subsidized and for existing buildings is calculated to have a present value of 30 percent of qualified basis. In general, the aggregate first-year credit authority allocated to each State is $1.75 per capita in 2002 and will be indexed for inflation in following years. Tax credits are allocated to particular projects by State or local housing agencies pursuant to publicly announced plans for allocation. Authority to allocate credits may be carried forward by agencies to the following calendar year. Unused credit allocations may be returned to an agency for reallocation. Credit allocations may revert to the agency if less than 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected qualifying basis is expended within 6 months after receiving the allocation. Authority not used in a timely manner reverts to a national pool for distribution to States requesting additional authority. Generally, a qualifying building must be placed in service in the year the credit is allocated unless at least 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected basis in the property is expended in the year of allocation or within 6 months after the allocation date. Rules are provided for the allocation of costs to individual units in multi-unit projects and to property that is part of a project but used for purposes other than rental housing. The tax credit period begins with the taxable year in which a qualified building is placed in service (or, in certain circumstances, the succeeding taxable year). Credits are recaptured if the required number of units is not rented to qualifying tenants for a period of 15 years.

Work Opportunity Tax Credit

Employers are generally entitled to the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC) for the first $6,000 of wages paid to several targeted groups of economically disadvantaged workers or workers with disabilities. For workers employed between 120 and 400 hours, the credit rate is 25 percent of qualified wages. For workers employed over 400 hours, the credit rate is 40 percent. Employers must reduce their deduction for wages paid by the amount of the credit claimed. Current WOTC target groups include qualified: (1) recipients of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families; (2) veterans; (3) ex-felons; (4) high-risk youth; (5) participants in State-sponsored vocational rehabilitation programs; (6) summer youth; (7) food stamp recipients; and (8) Supplemental Security Income recipients.

A qualified high-risk youth employee listed above is an individual at least 18 years old but less than 25, who lives within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. A qualified summer youth employee works for the employer between May 1 and September 15, is 16 or 17 years old, and resides within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. The limit on the wages of a summer youth employee that qualify for the credit is reduced to $3,000.

At the time the Administration proposed the FY 2003 budget, the WOTC was scheduled to expire at the end of 2001. The Administration proposed that the WOTC be extended through 2003. This was accomplished by the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

The House has just passed (is considering?) the Encouraging Work and Supporting Marriage Act of 2002. The bill would combine the WOTC and the welfare to work (WTW) credit by making persons eligible for WTW a WOTC target group with special rules. The WTW credit enables employers to claim a tax credit for eligible wages paid to certain long-term welfare recipients. The changes contained in the House bill will simplify the computation of the credit for employers that hire members of the economically disadvantaged targeted groups. We commend the proposed tax simplification.

A brownfield site is real property, the expansion, redevelopment, or reuse of which may be complicated by the presence or potential presence of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant. Because lenders, investors, and developers fear the high and uncertain costs of cleanup, they avoid developing contaminated sites. Blighted areas of brownfields hinder the redevelopment of affected communities and create safety and health risks for residents. The obstacles in cleaning these sites, such as regulatory barriers, lack of private investment, and contamination and remediation issues, are being addressed through a wide range of Federal programs, including the tax incentive for brownfields remediation.

To encourage the cleanup of contaminated sites, the brownfields tax incentive permits the current deduction of certain environmental remediation costs. Environmental remediation costs qualify for current deduction if the expenditures would otherwise be capitalized (generally costs incurred to clean up land and groundwater that increase the value of the property) and are paid or incurred in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site. A qualified contaminated site generally is any property (1) that is held for use in a trade or business, for the production of income, or as inventory; (2) at or on which there has been a release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance; and (3) that is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency as to the release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance. Sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) do not qualify as qualified contaminated sites. The brownfields tax incentive applies to expenditures paid or incurred before January 1, 2004.

Administration budget proposals

The President's Budget for FY 2003 includes two proposals to improve upon these tax incentives and further encourage development in economically distressed communities.

Brownfields remediation costs

The Administration believes that encouraging environmental remediation is an important national goal. The brownfields provision encourages the cleanup of contaminated brownfields, thereby enabling them to be brought into productive use in the economy and mitigating potential harms to public health. The current-law incentive was made temporary to encourage faster cleanup of brownfields. Experience has shown, however, that many taxpayers are unable to take advantage of the incentive because environmental remediation often extends over a number of years. For that reason, the President's budget proposed a permanent extension of the brownfields tax incentive. Extending the special treatment accorded to brownfields on a permanent basis would remove doubt among taxpayers as to the future deductibility of remediation expenditures and would promote the goal of encouraging environmental remediation. The Administration's brownfields proposal was introduced by Mr. Coyne and Mr. Weller as H.R. 1439.

The revenue cost of the proposal is estimated to be $1.1 billion over FY 2003-2007. Treasury estimates that the proposal, at a $300 million annual cost, will leverage approximately $2 billion per year in private investment.

Single-family housing tax credit

The Administration believes that quality of life in distressed neighborhoods can be improved by increasing home ownership. Existing buildings in these neighborhoods often need extensive renovation before they can provide decent owner-occupied housing. Renovation may not occur because the costs involved exceed the prices at which the housing units could be sold. Similarly, the costs of new construction may exceed their market value. Properties will sit vacant and neighborhoods will remain blighted unless the gap between development costs and market prices can be filled. The Administration has proposed the creation of a single-family housing tax credit (SFHTC) to expand the possibility of home ownership for low-income families.

First-year credit authority of $1.75 per resident would be made available annually to States (including U.S. possessions) beginning in calendar year 2003. The per capita amount would be indexed for inflation beginning in 2004. Pursuant to a plan of allocation, State or local housing credit agencies would award first-year credits to housing units comprising a project for the development of single-family housing in census tracts with median incomes of 80 percent or less of area median income, based initially upon 2000 census data. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply regarding carry forward and return of unused credits and a national pool for unused credits. Credits allocated to a project would revert to the agency unless expenditures equal to 10 percent or more of reasonably expected qualifying costs were made within 6 months after receipt of the allocation. Units in condominiums and cooperatives could qualify as single-family housing. Credits would be awarded as a fixed amount for individual units comprising a project. The present value of the credits with respect to a unit, as of the beginning of the credit period (described below), could not exceed 50 percent of the qualifying costs of the unit. For these purposes, present value would be determined based on the mid-term Applicable Federal Rate in effect for the date the agency allocated credits to the project. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply to determine eligible costs of individual units. The Treasury Department would have the authority to promulgate necessary reporting requirements.

The taxpayer (developer or investor partnership) owning the housing unit immediately prior to the date of sale to a qualified buyer (or, if later, the date a certificate of occupancy was issued) would be eligible to claim SFHTCs over a 5-year period beginning on that date. No credits with respect to a housing unit would be available unless the unit was sold within a 1-year period beginning on the date a certificate of occupancy is issued with respect to that unit.

Eligible homebuyers would have incomes at 80 percent (70 percent for families with less than 3 members) or less of applicable median family income. They would not have to be first-time homebuyers. Homebuyers would be subject to recapture provisions in certain circumstances. In particular, recapture rules would apply if the homebuyer (or a subsequent buyer) sold the property to a nonqualified buyer within 3 years after the date of initial sale of the unit. The recapture tax would equal the lesser of (1) 80 percent of the gain upon resale and (2) a recapture amount. The recapture amount would equal the value of the credits allocated to the housing unit being resold, reduced by 1/36th of that value for each month between the initial sale and the sale to a nonqualified buyer. No recapture provision would apply to taxpayers eligible to claim SFHTCs. If a housing unit for which any credit is claimed were converted to rental property by the initial homebuyer within the first 5 years following the purchase, no deductions for depreciation or property taxes could be claimed with respect to that unit during that time period.

The proposal would be effective beginning with first-year credit allocations for calendar year 2003. The revenue cost of this proposal is expected to be $2.4 billion over FY 2003-2007.

Administration spending proposals for distressed communities

In addition to the tax incentives just described, the Administration's FY 2003 Budget contains several initiatives on the spending side to revitalize economically disadvantaged communities. These initiatives include the following: (1) a $100 million increase for the HOME block grant, a flexible program that localities can tailor to their particular housing needs; (2) reforms to the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program so that more money will be targeted at communities with the greatest economic need, plus an increase of $95 million for the CDBG formula program; (3) a four-fold increase in the President's Down Payment Assistance Initiative from its 2002 level to $200 million to provide matching grants to state and local governments to provide down payment assistance to first-time homeowners; (4) a three-fold increase in funding to $65 million for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity program, which helps families realize homeownership through sweat equity; and (5) funding for four competitive grant programs targeted at faith- and community-based organizations that can provide innovative services, including $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund to help charitable organizations start or expand, $25 million for mentoring children of prisoners, $20 million for promoting responsible fatherhood, and $10 million for maternity group homes.

CONCLUSION

I would like to thank Mr. Houghton, Mr. Coyne and the members of the Subcommittee for providing the chance today to discuss these important issues. I hope that, working together, we can ensure that all Americans share in our country's prosperity and have even greater opportunity in the future. While this concludes my prepared testimony. I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

STATEMENT OF
ERIC SOLOMON
DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARY (REGULATORY AFFAIRS)
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Coyne, and Members of the Subcommittee:

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss with you today the Administration's program of tax incentives designed to foster the revitalization of economically disadvantaged communities. I would like to start by thanking the Subcommittee for holding a hearing on this important issue.

The President is firmly committed to directing public funds toward developing economically distressed communities. However, the President also believes that there is a limit on what the Federal government can accomplish directly. Consequently, the President's Budget for FY 2003 contains initiatives to encourage further involvement by individuals, businesses, and faith-based and community-based organizations in working to eliminate pockets of economic distress wherever they exist in this country. In particular, the Administration proposes making the brownfields tax incentive permanent. Under current law, this incentive is scheduled to expire on December 31, 2003. The revenue cost of a permanent extension is estimated to be $1.1 billion over five years. The Administration also proposes the creation of a tax credit, similar in design to the low-income housing tax credit, for developers of affordable single-family housing. The credit would take effect in 2003 and cost $2.4 billion over 5 years.

Furthermore, thanks in large part to the leadership shown by the Ways and Means Committee, many of the Administration's tax proposals have been enacted or are included in legislation that the House passed last summer. Administration tax proposals benefiting low-income individuals or distressed communities that have already been enacted include the following: (1) extension of the work opportunity tax credit through 2003; (2) extension of the welfare to work credit through 2003; (3) extension of authority to issue qualified zone academy bonds through 2003; (4) providing tax-exempt private activity bonds to finance reconstruction in the area surrounding the World Trade Center in New York City devastated by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks; (5) creation of a new 10 percent income tax bracket; and (6) doubling of the child tax credit to $1000.

We look forward to working with this Subcommittee as it considers the remainder of the Administration's initiatives related to encouraging community renewal.

The remainder of my testimony will provide a more detailed discussion of current law and the Administration's budget proposals.

INCENTIVES FOR DISTRESSED COMMUNITIES

Current law tax incentives for distressed communities

The Internal Revenue Code currently includes numerous incentives to encourage the development of economically distressed areas. They include tax incentives for businesses located in empowerment zones, enterprise communities and renewal communities, the new markets tax credit, qualified zone academy bonds, certain categories of tax-exempt bonds, special incentives for investment and employment on Indian reservations, the low-income housing tax credit, the work opportunity tax credit, and the deductibility of environmental remediation costs.

Empowerment Zones

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA 93) authorized a demonstration project under which nine empowerment zones, six in urban areas and three in rural areas, were designated through a competitive application process. State and local governments nominated distressed geographic areas, which were selected on the strength of their strategic plans for economic and social revitalization. The urban areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The rural areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 added two urban Round I zones and authorized 20 Round II zones (15 urban and five rural). The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized nine Round III zones (seven urban and two rural). There are currently 30 urban zones and 10 rural zones. Designation of Round I, Round II or Round III status generally will apply until December 31, 2009.

Qualifying businesses in empowerment zones are eligible for certain tax benefits. These benefits include the following: (1) a 20-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional expensing for qualified zone property; and (3) tax-exempt financing for certain qualifying zone facilities. In addition, taxpayers may elect to defer capital gains from certain sales and re-investments in qualified empowerment zone assets. Taxpayers may also exclude certain gain from the sale of qualifying empowerment zone stock that is held for more than five years.

The wage credit provides a 20 percent subsidy on the first $15,000 of annual wages paid to residents of empowerment zones by businesses located in these communities, if substantially all of the employee's services are performed within the zone. By lowering the cost of labor, the wage credit encourages new businesses to locate in zones, and encourages those businesses already there to expand, providing jobs and opportunities for self-sufficiency for zone residents.

Enterprise zone businesses are allowed to expense the cost of certain property up to an additional $35,000 above the amounts generally available under section 179 of the Internal Revenue Code. In addition, only 50 percent of the cost of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing. This incentive is designed to increase investment in machines, computers and other tangible business property within empowerment zones by small businesses.

Enterprise zone businesses are also permitted access to a special class of tax-exempt private activity bonds. Limits are placed on the amount of such financing available to each zone. Rural zones are allowed $60 million of such financing, urban zones with less than 100,000 residents are allowed $130 million of such financing and urban zones with at least 100,000 residents are allowed $230 million of such financing. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 added two provisions to limit capital gains taxation on certain investments within empowerment zones to encourage greater private investment in the zones. Taxpayers are allowed to roll over the capital gain from the sale of qualified empowerment zone assets held more than one year, if a replacement qualified empowerment zone asset is purchased in the same zone as the asset sold. Qualified empowerment zone assets include certain stock and partnership interests in an enterprise zone business and certain tangible property used in an enterprise zone business. This provision applies to assets acquired after December 21, 2000.

In addition, taxpayers other than corporations are allowed to exclude 60 percent of the gain on the sale or trade of qualified small business stock held more than 5 years, if the business also qualifies as an enterprise zone business. Taxpayers are normally allowed to exclude 50 percent of the gain on the sale of qualified small business stock. This provision applies to stock acquired after December 21, 2000.

Enterprise Communities

In addition to Empowerment Zones, OBRA 93 provided for the designation of 95 Enterprise Communities, 65 in urban areas and 30 in rural areas. Qualified businesses in these communities are entitled to the same favorable tax-exempt financing benefits as those in empowerment zones. Many of these enterprise communities have subsequently been re-designated as part of an empowerment zone or a renewal community and are no longer designated as an enterprise community. Currently, 68 enterprise communities qualify for tax-exempt financing, 40 in urban areas and 28 in rural areas.

Renewal Communities

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized 40 renewal communities, at least 12 of which must be in rural areas. The renewal communities were chosen through a competitive application process similar to that used for empowerment zones. The 40 communities were recently designated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and that designation continues through 2009.

Taxpayers may utilize the renewal community tax benefits beginning this year. These benefits include the following: (1) a 15-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional section 179 expensing for qualified renewal property; (3) a commercial revitalization deduction; and (4) an exclusion for capital gains on qualified community assets held more than 5 years.

The wage credit and increased section 179 expensing operate in a similar fashion as in empowerment zones. The primary difference is that the wage credit is smaller, equal to 15 percent for the first $10,000 of wages.

The commercial revitalization deduction is designed to foster the development or rehabilitation of commercial real estate in renewal communities. This deduction is applicable to certain nonresidential real property or other property functionally related to nonresidential real property. A taxpayer may elect to either: (1) deduct one-half of any qualified revitalization expenditures that would otherwise be capitalized for any qualified revitalization building in the tax year the building is placed in service, or (2) amortize all such expenditures over a 120-month period beginning with the month the building is placed in service. A qualified revitalization building is any building and its structural components placed in service by the taxpayer in a renewal community. If the building is new, the original use of the building must begin with the taxpayer. If the building is not new, the taxpayer must substantially rehabilitate the building and then place it in service. The total amount of qualified revitalization expenditures for any building cannot be more than the smaller of $10 million or the amount allocated to the building by the commercial revitalization agency for the state in which the building is located. A $12 million dollar cap on allowed commercial revitalization expenditures is placed on each renewal community annually.

In order to help stimulate private investment in renewal communities, qualified capital gain earned on qualified community assets is excluded from gross income. A qualified community asset includes stock or a partnership interest in a qualified renewal community business and certain tangible property used in a renewal community business. To qualify for the capital gain exclusion, the asset must be purchased after December 31, 2001 and before January 1, 2010, and it must be held for at least five years.

District of Columbia Incentives

A special set of incentives was enacted in 1997 to help redevelop the District of Columbia. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 included tax incentives for both residents and businesses to locate in the District of Columbia. A $5,000 income tax credit for first-time home purchasers was designed to attract new homeowners to the District. A second set of incentives, similar to those provided in empowerment zones, was intended to encourage the establishment of new businesses in the District as well as new investment in existing enterprises.

Subject to certain income restrictions, the $5,000 credit is available to first-time purchasers of a principal residence in the District of Columbia who have not owned houses in the District during the year preceding the purchase. Although the credit was initially available for property purchased through the end of 2000, subsequent legislation extended the incentive through the end of 2003.

Other tax incentives offer a range of economic inducements to businesses operating in the more economically disadvantaged parts of the District. With the exception of a provision related to the sale of capital assets, these incentives are available only to businesses located either within the boundaries of the D.C. Enterprise Community, or located in census tracts elsewhere in the

District where the poverty rate exceeds 20 percent. These areas are collectively known as the DC Zone. With certain minor adjustments, businesses in the DC Zone may claim the same wage credit, expensing of certain capital investment, and tax exempt bond financing as businesses in an empowerment zone. In addition, as in renewal communities, capital gains realized from the sale of certain assets are excludable from the income of the seller. For the purposes of this provision alone, the DC Zone is expanded to include all census tracts in the District in which the poverty rate exceeds 10 percent.

New York Liberty Zone

While the area around the World Trade Center in New York City would not have been described as an economically distressed community prior to the extraordinary events of September 11, 2001, the incredible destruction of life and property in that area due to the terrorist attacks prompted both the Administration and the Congress to support tax incentives targeted to helping New York City recover economically. I commend you, Mr. Chairman, and other members of the Ways and Means Committee for the leadership you exhibited in helping to enact the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Some of the tax incentives provided in the New York Liberty Zone are similar to the tax incentives offered in empowerment zones, while others were designed to meet the unique challenges facing New York City in the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks. As in empowerment zones, qualified businesses are allowed a wage credit, increased section 179 expensing, and access to tax-exempt financing. Provisions specific to the New York Liberty Zone include 30 percent expensing of certain property, accelerated depreciation of qualified leasehold improvement property, extension of the replacement period for certain property involuntarily converted, and an additional advance refunding of bonds for facilities located in New York City.

The wage credit is allowed for certain employees who work in New York City through an extension of the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC). The new targeted group for the WOTC includes employees of businesses located in the New York Liberty Zone if substantially all of the employee's services for the business are performed within the New York Liberty Zone. In addition, the new targeted group includes employees of businesses that relocated from the New York Liberty Zone due to the physical destruction or damage of their workplaces by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks to another location within New York City, provided that substantially all of the employee's services are performed within New York City. Only businesses with an average of 200 or less employees during the taxable year are eligible for the credit. The credit is effective for wages paid or incurred for work performed during calendar year 2002 or 2003.

An increase in section 179 expensing of $35,000 is allowed for property placed in service by taxpayers after September 10, 2001, and before January 1, 2007, if the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone commences with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 and substantially all of the use of the property is in the New York Liberty Zone. As in empowerment zones and renewal communities, only 50 percent of the value of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing.

The Governor of New York State and the Mayor of New York City are each given an allowance to issue up to $4 billion of tax-exempt private activity bonds before January 1, 2005. The bonds may be used to finance construction and rehabilitation of nonresidential real property, residential rental real property, and public utility property in the New York Liberty Zone. The Governor and the Mayor may each designate up to $1 billion of such bond proceeds for the acquisition, construction, and rehabilitation of certain commercial real property located outside the New York Liberty Zone and within New York City. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

A taxpayer is allowed an additional first-year depreciation deduction equal to 30 percent of the adjusted basis of qualified New York Liberty Zone property. In order to qualify for this partial expensing, the property must be (1) a property with a MACRS recovery period of 20 years or less, (2) computer software other than computer software covered by section 197, (3) water utility property, or (4) certain nonresidential real property and residential rental property. Nonresidential real property and residential rental property is eligible for the partial expensing only to the extent such property rehabilitates real property damaged, or replaces real property destroyed or condemned, as a result of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. This provision applies neither to property that would otherwise qualify for 30 percent expensing under section 168(k), nor to qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property. Furthermore, to qualify for the partial expensing, substantially all of the use of the property must be in the New York Liberty Zone and the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone must commence with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 (except for certain leased property). Finally, qualified property must be purchased by the taxpayer after September 10, 2001, and placed in service before January 1, 2007, or for nonresidential property and residential rental property, January 1, 2009.

Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property placed in service after September 10, 2001 and before January 1, 2007 is treated as 5-year property for the purposes of section 168 depreciation rules, with deductions taken using the straight-line method. Under the alternative depreciation system (section 168(g)), such property has a class life of 9 years. Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property is qualified leasehold improvement property as defined in section 168(e)(6) that is placed in service in the New York Liberty Zone.

When property used in a trade or business is damaged or destroyed, the taxpayer may deduct any loss sustained to the extent that the loss is not compensated by insurance or otherwise. When insurance or other compensation results in a gain from the damage or destruction of property, then the taxpayer may elect to reduce the current recognition of gain by purchasing a replacement property within a specific time period which is similar or related in use to the damaged or destroyed property (section 1033(a)). For property in the New York Liberty Zone that was involuntarily converted as a result of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, the replacement period is extended from 2 years to 5 years if substantially all of the use of the replacement property is in New York City.

Finally, certain bonds for facilities located in New York City are given one additional advance refunding. There is an aggregate limit of $9 billion advance refunding bonds that may be issued before January 1, 2005.

New Markets Tax Credit

The new markets tax credit was created by the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 to encourage capital investments in businesses that are located in low-income communities. The new markets tax credit provides a tax credit to investors who make "qualified equity investments" in privately-managed investment vehicles called "community development entities," or "CDEs." The CDEs are required to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in low-income communities. For example, CDEs may make loans or capital investments in companies that operate in low-income communities.[1]

Eligible investors in a CDE are entitled to claim tax credits over a seven-year period beginning on the date of the initial investment. The value of the credits to investors will be about 30 percent of the amount of the qualified equity investment on a present value basis.

In order for an entity to qualify as a CDE, it must meet three requirements. First, the primary mission of the entity must be to serve or provide investment capital for low-income communities or low-income persons. Second, the entity must maintain accountability to residents of low-income communities through their representation on the entity's governing or advisory board. Third, the entity must be certified as a CDE by the Treasury Department's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (CDFI Fund).

In order for a CDE to issue qualified equity investments with respect to which new markets tax credits may be claimed, the CDE must apply for and receive from the CDFI Fund an allocation of credit authority for those investments.

A total of $15 billion of equity investments will be able to qualify for this authority on a phased-in basis between 2001 and 2007. The CDFI Fund will allocate this authority among CDEs based on a competitive application process. In making these allocations, the CDFI Fund is required to give priority to any entity (1) with a record of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities, or (2) which intends to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in one or more businesses in which persons unrelated to the entity hold the majority equity interest. [In the next couple of weeks, the CDFI Fund will issue a notice seeking applications from CDEs for allocation of credit authority.]

Qualified Zone Academy Bonds

State and local governments can issue qualified zone academy bonds (QZABs) to fund the improvement of certain eligible public schools. An eligible holder of a QZAB receives annual Federal income tax credits. These annual credits compensate the holder for lending money and, therefore, are treated like taxable interest payments for Federal tax purposes.

[1] For these purposes, "low-income community" is defined as any population census tract if (1) the poverty rate for the tract is at least 20 percent, or (2) the median family income for the tract does not exceed 80 percent of statewide median family income (or, in the case of metropolitan areas, metropolitan area median family income, if greater).

Eligible holders are banks, insurance companies, and corporations actively engaged in the business of lending money. The credit rate for a QZAB is set on its day of sale by reference to credit rates established by the Department of the Treasury. The maximum term of a QZAB issued during any month is determined by reference to the adjusted applicable Federal rate (AFR) published by the Internal Revenue Service for the month in which the bond is issued.

This provision was enacted in the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, which established authority to issue $400 million of QZABs per year for 1998 and 1999. This authority was extended to 2000 and 2001 by the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act of 1999. The Administration proposed that this authority be extended through 2003, which was accomplished in the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002. The annual cap is allocated among the States in proportion to their respective populations of individuals with incomes below the poverty line. Unused authority to issue QZABs may be carried forward for two years (three years for authority arising in 1998 and 1999) after the year for which the authority was established.

A number of requirements must be met for a bond to be treated as a QZAB. First, the bond must be issued pursuant to an allocation of bond authority from the issuer's State educational agency. Second, at least 95 percent of the bond proceeds must be used for an eligible purpose at a qualified zone academy. Eligible purposes include rehabilitating school facilities, acquiring equipment, developing course materials, or training teachers. A qualified zone academy is a public school (or an academic program within a public school) that is designed in cooperation with business and is either (1) located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community, or (2) attended by students at least 35 percent of whom are estimated to be eligible for free or reduced-cost lunches under the National School Lunch Act. Third, private entities must have promised to contribute to the qualified zone academy certain property or services with a present value equal to at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

Mortgage Revenue Bonds

Mortgage revenue bonds ("MRBs") are bonds issued by or on behalf of a State or local government to finance the purchase, or qualifying rehabilitation or improvement, of single-family, owner-occupied homes located within the jurisdiction of the issuer of the bonds. Interest on MRBs is excluded from gross income for federal income tax purposes if they meet the requirements for "qualified mortgage bonds" or "qualified veterans' mortgage bonds." In addition, in some circumstances, "mortgage credit certificates" may be issued as an alternative to qualified mortgage bonds.

In general, qualified mortgage bonds must finance residences for first-time home buyers, the purchase price of the residence may not exceed certain amounts, and the purchaser must satisfy certain income limitations. In addition, certain special rules apply with respect to "targeted areas." A targeted area is defined as (1) a census tract in which 70 percent or more of the families have incomes that are 80 percent or less of the Statewide median family income, or (2) an area of chronic economic distress designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. At least 20 percent of the lendable proceeds of each qualified mortgage bond issue (but not more than 40 percent of the average mortgage activity in the targeted area) is required to be made available for owner-financing in targeted areas for a period of at least one year.

The volume of certain tax-exempt private activity bonds, including qualified mortgage bonds, that States and local governments may issue in each calendar year is limited by State-wide volume limits. The current annual volume limits are $50 per resident of the State or $150 million if greater. The current limits increase to $75 per resident of each State or $225 million, if greater, beginning in calendar year 2007. The increase is ratably phased in, beginning with $55 per capita or $165 million, if greater, in calendar year 2003.

Qualified governmental units may elect to exchange all or any portion of their private activity bond volume limitation for authority to issue mortgage credit certificates ("MCCs"). MCCs entitle home buyers to nonrefundable income tax credits for a specified percentage of interest paid on mortgage loans on their principal residences. MCCs generally are subject to the same eligibility and targeted area requirements as qualified mortgage bonds.

Indian Employment Credit

Unfortunately, many residents of Native American communities continue to struggle economically. The Indian Employment Credit provides an incentive for job growth in these communities. Employers may claim an Indian Employment Credit on the qualified wages and employee health insurance costs paid to an enrolled member of an Indian tribe in compensation for services performed on or near a reservation. The credit amount is equal to 20 percent of the excess of the employer's current year qualified wages and employee health insurance costs over the sum of the corresponding amounts paid or incurred by the employer during calendar year 1993. The aggregate amount of qualified wages and health insurance costs may not exceed $20,000 per person per year. This incentive was due to expire at the end of 2003, but has been extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Depreciation of Property Used on Indian Reservations

Another tax incentive that encourages economic development on Indian reservations is the accelerated depreciation of qualified Indian reservation property. This accelerated depreciation is accomplished through the use of shorter recovery periods for certain property. In order to qualify for this provision, a property must (1) be used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an Indian reservation, (2) not be used outside the Indian reservation on a regular basis, (3) not be acquired from a person related to the taxpayer, and (4) not be used for the purpose of certain gaming activities. In addition, property for which the alternative depreciation system is applied is not eligible for this provision. This provision was scheduled to expire for property placed in service after 2003, but was extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Low-income housing tax credit

Taxpayers who invest in qualified low-income rental units are eligible for the low-income housing tax credit (LIHTC). The LIHTC may be claimed over a 10-year period for a portion of the cost of rental housing occupied by tenants having incomes below specified levels. The credit percentage for newly constructed housing that is not federally subsidized is adjusted monthly by the Internal Revenue Service so that generally the 10 annual credit amounts have a present value of 70 percent of qualified basis. The credit percentage for new buildings that are federally subsidized and for existing buildings is calculated to have a present value of 30 percent of qualified basis. In general, the aggregate first-year credit authority allocated to each State is $1.75 per capita in 2002 and will be indexed for inflation in following years. Tax credits are allocated to particular projects by State or local housing agencies pursuant to publicly announced plans for allocation. Authority to allocate credits may be carried forward by agencies to the following calendar year. Unused credit allocations may be returned to an agency for reallocation. Credit allocations may revert to the agency if less than 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected qualifying basis is expended within 6 months after receiving the allocation. Authority not used in a timely manner reverts to a national pool for distribution to States requesting additional authority. Generally, a qualifying building must be placed in service in the year the credit is allocated unless at least 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected basis in the property is expended in the year of allocation or within 6 months after the allocation date. Rules are provided for the allocation of costs to individual units in multi-unit projects and to property that is part of a project but used for purposes other than rental housing. The tax credit period begins with the taxable year in which a qualified building is placed in service (or, in certain circumstances, the succeeding taxable year). Credits are recaptured if the required number of units is not rented to qualifying tenants for a period of 15 years.

Work Opportunity Tax Credit

Employers are generally entitled to the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC) for the first $6,000 of wages paid to several targeted groups of economically disadvantaged workers or workers with disabilities. For workers employed between 120 and 400 hours, the credit rate is 25 percent of qualified wages. For workers employed over 400 hours, the credit rate is 40 percent. Employers must reduce their deduction for wages paid by the amount of the credit claimed. Current WOTC target groups include qualified: (1) recipients of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families; (2) veterans; (3) ex-felons; (4) high-risk youth; (5) participants in State-sponsored vocational rehabilitation programs; (6) summer youth; (7) food stamp recipients; and (8) Supplemental Security Income recipients.

A qualified high-risk youth employee listed above is an individual at least 18 years old but less than 25, who lives within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. A qualified summer youth employee works for the employer between May 1 and September 15, is 16 or 17 years old, and resides within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. The limit on the wages of a summer youth employee that qualify for the credit is reduced to $3,000.

At the time the Administration proposed the FY 2003 budget, the WOTC was scheduled to expire at the end of 2001. The Administration proposed that the WOTC be extended through 2003. This was accomplished by the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

The House has just passed (is considering?) the Encouraging Work and Supporting Marriage Act of 2002. The bill would combine the WOTC and the welfare to work (WTW) credit by making persons eligible for WTW a WOTC target group with special rules. The WTW credit enables employers to claim a tax credit for eligible wages paid to certain long-term welfare recipients. The changes contained in the House bill will simplify the computation of the credit for employers that hire members of the economically disadvantaged targeted groups. We commend the proposed tax simplification.

A brownfield site is real property, the expansion, redevelopment, or reuse of which may be complicated by the presence or potential presence of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant. Because lenders, investors, and developers fear the high and uncertain costs of cleanup, they avoid developing contaminated sites. Blighted areas of brownfields hinder the redevelopment of affected communities and create safety and health risks for residents. The obstacles in cleaning these sites, such as regulatory barriers, lack of private investment, and contamination and remediation issues, are being addressed through a wide range of Federal programs, including the tax incentive for brownfields remediation.

To encourage the cleanup of contaminated sites, the brownfields tax incentive permits the current deduction of certain environmental remediation costs. Environmental remediation costs qualify for current deduction if the expenditures would otherwise be capitalized (generally costs incurred to clean up land and groundwater that increase the value of the property) and are paid or incurred in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site. A qualified contaminated site generally is any property (1) that is held for use in a trade or business, for the production of income, or as inventory; (2) at or on which there has been a release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance; and (3) that is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency as to the release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance. Sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) do not qualify as qualified contaminated sites. The brownfields tax incentive applies to expenditures paid or incurred before January 1, 2004.

Administration budget proposals

The President's Budget for FY 2003 includes two proposals to improve upon these tax incentives and further encourage development in economically distressed communities.

Brownfields remediation costs

The Administration believes that encouraging environmental remediation is an important national goal. The brownfields provision encourages the cleanup of contaminated brownfields, thereby enabling them to be brought into productive use in the economy and mitigating potential harms to public health. The current-law incentive was made temporary to encourage faster cleanup of brownfields. Experience has shown, however, that many taxpayers are unable to take advantage of the incentive because environmental remediation often extends over a number of years. For that reason, the President's budget proposed a permanent extension of the brownfields tax incentive. Extending the special treatment accorded to brownfields on a permanent basis would remove doubt among taxpayers as to the future deductibility of remediation expenditures and would promote the goal of encouraging environmental remediation. The Administration's brownfields proposal was introduced by Mr. Coyne and Mr. Weller as H.R. 1439.

The revenue cost of the proposal is estimated to be $1.1 billion over FY 2003-2007. Treasury estimates that the proposal, at a $300 million annual cost, will leverage approximately $2 billion per year in private investment.

Single-family housing tax credit

The Administration believes that quality of life in distressed neighborhoods can be improved by increasing home ownership. Existing buildings in these neighborhoods often need extensive renovation before they can provide decent owner-occupied housing. Renovation may not occur because the costs involved exceed the prices at which the housing units could be sold. Similarly, the costs of new construction may exceed their market value. Properties will sit vacant and neighborhoods will remain blighted unless the gap between development costs and market prices can be filled. The Administration has proposed the creation of a single-family housing tax credit (SFHTC) to expand the possibility of home ownership for low-income families.

First-year credit authority of $1.75 per resident would be made available annually to States (including U.S. possessions) beginning in calendar year 2003. The per capita amount would be indexed for inflation beginning in 2004. Pursuant to a plan of allocation, State or local housing credit agencies would award first-year credits to housing units comprising a project for the development of single-family housing in census tracts with median incomes of 80 percent or less of area median income, based initially upon 2000 census data. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply regarding carry forward and return of unused credits and a national pool for unused credits. Credits allocated to a project would revert to the agency unless expenditures equal to 10 percent or more of reasonably expected qualifying costs were made within 6 months after receipt of the allocation. Units in condominiums and cooperatives could qualify as single-family housing. Credits would be awarded as a fixed amount for individual units comprising a project. The present value of the credits with respect to a unit, as of the beginning of the credit period (described below), could not exceed 50 percent of the qualifying costs of the unit. For these purposes, present value would be determined based on the mid-term Applicable Federal Rate in effect for the date the agency allocated credits to the project. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply to determine eligible costs of individual units. The Treasury Department would have the authority to promulgate necessary reporting requirements.

The taxpayer (developer or investor partnership) owning the housing unit immediately prior to the date of sale to a qualified buyer (or, if later, the date a certificate of occupancy was issued) would be eligible to claim SFHTCs over a 5-year period beginning on that date. No credits with respect to a housing unit would be available unless the unit was sold within a 1-year period beginning on the date a certificate of occupancy is issued with respect to that unit.

Eligible homebuyers would have incomes at 80 percent (70 percent for families with less than 3 members) or less of applicable median family income. They would not have to be first-time homebuyers. Homebuyers would be subject to recapture provisions in certain circumstances. In particular, recapture rules would apply if the homebuyer (or a subsequent buyer) sold the property to a nonqualified buyer within 3 years after the date of initial sale of the unit. The recapture tax would equal the lesser of (1) 80 percent of the gain upon resale and (2) a recapture amount. The recapture amount would equal the value of the credits allocated to the housing unit being resold, reduced by 1/36th of that value for each month between the initial sale and the sale to a nonqualified buyer. No recapture provision would apply to taxpayers eligible to claim SFHTCs. If a housing unit for which any credit is claimed were converted to rental property by the initial homebuyer within the first 5 years following the purchase, no deductions for depreciation or property taxes could be claimed with respect to that unit during that time period.

The proposal would be effective beginning with first-year credit allocations for calendar year 2003. The revenue cost of this proposal is expected to be $2.4 billion over FY 2003-2007.

Administration spending proposals for distressed communities

In addition to the tax incentives just described, the Administration's FY 2003 Budget contains several initiatives on the spending side to revitalize economically disadvantaged communities. These initiatives include the following: (1) a $100 million increase for the HOME block grant, a flexible program that localities can tailor to their particular housing needs; (2) reforms to the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program so that more money will be targeted at communities with the greatest economic need, plus an increase of $95 million for the CDBG formula program; (3) a four-fold increase in the President's Down Payment Assistance Initiative from its 2002 level to $200 million to provide matching grants to state and local governments to provide down payment assistance to first-time homeowners; (4) a three-fold increase in funding to $65 million for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity program, which helps families realize homeownership through sweat equity; and (5) funding for four competitive grant programs targeted at faith- and community-based organizations that can provide innovative services, including $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund to help charitable organizations start or expand, $25 million for mentoring children of prisoners, $20 million for promoting responsible fatherhood, and $10 million for maternity group homes.

CONCLUSION

I would like to thank Mr. Houghton, Mr. Coyne and the members of the Subcommittee for providing the chance today to discuss these important issues. I hope that, working together, we can ensure that all Americans share in our country's prosperity and have even greater opportunity in the future. While this concludes my prepared testimony. I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

ALBERTO GONZALES'S HIGH-WIRE ACT
Friend of the Court
by Ryan Lizza

One weekend in early May, Alberto Gonzales, President Bush's White House counsel and longtime confidant, found himself motoring out to a Ritz-Carlton in the Virginia suburbs to hang out with creationists and Christian reconstructionists. Gonzales spoke before some 500 members of the Council for National Policy (CNP), an umbrella group of social conservatives that includes major figures such as James Dobson and Gary Bauer, as well as some of the fringiest elements of the right--including Henry Morris, who has devoted his career to the proposition that evolution is a myth; and R.J. Rushdoony, a reconstructionist who advocates replacing the American legal system with the injunctions of the Old Testament. But several of the attendees say they were disappointed by Gonzales, who gave a humdrum speech about the daily life of the White House counsel and offered little ideological red meat. Even during the question-and-answer session, when he was peppered with questions about various social issues, Gonzales remained cautious, betraying little about his personal beliefs--and doing little to win over a skeptical audience. As one attendee put it: "It was not a conservative being cautious; it was a judicial liberal being cautious."

conservative-themed events. Everyone assumes he's on Bush's shortlist for the next vacancy on the Supreme Court, and appearances like his speech before the CNP are a way to build conservative support for his potential nomination. And there's a reason conservatives need convincing: Everything in Gonzales's record prior to his arrival in Washington suggests he is a moderate jurist uncomfortable and unfamiliar with the kind of conservative judicial activism identified with Justices
Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas. And that worries Washington conservatives who fear a replay of 1990, when Bush pere nominated David Souter--another state supreme court judge with an ambiguous record--to the high court, only to have him become a stalwart of its liberal minority.

But if "No More Souters!" has become a rallying cry among conservatives, Democrats are equally determined not to allow another Scalia, an Italian-American right-winger who won confirmation in part because Democrats didn't want to be seen as standing in the way of an ethnic milestone. And if Gonzales's record
in Texas causes him problems on the right, his conservative stances as White House counsel--on judicial picks, on terrorism, on administration secrecy--raise red flags for Senate Democrats and their allies on the left. Alberto Gonzales,
in other words, has the misfortune to be a potential Supreme Court pick at a time when the window of political acceptability--between being too liberal to be nominated and too conservative to be confirmed--is narrower than ever before.
Michael Farris, a home-schooling advocate and influential social conservative, summarizes the dilemma: "Until Judge Gonzales starts saying some things publicly like, `I believe the president is right both politically and constitutionally on abortion, and I'm happy to defend him,' he's not going to be rehabilitated.
The problem is that if you start doing that you become unacceptable to the left." No wonder Gonzales addressed the CNP. And no wonder he didn't win them over.

As a justice for two years on the Texas Supreme Court, Gonzales has a paper trail. And it suggests moderation and deference--a throwback to the kind of judicial restraint Republicans used to advocate before they fell in love with conservative judicial activism. David Keltner, a friend of Gonzales's from Texas
(and a Democrat) argues: "The activist judges we have in the U.S. are conservatives and have been for the last five to ten years. Al
Gonzales went on a court that had some ofthat, and he was not that way.
He truly did not legislate." Gonzales joined the court in January 1999 and resigned in December 2000 to prepare to move to Washington. During those two years he joined several other Bush appointees to form what the liberal group Texas Watch dubbed the "New Guard"--a block of moderate justices who turned the court away from the sharp conservative tilt that characterized it in the late 1980s and early 1990s. In 2000 Texas Watch noted that, led by a justice named Deborah Hankinson, the "`New Guard' increasingly is challenging the intellectual leadership of conservative activist [Justice] Nathan Hecht and his allies"--including Priscilla Owen, a judge Bush recently nominated to the federal bench and who has been targeted for defeat by liberals. It's hardly surprising that Gonzales

usually agreed with his fellow Bush appointees on the Texas court:
As the governor's general counsel from 1995 to 1997, he helped pick them.

Gonzales's writings during his two years on the court-- 14 majority opinions, five concurring opinions, and two dissents--display a fetish for legislative intent and a reverence for Supreme Court precedent, one reason social conservatives fear he would be too timid to vote to overturn Roe v. Wade. "He was a very workmanlike judge who was not likely to rule on either extreme," says a top legal conservative who has had conversations with Gonzales and is not encouraged by his potential nomination to the high court. "The only philosophy of judging you can extract from his opinions is he's the quintessential judge who goes in and tries to figure out the law and applies it."

The Texas supreme court has long been a bastion of pro-business jurisprudence;
and Gonzales, who spent 13 years as a corporate lawyer in Houston, came to Bush's staff with a reputation as a pro-business Republican. But here, too, his record on the court was centrist. In large part, the moderate trend on the Texas court that observers noted in the late '90s involved cases that pitted consumers against corporations. In such cases Gonzales voted with the majority in 47 decisions that favored individuals over business defendants, while signing on to 38 majority opinions that favored businesses over individuals. In one opinion he argued for the majority that a person exposed to asbestos who wins a claim against a company is not precluded from suing again if he develops a separate asbestos-related disease.
In another case--in which Owen and two other conservatives on the court dissented sharply--Gonzales's decision in favor of an injured motorist suing the Texas Department of Transportation created a whole new cause of action for plaintiffs' lawyers.

As someone who arrived on the Texas bench amid speculation that it was a stop on the way to the Supreme Court, Gonzales's opinions sometimes read like those of a man who knows his words will be carefully scrutinized. In a case against General Motors, for example, he wrote an opinion finding the company negligent--but not grossly negligent, as a jury had. This cautious centrism is also present in one of the more significant opinions he wrote. In Osterberg v.
Peca the Texas court wrestled with some of the same First Amendment issues likely to arise out of the McCain-Feingold campaign finance legislation recently signed by Bush
(and challenged by the Republican National Committee). The case dealt with the constitutionality of a state election law that required individuals to disclose expenditures made on behalf of a candidate; the court found that the disclosure requirement being challenged didn't violate the First Amendment. Gonzales

with the majority on that narrow issue but felt it necessary to add in a concurrence that he worried some "disclosure requirements can be so onerous that they violate the First Amendment"--a matter now at the heart of the McCain-Feingold law. In other words, Gonzales gave himself the wiggle room he'd need if the ruling came back to haunt him in a confirmation fight.

But the most well-known opinion Gonzales wrote on the court is the one that has most alienated him from conservatives. A new law signed by then-Governor Bush in 1999 prevented a minor from seeking an abortion without parental notification--unless a judge found her to be "mature and sufficiently well informed."
A series of these judicial-bypass requests began moving toward the Texas Supreme Court in 2000. In the first of them, known as Jane Doe 1, Gonzales joined the majority in overturning a lower court's ruling and allowing a 17-year-old, who told the court her parents did not "believe in abortion," to have the procedure without notifying her parents. The decision fractured the court six to three and precipitated an angry volley of opinions. "It was just incredibly tense around here," says one court official. Justice Owen wrote in a dissent that the majority's "actions raise disturbing questions about its commitment to the rule of law and to the process that is fundamental to the public's trust in the judicia ry." She further accused the court of "manufactur[ing] reasons to justify its action" and concluded her dissent by thundering that the majority "has acted irresponsibly in this case ... has disregarded the law and has trampled the process on which the legitimacy of our law depends." Justice Hecht added that Gonzales and his ideological brethren "adamantly refuse to listen to all reason" because they "have resolved to impair the Legislature's purposes in passing the Parental Notification Act, which were to reduce teenage abortions and increase parental involvement in their children's decisions."

Gonzales's concurring opinion, by contrast, was a paean to legislative intent and--like so many of his other opinions--a careful effort to achieve a delicate political balance. Hinting that he may be pro-life, he wrote: "While the ramifications of such a law and the results of the Court's decision may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the Legislature." Owen's and Hecht's dissents, he said, were "unconscionable act[s] of judicial activism."

Gonzales's record on the Texas Supreme Court, in short, is not that of a Scalia-style conservative. And Gonzales's friends from the period confirm that the record honestly reflected his judicial philosophy. When he was leaving his position on the court to join Bush in Washington, Gonzales had a short, soul-searching conversation with a friend at the courthouse about his impending journey. Gonzales's friend was concerned about the rightward ideological turn the new Bush administration was taking. "When he was leaving, I was worried about the obligations this administration will pay to the right wing," says the friend. But Gonzales, he says, reassured him by asserting, "I'm a moderate, and I believe the governor is a moderate."

But just as the moderate governorship of George W. Bush has metamorphosed into an extremely conservative presidency, so too has Gonzales's moderate judicial philosophy been replaced by an aggressive partisanship as White House counsel. Gonzales has stocked his office with former Scalia and Thomas clerks and veterans of the last decade's most contentious political fights--including Timothy Flanigan, a lawyer who helped write Bush's Supreme Court brief during the Florida recount; Brett Kavanaugh, who wrote part of the Starr report; and H. Christopher Bartolomucci, a Senate Whitewater investigation lawyer. Gonzales's early decision to no longer allow the American Bar Association to vet judicial nominees immediately won him cachet on the right, which has loathed the legal group ever since four members of its review board rated Robert Bork as "not qualified" in 1987. "It's the sort of bogeyman which one gets a lot of mileage for banishing," says one activist. "That act earned him a tremendous amount of support among conservatives."

In contrast with his record in Texas, Gonzales's new office has recommended the most conservative batch of jurists of any recent administration. One of the most telling picks is his old sparring partner on the Texas Court, Priscilla Owen, whom Bush nominated to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals one year ago. The administration had actually interviewed Deborah Hankinson--Gonzales's old ally and the leader of the Texas New Guard--for the job, but her nomination was scuttled. "She read the writing on the wall," says a person close to her. "She wasn't a right winger ... wasn't conservative enough. She felt the right wing has grabbed Bush and is off and running." Gonzales picked Owen for the spot instead.

Gonzales has also taken political ownership of a host of other conservative issues. He wrote and publicly defended Bush's executive order on military tribunals. He advised Bush not to grant prisoner-of-war status to Al Qaeda prisoners at Guantanamo Bay. His office has also led a multifront campaign to expand the authority of the executive branch and insulate the administration from records requests, whether they come from Congress, the General Accounting Office, or presidential scholars.

But establishing these conservative bona fides has come at a cost. Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee bitterly complain about Gonzales's unwillingness to consult with them over judges. They warn there will be payback if he's ever nominated to the Supreme Court and have already developed several potential lines of attack. Some Democrats argue that Gonzales is a lightweight being steamrolled by a right-wing staff. "Some think he's out of his league," says a top Judiciary Committee staffer, noting that Gonzales's deputy, Flanigan, was the lead White House negotiator on the anti-terrorism bill. Others make essentially the opposite case: that Gonzales has not only played a critical role in Bush's most conservative and controversial policies, but also that he has been the key figure in shielding the decision-making process that produced them from public review.

Finally there is Enron, the Democratic gift that keeps on giving. Gonzales spent 13 years as a lawyer with Houston-based Vinson & Elkins (V & E), now best known as Enron's law firm. He worked in the business, real estate, energy section--known colloquially as "the deals group"--and one of his colleagues there was Joseph Dilg, for one decade the firm's chief liaison to Enron. Dilg is a main defendant in at least one massive Enron-related lawsuit charging that V & E conducted and participated in an illegal enterprise. National Journal has reported that Gonzales had an attorney-client relationship with Enron, but he has never explained exactly what it was. While at V & E, Gonzales also got to know Kenneth Lay: The two worked together on a 1990 economic summit in Houston and on the 1992 Republican convention. And when Gonzales ran for reelection to the Texas Supreme Court (Texas Supreme Court justices are initially appointed but must go before the voters to earn additional terms), he took $15,000 in campaign donations from the political action committees of Enron and V & E. Perhaps most questionable is that despite these connections, Gonzales has declined to recuse himself from the response to the various Enron-related inquiries and investigations currently embroiling the White House, including Senator Joseph Lieberman's widening probe.

Ultimately, though, much of the Democratic brief against Gonzales is weak. Gonzales left V & E in 1995--before the firm appears to have started most of its suspect work for Enron. And the conflicting nature of the other Democratic lines of attack--Gonzales the conservative mastermind, Gonzales the moderate dupe--is a pretty clear indication that neither characterization is a slam dunk.

The Republican case against Gonzales, however, is another matter. Many conservatives have not been reassured by his rightward lurch over the past year and half. Indeed, they often make their own version of the "moderate controlled by conservatives" argument--suggesting that in his current post Gonzales is simply hemmed in by the presence of so many conservative staffers and the expectation of loyalty to administration policies. "I think that Justice Gonzales was the real Al Gonzales, and White House Counsel Gonzales is the loyal Bush administration aide," says one prominent conservative. Adds another, "I have no reason to believe that he has changed his views from when he was on the court."

For many on the right, his opinion in Jane Doe 1 is all they know about Gonzales--and all they really need to know. "I've been told he voted the wrong way on a parental-notification bill on abortion," says Farris. "That would make him absolutely unacceptable to the pro-life community." Other conservatives worry about Gonzales's views on affirmative action, an issue the Supreme Court is likely to tackle in the next few years. Gonzales has said, for example, that Bush is building an administration that "looks like America"--the same phrase famously used by Bill Clinton. Roger Clegg, an affirmative action opponent at the Center for Equal Opportunity, had a heated exchange with Gonzales on race at a Heritage Foundation event in Philadelphia not long ago. The administration is "not making appointments based strictly on the merits," says Clegg. "They are being driven by racial and ethnic decisions. That's wrong, and that's objectionable. To the extent he really believes that's an OK thing to do, that's troubling as a potential Supreme Court justice." Adds Ed Blum of the conservative American Civil Rights Institute, "We're all very nervous about Al Gonzales and how he sees the issue of race and public policy." Blum, who knows Gonzales from Texas, saw him speak recently at a monthly meeting of the Federalist Society held at Tony Cheng's Mongolian Restaurant in Washington. Gonzales, says Blum, believes "that a person's race or ethnicity does have a bearing on who that person is, and that is anathema to this movement. He has bought into the bedrock argument that the other side makes."

The irony, of course, is that Bush believes the same thing. Indeed, when Bush first appointed Gonzales to the Texas Supreme Court, a reporter asked the then-governor if race had played a role in his decision. "Of course it mattered what his ethnicity is," Bush replied. And more broadly, the question conservatives now pose about the "real" Alberto Gonzales--is he the moderate he was in Texas or the conservative he has been in Washington?--could well be asked about Bush himself. Bush, too, one might argue, has been surrounded since taking office by a permanent Beltway conservative establishment that has made his presidency more ideological than his governorship. Conservatives' assessment of what Gonzales would do if given the independence of a Supreme Court seat is, in some ways then, an assessment of what Bush himself might do--were conservatives not there to keep him in line.

And it's precisely because of those doubts that many on the right would prefer to see Bush choose someone like Miguel Estrada, the ideologically committed right-winger currently up for the D.C. Circuit. Estrada, they figure, could be confirmed for the same reason as Gonzales: Democrats wouldn't dare torpedo the first Hispanic nominee. And he'd be a reliable Thomas-Scalia ally on the Court.

But Estrada doesn't have Gonzales's close relationship to Bush--"more like a brother than a lawyer," says a friend of both men. And most close Bush-watchers assume that the president, if given his druthers, favors loyalty over ideological purity.

Unlike Gonzales, Estrada has yet to spend time on the bench--a lack of experience that could make confirmation more difficult. Moreover, Gonzales has one other advantage over Estrada and other potential rivals: As White House counsel, he'll be the one leading the search for a new justice when a vacancy occurs. And the last time Bush put someone else in charge of this sort of hunt, Dick Cheney ended up picking himself.

STATEMENT OF
ERIC SOLOMON
DEPUTY ASSISTANT SECRETARY (REGULATORY AFFAIRS)
DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON OVERSIGHT
COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. Chairman, Mr. Coyne, and Members of the Subcommittee:

I appreciate the opportunity to discuss with you today the Administration's program of tax incentives designed to foster the revitalization of economically disadvantaged communities. I would like to start by thanking the Subcommittee for holding a hearing on this important issue.

The President is firmly committed to directing public funds toward developing economically distressed communities. However, the President also believes that there is a limit on what the Federal government can accomplish directly. Consequently, the President's Budget for FY 2003 contains initiatives to encourage further involvement by individuals, businesses, and faith-based and community-based organizations in working to eliminate pockets of economic distress wherever they exist in this country. In particular, the Administration proposes making the brownfields tax incentive permanent. Under current law, this incentive is scheduled to expire on December 31, 2003. The revenue cost of a permanent extension is estimated to be $1.1 billion over five years. The Administration also proposes the creation of a tax credit, similar in design to the low-income housing tax credit, for developers of affordable single-family housing. The credit would take effect in 2003 and cost $2.4 billion over 5 years.

Furthermore, thanks in large part to the leadership shown by the Ways and Means Committee, many of the Administration's tax proposals have been enacted or are included in legislation that the House passed last summer. Administration tax proposals benefiting low-income individuals or distressed communities that have already been enacted include the following: (1) extension of the work opportunity tax credit through 2003; (2) extension of the welfare to work credit through 2003; (3) extension of authority to issue qualified zone academy bonds through 2003; (4) providing tax-exempt private activity bonds to finance reconstruction in the area surrounding the World Trade Center in New York City devastated by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks; (5) creation of a new 10 percent income tax bracket; and (6) doubling of the child tax credit to $1000.

We look forward to working with this Subcommittee as it considers the remainder of the Administration's initiatives related to encouraging community renewal.

The remainder of my testimony will provide a more detailed discussion of current law and the Administration's budget proposals.

INCENTIVES FOR DISTRESSED COMMUNITIES

Current law tax incentives for distressed communities

The Internal Revenue Code currently includes numerous incentives to encourage the development of economically distressed areas. They include tax incentives for businesses located in empowerment zones, enterprise communities and renewal communities, the new markets tax credit, qualified zone academy bonds, certain categories of tax-exempt bonds, special incentives for investment and employment on Indian reservations, the low-income housing tax credit, the work opportunity tax credit, and the deductibility of environmental remediation costs.

Empowerment Zones

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA 93) authorized a demonstration project under which nine empowerment zones, six in urban areas and three in rural areas, were designated through a competitive application process. State and local governments nominated distressed geographic areas, which were selected on the strength of their strategic plans for economic and social revitalization. The urban areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The rural areas were designated by the Secretary of the Department of Agriculture. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 added two urban Round I zones and authorized 20 Round II zones (15 urban and five rural). The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized nine Round III zones (seven urban and two rural). There are currently 30 urban zones and 10 rural zones. Designation of Round I, Round II or Round III status generally will apply until December 31, 2009.

Qualifying businesses in empowerment zones are eligible for certain tax benefits. These benefits include the following: (1) a 20-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional expensing for qualified zone property; and (3) tax-exempt financing for certain qualifying zone facilities. In addition, taxpayers may elect to defer capital gains from certain sales and re-investments in qualified empowerment zone assets. Taxpayers may also exclude certain gain from the sale of qualifying empowerment zone stock that is held for more than five years.

The wage credit provides a 20 percent subsidy on the first $15,000 of annual wages paid to residents of empowerment zones by businesses located in these communities, if substantially all of the employee's services are performed within the zone. By lowering the cost of labor, the wage credit encourages new businesses to locate in zones, and encourages those businesses already there to expand, providing jobs and opportunities for self-sufficiency for zone residents.

Enterprise zone businesses are allowed to expense the cost of certain property up to an additional $35,000 above the amounts generally available under section 179 of the Internal Revenue Code. In addition, only 50 percent of the cost of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing. This incentive is designed to increase investment in machines, computers and other tangible business property within empowerment zones by small businesses.

Enterprise zone businesses are also permitted access to a special class of tax-exempt private activity bonds. Limits are placed on the amount of such financing available to each zone. Rural zones are allowed $60 million of such financing, urban zones with less than 100,000 residents are allowed $130 million of such financing and urban zones with at least 100,000 residents are allowed $230 million of such financing. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 added two provisions to limit capital gains taxation on certain investments within empowerment zones to encourage greater private investment in the zones. Taxpayers are allowed to roll over the capital gain from the sale of qualified empowerment zone assets held more than one year, if a replacement qualified empowerment zone asset is purchased in the same zone as the asset sold. Qualified empowerment zone assets include certain stock and partnership interests in an enterprise zone business and certain tangible property used in an enterprise zone business. This provision applies to assets acquired after December 21, 2000.

In addition, taxpayers other than corporations are allowed to exclude 60 percent of the gain on the sale or trade of qualified small business stock held more than 5 years, if the business also qualifies as an enterprise zone business. Taxpayers are normally allowed to exclude 50 percent of the gain on the sale of qualified small business stock. This provision applies to stock acquired after December 21, 2000.

Enterprise Communities

In addition to Empowerment Zones, OBRA 93 provided for the designation of 95 Enterprise Communities, 65 in urban areas and 30 in rural areas. Qualified businesses in these communities are entitled to the same favorable tax-exempt financing benefits as those in empowerment zones. Many of these enterprise communities have subsequently been re-designated as part of an empowerment zone or a renewal community and are no longer designated as an enterprise community. Currently, 68 enterprise communities qualify for tax-exempt financing, 40 in urban areas and 28 in rural areas.

Renewal Communities

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 authorized 40 renewal communities, at least 12 of which must be in rural areas. The renewal communities were chosen through a competitive application process similar to that used for empowerment zones. The 40 communities were recently designated by the Department of Housing and Urban Development and that designation continues through 2009.

Taxpayers may utilize the renewal community tax benefits beginning this year. These benefits include the following: (1) a 15-percent wage credit for qualifying wages; (2) additional section 179 expensing for qualified renewal property; (3) a commercial revitalization deduction; and (4) an exclusion for capital gains on qualified community assets held more than 5 years.

The wage credit and increased section 179 expensing operate in a similar fashion as in empowerment zones. The primary difference is that the wage credit is smaller, equal to 15 percent for the first $10,000 of wages.

The commercial revitalization deduction is designed to foster the development or rehabilitation of commercial real estate in renewal communities. This deduction is applicable to certain nonresidential real property or other property functionally related to nonresidential real property. A taxpayer may elect to either: (1) deduct one-half of any qualified revitalization expenditures that would otherwise be capitalized for any qualified revitalization building in the tax year the building is placed in service, or (2) amortize all such expenditures over a 120-month period beginning with the month the building is placed in service. A qualified revitalization building is any building and its structural components placed in service by the taxpayer in a renewal community. If the building is new, the original use of the building must begin with the taxpayer. If the building is not new, the taxpayer must substantially rehabilitate the building and then place it in service. The total amount of qualified revitalization expenditures for any building cannot be more than the smaller of $10 million or the amount allocated to the building by the commercial revitalization agency for the state in which the building is located. A $12 million dollar cap on allowed commercial revitalization expenditures is placed on each renewal community annually.

In order to help stimulate private investment in renewal communities, qualified capital gain earned on qualified community assets is excluded from gross income. A qualified community asset includes stock or a partnership interest in a qualified renewal community business and certain tangible property used in a renewal community business. To qualify for the capital gain exclusion, the asset must be purchased after December 31, 2001 and before January 1, 2010, and it must be held for at least five years.

District of Columbia Incentives

A special set of incentives was enacted in 1997 to help redevelop the District of Columbia. The Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 included tax incentives for both residents and businesses to locate in the District of Columbia. A $5,000 income tax credit for first-time home purchasers was designed to attract new homeowners to the District. A second set of incentives, similar to those provided in empowerment zones, was intended to encourage the establishment of new businesses in the District as well as new investment in existing enterprises.

Subject to certain income restrictions, the $5,000 credit is available to first-time purchasers of a principal residence in the District of Columbia who have not owned houses in the District during the year preceding the purchase. Although the credit was initially available for property purchased through the end of 2000, subsequent legislation extended the incentive through the end of 2003.

Other tax incentives offer a range of economic inducements to businesses operating in the more economically disadvantaged parts of the District. With the exception of a provision related to the sale of capital assets, these incentives are available only to businesses located either within the boundaries of the D.C. Enterprise Community, or located in census tracts elsewhere in the

District where the poverty rate exceeds 20 percent. These areas are collectively known as the DC Zone. With certain minor adjustments, businesses in the DC Zone may claim the same wage credit, expensing of certain capital investment, and tax exempt bond financing as businesses in an empowerment zone. In addition, as in renewal communities, capital gains realized from the sale of certain assets are excludable from the income of the seller. For the purposes of this provision alone, the DC Zone is expanded to include all census tracts in the District in which the poverty rate exceeds 10 percent.

New York Liberty Zone

While the area around the World Trade Center in New York City would not have been described as an economically distressed community prior to the extraordinary events of September 11, 2001, the incredible destruction of life and property in that area due to the terrorist attacks prompted both the Administration and the Congress to support tax incentives targeted to helping New York City recover economically. I commend you, Mr. Chairman, and other members of the Ways and Means Committee for the leadership you exhibited in helping to enact the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Some of the tax incentives provided in the New York Liberty Zone are similar to the tax incentives offered in empowerment zones, while others were designed to meet the unique challenges facing New York City in the aftermath of the September 11 terrorist attacks. As in empowerment zones, qualified businesses are allowed a wage credit, increased section 179 expensing, and access to tax-exempt financing. Provisions specific to the New York Liberty Zone include 30 percent expensing of certain property, accelerated depreciation of qualified leasehold improvement property, extension of the replacement period for certain property involuntarily converted, and an additional advance refunding of bonds for facilities located in New York City.

The wage credit is allowed for certain employees who work in New York City through an extension of the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC). The new targeted group for the WOTC includes employees of businesses located in the New York Liberty Zone if substantially all of the employee's services for the business are performed within the New York Liberty Zone. In addition, the new targeted group includes employees of businesses that relocated from the New York Liberty Zone due to the physical destruction or damage of their workplaces by the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks to another location within New York City, provided that substantially all of the employee's services are performed within New York City. Only businesses with an average of 200 or less employees during the taxable year are eligible for the credit. The credit is effective for wages paid or incurred for work performed during calendar year 2002 or 2003.

An increase in section 179 expensing of $35,000 is allowed for property placed in service by taxpayers after September 10, 2001, and before January 1, 2007, if the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone commences with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 and substantially all of the use of the property is in the New York Liberty Zone. As in empowerment zones and renewal communities, only 50 percent of the value of such property counts toward the aggregate annual limit on section 179 expensing.

The Governor of New York State and the Mayor of New York City are each given an allowance to issue up to $4 billion of tax-exempt private activity bonds before January 1, 2005. The bonds may be used to finance construction and rehabilitation of nonresidential real property, residential rental real property, and public utility property in the New York Liberty Zone. The Governor and the Mayor may each designate up to $1 billion of such bond proceeds for the acquisition, construction, and rehabilitation of certain commercial real property located outside the New York Liberty Zone and within New York City. These bonds are not subject to the State's volume cap on private activity bonds.

A taxpayer is allowed an additional first-year depreciation deduction equal to 30 percent of the adjusted basis of qualified New York Liberty Zone property. In order to qualify for this partial expensing, the property must be (1) a property with a MACRS recovery period of 20 years or less, (2) computer software other than computer software covered by section 197, (3) water utility property, or (4) certain nonresidential real property and residential rental property. Nonresidential real property and residential rental property is eligible for the partial expensing only to the extent such property rehabilitates real property damaged, or replaces real property destroyed or condemned, as a result of the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001. This provision applies neither to property that would otherwise qualify for 30 percent expensing under section 168(k), nor to qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property. Furthermore, to qualify for the partial expensing, substantially all of the use of the property must be in the New York Liberty Zone and the original use of the property in the New York Liberty Zone must commence with the taxpayer after September 10, 2001 (except for certain leased property). Finally, qualified property must be purchased by the taxpayer after September 10, 2001, and placed in service before January 1, 2007, or for nonresidential property and residential rental property, January 1, 2009.

Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property placed in service after September 10, 2001 and before January 1, 2007 is treated as 5-year property for the purposes of section 168 depreciation rules, with deductions taken using the straight-line method. Under the alternative depreciation system (section 168(g)), such property has a class life of 9 years. Qualified New York Liberty Zone leasehold improvement property is qualified leasehold improvement property as defined in section 168(e)(6) that is placed in service in the New York Liberty Zone.

When property used in a trade or business is damaged or destroyed, the taxpayer may deduct any loss sustained to the extent that the loss is not compensated by insurance or otherwise. When insurance or other compensation results in a gain from the damage or destruction of property, then the taxpayer may elect to reduce the current recognition of gain by purchasing a replacement property within a specific time period which is similar or related in use to the damaged or destroyed property (section 1033(a)). For property in the New York Liberty Zone that was involuntarily converted as a result of the terrorist attacks on September 11, 2001, the replacement period is extended from 2 years to 5 years if substantially all of the use of the replacement property is in New York City.

Finally, certain bonds for facilities located in New York City are given one additional advance refunding. There is an aggregate limit of $9 billion advance refunding bonds that may be issued before January 1, 2005.

New Markets Tax Credit

The new markets tax credit was created by the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 to encourage capital investments in businesses that are located in low-income communities. The new markets tax credit provides a tax credit to investors who make "qualified equity investments" in privately-managed investment vehicles called "community development entities," or "CDEs." The CDEs are required to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in low-income communities. For example, CDEs may make loans or capital investments in companies that operate in low-income communities.[1]

Eligible investors in a CDE are entitled to claim tax credits over a seven-year period beginning on the date of the initial investment. The value of the credits to investors will be about 30 percent of the amount of the qualified equity investment on a present value basis.

In order for an entity to qualify as a CDE, it must meet three requirements. First, the primary mission of the entity must be to serve or provide investment capital for low-income communities or low-income persons. Second, the entity must maintain accountability to residents of low-income communities through their representation on the entity's governing or advisory board. Third, the entity must be certified as a CDE by the Treasury Department's Community Development Financial Institutions Fund (CDFI Fund).

In order for a CDE to issue qualified equity investments with respect to which new markets tax credits may be claimed, the CDE must apply for and receive from the CDFI Fund an allocation of credit authority for those investments.

A total of $15 billion of equity investments will be able to qualify for this authority on a phased-in basis between 2001 and 2007. The CDFI Fund will allocate this authority among CDEs based on a competitive application process. In making these allocations, the CDFI Fund is required to give priority to any entity (1) with a record of having successfully provided capital or technical assistance to disadvantaged businesses or communities, or (2) which intends to invest substantially all of the proceeds of the qualified equity investments in one or more businesses in which persons unrelated to the entity hold the majority equity interest. [In the next couple of weeks, the CDFI Fund will issue a notice seeking applications from CDEs for allocation of credit authority.]

Qualified Zone Academy Bonds

State and local governments can issue qualified zone academy bonds (QZABs) to fund the improvement of certain eligible public schools. An eligible holder of a QZAB receives annual Federal income tax credits. These annual credits compensate the holder for lending money and, therefore, are treated like taxable interest payments for Federal tax purposes.

[1] For these purposes, "low-income community" is defined as any population census tract if (1) the poverty rate for the tract is at least 20 percent, or (2) the median family income for the tract does not exceed 80 percent of statewide median family income (or, in the case of metropolitan areas, metropolitan area median family income, if greater).

Eligible holders are banks, insurance companies, and corporations actively engaged in the business of lending money. The credit rate for a QZAB is set on its day of sale by reference to credit rates established by the Department of the Treasury. The maximum term of a QZAB issued during any month is determined by reference to the adjusted applicable Federal rate (AFR) published by the Internal Revenue Service for the month in which the bond is issued.

This provision was enacted in the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997, which established authority to issue $400 million of QZABs per year for 1998 and 1999. This authority was extended to 2000 and 2001 by the Ticket to Work and Work Incentives Improvement Act of 1999. The Administration proposed that this authority be extended through 2003, which was accomplished in the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002. The annual cap is allocated among the States in proportion to their respective populations of individuals with incomes below the poverty line. Unused authority to issue QZABs may be carried forward for two years (three years for authority arising in 1998 and 1999) after the year for which the authority was established.

A number of requirements must be met for a bond to be treated as a QZAB. First, the bond must be issued pursuant to an allocation of bond authority from the issuer's State educational agency. Second, at least 95 percent of the bond proceeds must be used for an eligible purpose at a qualified zone academy. Eligible purposes include rehabilitating school facilities, acquiring equipment, developing course materials, or training teachers. A qualified zone academy is a public school (or an academic program within a public school) that is designed in cooperation with business and is either (1) located in an empowerment zone or enterprise community, or (2) attended by students at least 35 percent of whom are estimated to be eligible for free or reduced-cost lunches under the National School Lunch Act. Third, private entities must have promised to contribute to the qualified zone academy certain property or services with a present value equal to at least 10 percent of the bond proceeds.

Mortgage Revenue Bonds

Mortgage revenue bonds ("MRBs") are bonds issued by or on behalf of a State or local government to finance the purchase, or qualifying rehabilitation or improvement, of single-family, owner-occupied homes located within the jurisdiction of the issuer of the bonds. Interest on MRBs is excluded from gross income for federal income tax purposes if they meet the requirements for "qualified mortgage bonds" or "qualified veterans' mortgage bonds." In addition, in some circumstances, "mortgage credit certificates" may be issued as an alternative to qualified mortgage bonds.

In general, qualified mortgage bonds must finance residences for first-time home buyers, the purchase price of the residence may not exceed certain amounts, and the purchaser must satisfy certain income limitations. In addition, certain special rules apply with respect to "targeted areas." A targeted area is defined as (1) a census tract in which 70 percent or more of the families have incomes that are 80 percent or less of the Statewide median family income, or (2) an area of chronic economic distress designated by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development. At least 20 percent of the lendable proceeds of each qualified mortgage bond issue (but not more than 40 percent of the average mortgage activity in the targeted area) is required to be made available for owner-financing in targeted areas for a period of at least one year.

The volume of certain tax-exempt private activity bonds, including qualified mortgage bonds, that States and local governments may issue in each calendar year is limited by State-wide volume limits. The current annual volume limits are $50 per resident of the State or $150 million if greater. The current limits increase to $75 per resident of each State or $225 million, if greater, beginning in calendar year 2007. The increase is ratably phased in, beginning with $55 per capita or $165 million, if greater, in calendar year 2003.

Qualified governmental units may elect to exchange all or any portion of their private activity bond volume limitation for authority to issue mortgage credit certificates ("MCCs"). MCCs entitle home buyers to nonrefundable income tax credits for a specified percentage of interest paid on mortgage loans on their principal residences. MCCs generally are subject to the same eligibility and targeted area requirements as qualified mortgage bonds.

Indian Employment Credit

Unfortunately, many residents of Native American communities continue to struggle economically. The Indian Employment Credit provides an incentive for job growth in these communities. Employers may claim an Indian Employment Credit on the qualified wages and employee health insurance costs paid to an enrolled member of an Indian tribe in compensation for services performed on or near a reservation. The credit amount is equal to 20 percent of the excess of the employer's current year qualified wages and employee health insurance costs over the sum of the corresponding amounts paid or incurred by the employer during calendar year 1993. The aggregate amount of qualified wages and health insurance costs may not exceed $20,000 per person per year. This incentive was due to expire at the end of 2003, but has been extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Depreciation of Property Used on Indian Reservations

Another tax incentive that encourages economic development on Indian reservations is the accelerated depreciation of qualified Indian reservation property. This accelerated depreciation is accomplished through the use of shorter recovery periods for certain property. In order to qualify for this provision, a property must (1) be used by the taxpayer predominantly in the active conduct of a trade or business within an Indian reservation, (2) not be used outside the Indian reservation on a regular basis, (3) not be acquired from a person related to the taxpayer, and (4) not be used for the purpose of certain gaming activities. In addition, property for which the alternative depreciation system is applied is not eligible for this provision. This provision was scheduled to expire for property placed in service after 2003, but was extended through 2004 by the recently enacted Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

Low-income housing tax credit

Taxpayers who invest in qualified low-income rental units are eligible for the low-income housing tax credit (LIHTC). The LIHTC may be claimed over a 10-year period for a portion of the cost of rental housing occupied by tenants having incomes below specified levels. The credit percentage for newly constructed housing that is not federally subsidized is adjusted monthly by the Internal Revenue Service so that generally the 10 annual credit amounts have a present value of 70 percent of qualified basis. The credit percentage for new buildings that are federally subsidized and for existing buildings is calculated to have a present value of 30 percent of qualified basis. In general, the aggregate first-year credit authority allocated to each State is $1.75 per capita in 2002 and will be indexed for inflation in following years. Tax credits are allocated to particular projects by State or local housing agencies pursuant to publicly announced plans for allocation. Authority to allocate credits may be carried forward by agencies to the following calendar year. Unused credit allocations may be returned to an agency for reallocation. Credit allocations may revert to the agency if less than 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected qualifying basis is expended within 6 months after receiving the allocation. Authority not used in a timely manner reverts to a national pool for distribution to States requesting additional authority. Generally, a qualifying building must be placed in service in the year the credit is allocated unless at least 10 percent of the taxpayer's reasonably expected basis in the property is expended in the year of allocation or within 6 months after the allocation date. Rules are provided for the allocation of costs to individual units in multi-unit projects and to property that is part of a project but used for purposes other than rental housing. The tax credit period begins with the taxable year in which a qualified building is placed in service (or, in certain circumstances, the succeeding taxable year). Credits are recaptured if the required number of units is not rented to qualifying tenants for a period of 15 years.

Work Opportunity Tax Credit

Employers are generally entitled to the work opportunity tax credit (WOTC) for the first $6,000 of wages paid to several targeted groups of economically disadvantaged workers or workers with disabilities. For workers employed between 120 and 400 hours, the credit rate is 25 percent of qualified wages. For workers employed over 400 hours, the credit rate is 40 percent. Employers must reduce their deduction for wages paid by the amount of the credit claimed. Current WOTC target groups include qualified: (1) recipients of Temporary Assistance to Needy Families; (2) veterans; (3) ex-felons; (4) high-risk youth; (5) participants in State-sponsored vocational rehabilitation programs; (6) summer youth; (7) food stamp recipients; and (8) Supplemental Security Income recipients.

A qualified high-risk youth employee listed above is an individual at least 18 years old but less than 25, who lives within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. A qualified summer youth employee works for the employer between May 1 and September 15, is 16 or 17 years old, and resides within an empowerment zone, enterprise community, or renewal community. The limit on the wages of a summer youth employee that qualify for the credit is reduced to $3,000.

At the time the Administration proposed the FY 2003 budget, the WOTC was scheduled to expire at the end of 2001. The Administration proposed that the WOTC be extended through 2003. This was accomplished by the Job Creation and Worker Assistance Act of 2002.

The House has just passed (is considering?) the Encouraging Work and Supporting Marriage Act of 2002. The bill would combine the WOTC and the welfare to work (WTW) credit by making persons eligible for WTW a WOTC target group with special rules. The WTW credit enables employers to claim a tax credit for eligible wages paid to certain long-term welfare recipients. The changes contained in the House bill will simplify the computation of the credit for employers that hire members of the economically disadvantaged targeted groups. We commend the proposed tax simplification.

A brownfield site is real property, the expansion, redevelopment, or reuse of which may be complicated by the presence or potential presence of a hazardous substance, pollutant, or contaminant. Because lenders, investors, and developers fear the high and uncertain costs of cleanup, they avoid developing contaminated sites. Blighted areas of brownfields hinder the redevelopment of affected communities and create safety and health risks for residents. The obstacles in cleaning these sites, such as regulatory barriers, lack of private investment, and contamination and remediation issues, are being addressed through a wide range of Federal programs, including the tax incentive for brownfields remediation.

To encourage the cleanup of contaminated sites, the brownfields tax incentive permits the current deduction of certain environmental remediation costs. Environmental remediation costs qualify for current deduction if the expenditures would otherwise be capitalized (generally costs incurred to clean up land and groundwater that increase the value of the property) and are paid or incurred in connection with the abatement or control of hazardous substances at a qualified contaminated site. A qualified contaminated site generally is any property (1) that is held for use in a trade or business, for the production of income, or as inventory; (2) at or on which there has been a release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance; and (3) that is certified by the appropriate State environmental agency as to the release, threat of release, or disposal of a hazardous substance. Sites that are identified on the national priorities list under the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA) do not qualify as qualified contaminated sites. The brownfields tax incentive applies to expenditures paid or incurred before January 1, 2004.

Administration budget proposals

The President's Budget for FY 2003 includes two proposals to improve upon these tax incentives and further encourage development in economically distressed communities.

Brownfields remediation costs

The Administration believes that encouraging environmental remediation is an important national goal. The brownfields provision encourages the cleanup of contaminated brownfields, thereby enabling them to be brought into productive use in the economy and mitigating potential harms to public health. The current-law incentive was made temporary to encourage faster cleanup of brownfields. Experience has shown, however, that many taxpayers are unable to take advantage of the incentive because environmental remediation often extends over a number of years. For that reason, the President's budget proposed a permanent extension of the brownfields tax incentive. Extending the special treatment accorded to brownfields on a permanent basis would remove doubt among taxpayers as to the future deductibility of remediation expenditures and would promote the goal of encouraging environmental remediation. The Administration's brownfields proposal was introduced by Mr. Coyne and Mr. Weller as H.R. 1439.

The revenue cost of the proposal is estimated to be $1.1 billion over FY 2003-2007. Treasury estimates that the proposal, at a $300 million annual cost, will leverage approximately $2 billion per year in private investment.

Single-family housing tax credit

The Administration believes that quality of life in distressed neighborhoods can be improved by increasing home ownership. Existing buildings in these neighborhoods often need extensive renovation before they can provide decent owner-occupied housing. Renovation may not occur because the costs involved exceed the prices at which the housing units could be sold. Similarly, the costs of new construction may exceed their market value. Properties will sit vacant and neighborhoods will remain blighted unless the gap between development costs and market prices can be filled. The Administration has proposed the creation of a single-family housing tax credit (SFHTC) to expand the possibility of home ownership for low-income families.

First-year credit authority of $1.75 per resident would be made available annually to States (including U.S. possessions) beginning in calendar year 2003. The per capita amount would be indexed for inflation beginning in 2004. Pursuant to a plan of allocation, State or local housing credit agencies would award first-year credits to housing units comprising a project for the development of single-family housing in census tracts with median incomes of 80 percent or less of area median income, based initially upon 2000 census data. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply regarding carry forward and return of unused credits and a national pool for unused credits. Credits allocated to a project would revert to the agency unless expenditures equal to 10 percent or more of reasonably expected qualifying costs were made within 6 months after receipt of the allocation. Units in condominiums and cooperatives could qualify as single-family housing. Credits would be awarded as a fixed amount for individual units comprising a project. The present value of the credits with respect to a unit, as of the beginning of the credit period (described below), could not exceed 50 percent of the qualifying costs of the unit. For these purposes, present value would be determined based on the mid-term Applicable Federal Rate in effect for the date the agency allocated credits to the project. Rules similar to the current law rules for the LIHTC would apply to determine eligible costs of individual units. The Treasury Department would have the authority to promulgate necessary reporting requirements.

The taxpayer (developer or investor partnership) owning the housing unit immediately prior to the date of sale to a qualified buyer (or, if later, the date a certificate of occupancy was issued) would be eligible to claim SFHTCs over a 5-year period beginning on that date. No credits with respect to a housing unit would be available unless the unit was sold within a 1-year period beginning on the date a certificate of occupancy is issued with respect to that unit.

Eligible homebuyers would have incomes at 80 percent (70 percent for families with less than 3 members) or less of applicable median family income. They would not have to be first-time homebuyers. Homebuyers would be subject to recapture provisions in certain circumstances. In particular, recapture rules would apply if the homebuyer (or a subsequent buyer) sold the property to a nonqualified buyer within 3 years after the date of initial sale of the unit. The recapture tax would equal the lesser of (1) 80 percent of the gain upon resale and (2) a recapture amount. The recapture amount would equal the value of the credits allocated to the housing unit being resold, reduced by 1/36th of that value for each month between the initial sale and the sale to a nonqualified buyer. No recapture provision would apply to taxpayers eligible to claim SFHTCs. If a housing unit for which any credit is claimed were converted to rental property by the initial homebuyer within the first 5 years following the purchase, no deductions for depreciation or property taxes could be claimed with respect to that unit during that time period.

The proposal would be effective beginning with first-year credit allocations for calendar year 2003. The revenue cost of this proposal is expected to be $2.4 billion over FY 2003-2007.

Administration spending proposals for distressed communities

In addition to the tax incentives just described, the Administration's FY 2003 Budget contains several initiatives on the spending side to revitalize economically disadvantaged communities. These initiatives include the following: (1) a $100 million increase for the HOME block grant, a flexible program that localities can tailor to their particular housing needs; (2) reforms to the Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) program so that more money will be targeted at communities with the greatest economic need, plus an increase of $95 million for the CDBG formula program; (3) a four-fold increase in the President's Down Payment Assistance Initiative from its 2002 level to $200 million to provide matching grants to state and local governments to provide down payment assistance to first-time homeowners; (4) a three-fold increase in funding to $65 million for the Self-Help Homeownership Opportunity program, which helps families realize homeownership through sweat equity; and (5) funding for four competitive grant programs targeted at faith- and community-based organizations that can provide innovative services, including $100 million for the Compassion Capital Fund to help charitable organizations start or expand, $25 million for mentoring children of prisoners, $20 million for promoting responsible fatherhood, and $10 million for maternity group homes.

CONCLUSION

I would like to thank Mr. Houghton, Mr. Coyne and the members of the Subcommittee for providing the chance today to discuss these important issues. I hope that, working together, we can ensure that all Americans share in our country's prosperity and have even greater opportunity in the future. While this concludes my prepared testimony. I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

The Honorable J. Dennis Hastert
Speaker of the House of Representatives
United States House of Representatives
Washington, D.C. 20515 [Identical Letter to the President of the Senate]

Dear Mr. Speaker:

I am pleased to transmit herewith a draft bill "To amend the Customs user fee statute, and for other purposes." Specifically, the bill would amend section 13031 of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act (COBRA), as amended, (19 U.S.C. 58c), to implement the President's FY 2003 Budget as it relates to COBRA.

The bill would increase air and sea passenger user fees. Excess fees, as determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, would be deposited in the Customs User Fee Account and would remain available until expended for reimbursement of Customs operations costs not otherwise reimbursed under COBRA, as available to the extent provided for in appropriations Acts.

It would be appreciated if you were to lay the draft bill before the House of Representatives. An identical draft bill has been transmitted to the President of the Senate.

The Office of Management and Budget has advised that the transmittal of this draft bill is in accord with the President's program.

Sincerely,

David D. Aufhauser

Enclosure

A BILL

T To amend the Customs user fee statute, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That

(1) in subsection (a)(5)--

in subparagraph (A),

(A) by deleting "$5." and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"(1) $5 base fee, and

"(2) subject to subsection (f)(7), an additional fee of $6."; and

in subparagraph (B),

(B) by deleting "$1.75." and inserting in lieu thereof as follows:

"(1) $1.75 base fee, and

"(2) subject to subsection (f)(7), an additional fee of $0.25."; and

(2) in subsection (f)--

(A) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking "and";

(B) in paragraph (1)(B), by striking the period at the end and inserting instead ", and";

(C) by inserting at the end of paragraph (1) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) the portion of such fees that is determined by the Secretary to be increased amounts under paragraph (7)."

(D) in paragraph (3)(A), by striking "paragraph (5)" and inserting "paragraphs (5) and (7)"; and

(E) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(7) any additional amounts from the increase in fees under subsection (a)(5) (A)(2) and (B)(2) shall be collected and available for obligation only to the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations acts.".

Good morning Chairman Houghton, Ranking Member Coyne, and distinguished members of the Subcommittee. My name is Roy Bernardi. I am the Assistant Secretary for Community Planning and Development in the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Department is pleased that this hearing is occurring in conjunction with the Community Renewal Implementation Conference. Over 400 people from Empowerment Zones and Renewal Communities have gathered to learn how Federal tax incentives and community partnerships can encourage economic development.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 passed in December of 2000. It provided for 12 rural and 28 urban Renewal Communities (RC) and set forth 2 rural and 7 urban Round III Empowerment Zones (EZ). The new legislation provided for measures that included a $22 billion package of tax benefits.

In the Fall of 2001, HUD received over 100 Renewal Community applications from 35 states. Our eligibility and completeness review yielded 77 qualifying applications. The enthusiasm for this program is evidence that our neighbors from coast to coast are anxious to reduce poverty through tax incentives. In January, Secretary Martinez was able to announce 40 RCs with the most severe economic distress after 20 former Enterprise Communities exercised their designation preference. Unlike many grant competitions, Congress wisely mandated that the applications be judged strictly by objective criteria. All qualifying applications needed to have a set of continuous census tracts with at least 20% poverty and 9.4% average unemployment.

Unlike most Federal programs, which provide cash grants for narrowly defined projects, HUD requires Renewal Communities to adhere to four of six required goals to promote economic growth at the local level. Renewal Communities commit to a combination of reducing local taxes, improving local services, reducing crime, reducing local government requirements, involving community partners, and soliciting in-kind donations. In return, the U.S. Treasury agrees to reduce the Federal tax burden through the Renewal Community Employment Credit, Commercial Revitalization Deduction, Zero Percent Capital Gain,s and Increased Section 179 Deduction for Renewal Community Businesses. The tax incentives are the beginning of the strategic alliances that are being formed in our 40 Renewal Communities.

Presently, we are aware of the efforts being made by several Renewal Communities and Empowerment Zones and their potential business partners. In Eastern Kentucky, RC staff is going door to door with tax publications raising enthusiasm in the business communities. In Memphis, Tennessee, the mayor has brought together representatives from non-profit, for-profit and other levels of government to help target tax incentive outreach strategies. Nissan has expressed interest in the rural Mississippi RC because of the new tax incentives. A business in Burlington, Vermont is considering using the RC tax savings to have more full time, rather than part time employees. I will defer to other witnesses and let them share with the subcommittee their accomplishments in detail.

New Empowerment Zones are also enthusiastic about tax incentives. Tucson, Arizona has launched an Empowerment Zone tax incentive website that has already received many hits. Finally, in my hometown of Syracuse, New York, developers will use the tax exempt EZ Facility Bond to help build Destiny, a 65 acre lakefront recreation, commercial and retail center that will include a replica of Erie Canal, rock climbing, hotels and a monorail link to the airport and convention center.

Thank you for this chance to testify and I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

LIKELY QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. Does HUD support S 1957, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for additional designations of renewal communities?

HUD believes that the Renewal Community program holds considerable potential to promote economic development because it has an objective selection process based on economic indicators, requires local commitments to reduce regulatory and tax burdens. However, the Administration does not have a potion on legislation to increase the number of RCs.

2. Does HUD support H. R. 3100, which would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow for the expansion of areas designated as renewal communities based on 2000 census data?

Again, the Administration has not yet taken a position on this bill. We are aware several RCs expressed support for this bill.

3. Does HUD support planning grants or other monies to support activities in the RCs or EZs?

The Renewal Community program was never intended to include a grant component. Some communities are using their CDBG dollars to support activities in the RC. Several HUD programs grant a two point scoring preference in their applications for funding. At the end of the day, it will be innovative partnerships with the private sector, not another Federal grant that will make this program work. The administration believes that the private sector should be the engine of economic growth.

The Round III EZ also did not include a specific grant component. The President has not requested Round II EZ grants for FY 2003 in order to streamline grant programs and focus on tax incentive utilization.

4. What is HUD doing to provide technical assistance to the RCs and EZs?

HUD published a "Tax Incentive Guide for Businesses" and is currently working on a model marketing publication "Businesses Plus Tax Incentives Equals Jobs" to assist all EZs and the new RCs in promoting the use of tax incentives. The Department is conducting a major conference this week at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Center that is addressing economic and community issues and the intricacies of the numerous tax incentives offered as a result of the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000. Attendees are hearing from tax specialists on each of the five categories of incentives offered: Wage Credits, Deductions, Bond Financing, Capital Gains, New Market and Low Income Housing Tax Credits. Also at this conference, we will include several breakout sessions, one specifically dedicated to performance measurement, tax incentive utilization plans, and successful projects and activities. Next fiscal year we will have follow up regional workshops. Finally, our staff hosts an online forum, sends weekly flash faxes and conducts monthly conference calls to discuss implementation opportunities.

5. Why didn't my constituent win an RC or EZ designation last fall?

RCs were selected on the basis of objective criteria, which included 1990 census data and local crime data. EZs were evaluated on the basis of their strategic plan and quality of commitments. Our staff can provide debriefings to any of the applicants that were not selected.

Good morning Chairman Houghton, Ranking Member Coyne, and distinguished members of the Subcommittee. My name is Roy Bernardi. I am the Assistant Secretary for Community Planning and Development in the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Department is pleased that this hearing is occurring in conjunction with the Community Renewal Implementation Conference. Over 400 people from Empowerment Zones and Renewal Communities have gathered to learn how Federal tax incentives and community partnerships can encourage economic development.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 passed in December of 2000. It provided for 12 rural and 28 urban Renewal Communities (RC) and set forth 2 rural and 7 urban Round III Empowerment Zones (EZ). The new legislation provided for measures that included a $22 billion package of tax benefits.

In the Fall of 2001, HUD received over 100 Renewal Community applications from 35 states. Our eligibility and completeness review yielded 77 qualifying applications. The enthusiasm for this program is evidence that our neighbors from coast to coast are anxious to reduce poverty through tax incentives. In January, Secretary Martinez was able to announce 40 RCs with the most severe economic distress after 20 former Enterprise Communities exercised their designation preference. Unlike many grant competitions, Congress wisely mandated that the applications be judged strictly by objective criteria. All qualifying applications needed to have a set of continuous census tracts with at least 20% poverty and 9.4% average unemployment.

Unlike most Federal programs, which provide cash grants for narrowly defined projects, HUD requires Renewal Communities to adhere to four of six required goals to promote economic growth at the local level. Renewal Communities commit to a combination of reducing local taxes, improving local services, reducing crime, reducing local government requirements, involving community partners, and soliciting in-kind donations. In return, the U.S. Treasury agrees to reduce the Federal tax burden through the Renewal Community Employment Credit, Commercial Revitalization Deduction, Zero Percent Capital Gain,s and Increased Section 179 Deduction for Renewal Community Businesses. The tax incentives are the beginning of the strategic alliances that are being formed in our 40 Renewal Communities.

Presently, we are aware of the efforts being made by several Renewal Communities and Empowerment Zones and their potential business partners. In Eastern Kentucky, RC staff is going door to door with tax publications raising enthusiasm in the business communities. In Memphis, Tennessee, the mayor has brought together representatives from non-profit, for-profit and other levels of government to help target tax incentive outreach strategies. Nissan has expressed interest in the rural Mississippi RC because of the new tax incentives. A business in Burlington, Vermont is considering using the RC tax savings to have more full time, rather than part time employees. I will defer to other witnesses and let them share with the subcommittee their accomplishments in detail.

New Empowerment Zones are also enthusiastic about tax incentives. Tucson, Arizona has launched an Empowerment Zone tax incentive website that has already received many hits. Finally, in my hometown of Syracuse, New York, developers will use the tax exempt EZ Facility Bond to help build Destiny, a 65 acre lakefront recreation, commercial and retail center that will include a replica of Erie Canal, rock climbing, hotels and a monorail link to the airport and convention center.

Thank you for this chance to testify and I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

LIKELY QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. Does HUD support S 1957, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for additional designations of renewal communities?

HUD believes that the Renewal Community program holds considerable potential to promote economic development because it has an objective selection process based on economic indicators, requires local commitments to reduce regulatory and tax burdens. However, the Administration does not have a potion on legislation to increase the number of RCs.

2. Does HUD support H. R. 3100, which would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow for the expansion of areas designated as renewal communities based on 2000 census data?

Again, the Administration has not yet taken a position on this bill. We are aware several RCs expressed support for this bill.

3. Does HUD support planning grants or other monies to support activities in the RCs or EZs?

The Renewal Community program was never intended to include a grant component. Some communities are using their CDBG dollars to support activities in the RC. Several HUD programs grant a two point scoring preference in their applications for funding. At the end of the day, it will be innovative partnerships with the private sector, not another Federal grant that will make this program work. The administration believes that the private sector should be the engine of economic growth.

The Round III EZ also did not include a specific grant component. The President has not requested Round II EZ grants for FY 2003 in order to streamline grant programs and focus on tax incentive utilization.

4. What is HUD doing to provide technical assistance to the RCs and EZs?

HUD published a "Tax Incentive Guide for Businesses" and is currently working on a model marketing publication "Businesses Plus Tax Incentives Equals Jobs" to assist all EZs and the new RCs in promoting the use of tax incentives. The Department is conducting a major conference this week at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Center that is addressing economic and community issues and the intricacies of the numerous tax incentives offered as a result of the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000. Also at this conference, we will include several breakout sessions, one specifically dedicated to performance measurement, tax incentive utilization plans, and successful projects and activities. Next fiscal year we will have follow up regional workshops. Finally, our staff hosts an online forum, sends weekly flash faxes and conducts monthly conference calls to discuss implementation opportunities.

5. Why didn't my constituent win an RC or EZ designation last fall?

RCs were selected on the basis of objective criteria, which included 1990 census data and local crime data. EZs were evaluated on the basis of their strategic plan and quality of commitments. Our staff can provide debriefings to any of the applicants that were not selected.

H.R. 3375) The Embassy Employee Compensation Act
(Rep. Blunt (R) Missouri and 45 cosponsors)

The Administration opposes passage of H.R. 3375, the Embassy Employee Compensation Act. H.R. 3375 would provide compensation modeled after the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund to individuals (or relatives of deceased individuals) who were physically injured or killed as a result of the bombings of the United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998. The Administration believes that this model is inappropriate, as the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund was based upon a unique circumstance and was part of a much larger piece of legislation -- the Air Transportation Safety and Stabilization Act -- that addressed issues that are inapplicable to other terrorist attacks. The Administration plans to send to Congress in the near future a set of principles for compensating victims of international terrorism and looks forward to working with the Congress on a proposal that will meet those principles.

ATT CREATION TIME/DATE: 0 00:00:00.00
File attachment <P_QKXI7003_WHO.TXT_1>

Good morning Chairman Houghton, Ranking Member Coyne, and distinguished members of the Subcommittee. My name is Roy Bernardi. I am the Assistant Secretary for Community Planning and Development in the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The Department is pleased that this hearing is occurring in conjunction with the Community Renewal Implementation Conference. Over 400 people from Empowerment Zones and Renewal Communities have gathered to learn how Federal tax incentives and community partnerships can encourage economic development.

The Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000 passed in December of 2000. It provided for 12 rural and 28 urban Renewal Communities (RC) and set forth 2 rural and 7 urban Round III Empowerment Zones (EZ). The new legislation provided for measures that included a $22 billion package of tax benefits.

In the Fall of 2001, HUD received over 100 Renewal Community applications from 35 states. Our eligibility and completeness review yielded 77 qualifying applications. The enthusiasm for this program is evidence that our neighbors from coast to coast are anxious to reduce poverty through tax incentives. In January, Secretary Martinez was able to announce 40 RCs with the most severe economic distress after 20 former Enterprise Communities exercised their designation preference. Unlike many grant competitions, Congress wisely mandated that the applications be judged strictly by objective criteria. All qualifying applications needed to have a set of continuous census tracts with at least 20% poverty and 9.4% average unemployment.

Unlike most Federal programs, which provide cash grants for narrowly defined projects, HUD requires Renewal Communities to adhere to four of six required goals to promote economic growth at the local level. Renewal Communities commit to a combination of reducing local taxes, improving local services, reducing crime, reducing local government requirements, involving community partners, and soliciting in-kind donations. In return, the U.S. Treasury agrees to reduce the Federal tax burden through the Renewal Community Employment Credit, Commercial Revitalization Deduction, Zero Percent Capital Gain,s and Increased Section 179 Deduction for Renewal Community Businesses. The tax incentives are the beginning of the strategic alliances that are being formed in our 40 Renewal Communities.

Presently, we are aware of the efforts being made by several Renewal Communities and Empowerment Zones and their potential business partners. In Eastern Kentucky, RC staff is going door to door with tax publications raising enthusiasm in the business communities. In Memphis, Tennessee, the mayor has brought together representatives from non-profit, for-profit and other levels of government to help target tax incentive outreach strategies. Nissan has expressed interest in the rural Mississippi RC because of the new tax incentives. A business in Burlington, Vermont is considering using the RC tax savings to have more full time, rather than part time employees. I will defer to other witnesses and let them share with the subcommittee their accomplishments in detail.

New Empowerment Zones are also enthusiastic about tax incentives. Tucson, Arizona has launched an Empowerment Zone tax incentive website that has already received many hits. Finally, in my hometown of Syracuse, New York, developers will use the tax exempt EZ Facility Bond to help build Destiny, a 65 acre lakefront recreation, commercial and retail center that will include a replica of Erie Canal, rock climbing, hotels and a monorail link to the airport and convention center.

Thank you for this chance to testify and I would be pleased to respond to your questions.

LIKELY QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. Does HUD support S 1957, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to provide for additional designations of renewal communities?

HUD believes that the Renewal Community program holds considerable potential to promote economic development because it has an objective selection process based on economic indicators, requires local commitments to reduce regulatory and tax burdens. However, the Administration does not have a potion on legislation to increase the number of RCs.

2. Does HUD support H. R. 3100, which would amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to allow for the expansion of areas designated as renewal communities based on 2000 census data?

Again, the Administration has not yet taken a position on this bill. We are aware several RCs expressed support for this bill.

3. Does HUD support planning grants or other monies to support activities in the RCs or EZs?

The Renewal Community program was never intended to include a grant component. Some communities are using their CDBG dollars to support activities in the RC. Several HUD programs grant a two point scoring preference in their applications for funding. At the end of the day, it will be innovative partnerships with the private sector, not another Federal grant that will make this program work. The administration believes that the private sector should be the engine of economic growth.

The Round III EZ also did not include a specific grant component. The President has not requested Round II EZ grants for FY 2003 in order to streamline grant programs and focus on tax incentive utilization.

4. What is HUD doing to provide technical assistance to the RCs and EZs?

HUD published a "Tax Incentive Guide for Businesses" and is currently working on a model marketing publication "Businesses Plus Tax Incentives Equals Jobs" to assist all EZs and the new RCs in promoting the use of tax incentives. The Department is conducting a major conference this week at the Ronald Reagan International Trade Center that is addressing economic and community issues and the intricacies of the numerous tax incentives offered as a result of the Community Renewal Tax Relief Act of 2000. Attendees are hearing from tax specialists on each of the five categories of incentives offered: Wage Credits, Deductions, Bond Financing, Capital Gains, New Market and Low Income Housing Tax Credits. Also at this conference, we will include several breakout sessions, one specifically dedicated to performance measurement, tax incentive utilization plans, and successful projects and activities. Next fiscal year we will have follow up regional workshops. Finally, our staff hosts an online forum, sends weekly flash faxes and conducts monthly conference calls to discuss implementation opportunities.

5. Why didn't my constituent win an RC or EZ designation last fall?

RCs were selected on the basis of objective criteria, which included 1990 census data and local crime data. EZs were evaluated on the basis of their strategic plan and quality of commitments. Our staff can provide debriefings to any of the applicants that were not selected.

Section-by-Section Analysis

COMPREHENSIVE PLANNING UNDER THE INDIAN HOUSING BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

Section 101(h) of the Native American Housing Assistance and Self-Determination Act of 1996 (NAHASDA) authorizes Indian Housing Block Grant (IHBG) recipients to use a percentage of the grant amounts they receive for any reasonable administrative and planning expenses related to carrying out activities under NAHASDA, including costs for salaries of individuals engaged in administering and managing affordable housing activities assisted with NAHASDA grants, and expenses of preparing an Indian housing plan. Through administrative means, HUD has currently set this percentage at 20 percent.

Section ____ would amend section 101(h) to allow IHBG recipients to use a portion of their grant funds, within the 20 percent cap, to engage in comprehensive housing and community development planning activities. Rational, comprehensive land-use planning, when used in conjunction with proper zoning, master plans and associated tools, results in decent, livable Native American communities. Tribes must ensure that the appropriate location of housing, commercial, industrial and tribal governmental projects and activities occurs carefully and thoughtfully. They often do not have funding sources to obtain services to accomplish these objectives. This amendment would authorize these activities as an eligible administrative expense under NAHASDA.

REAAUTHORIZATION OF CERTAIN INDIAN HOUSING PROGRAMS

The authorization of appropriations for the Indian Housing Block Grant program and the title VI housing loan gurarntee program under NAHSDA expired at the end of fiscal year 2001. Section ___ would amend sections 108 and 605 of NAHASDA to reauthorize both programs through 2007. The reauthorization of these programs would support HUD's FY 2003 Budget request to fund these successful programs.

AUTHORITY FOR HUD TO CONDUCT FORECLOSURES UNDER THE SECTION 184 INDIAN LOAN GUARANTEE PROGRAM

Section ___ would give HUD the authority to bring foreclosure actions under the Section 184 Indian Loan Guarantee program.

The Department of Justice (DOJ) is the Federal agency responsible for representing the Federal Government when foreclosures are necessary in this guaranteed loan program. To bring actions on tribal lands, attorneys must comply with any specific tribal bar admission requirements. It can be very difficult to find an available DOJ attorney who is well versed in HUD law and foreclosure procedures and is a member of a specific State or tribal bar. Bar admission requirements vary from tribe to tribe and State to State, from submitting a form to passing an exam, and even those that require just a form can take months to process. DOJ does not have many attorneys with the specialized background and training to do foreclosures in tribal courts, and HUD does not have the authority to carry out the foreclosures using its attorneys or the authority to contract with outside counsel.

Formatted

Given this situation, it is appropriate to give the proposed foreclosure authority to HUD under the Section 184 program, which is similar to the foreclosure authority that USDA has under its section 502 rural housing program (see section 510(d) of the Housing Act of 1949). By allowing HUD to handle a foreclosure in-house or to contract with outside counsel, generally a local private attorney, this proposal will ensure the most timely protection of the Federal Government's financial interests.

HUD REPORTS TO CONGRESS

Section ___ would make the following changes (mostly technical) to certain HUD reporting requirements to Congress.

Subsection (a) would separate the FHA annual report on single family mortgagor and loan characteristics (section 203(w)) of the National Housing Act (NHA)), the annual actuarial study (section 205(g) of the NHA), and the early default report (section 540(c) of the NHA) that were combined by section 1103(f) of the American Homeownership and Economic Opportunity Act of 2000. These reports are very different products that are more appropriate to handle separately.

Subsection (b) would amend the due date of HUD's annual report on activities of FNMA and FHLMC (section 1328 of the Federal Housing Enterprises Financial Safety and Soundness Act of 1992) from June 30th to September 30th because the Home Mortgage Disclosure Act data that the Department relies on to prepare the report is not available to the Department until after June 30th.

Subsection (c) would repeal section 10001 of the 1997 Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, which requires HUD to submit a semiannual report to the appropriations committees that lists all new HUD contracts and task orders in excess of $250,000. This reporting requirement is not necessary since the information in the report is included in the Federal Procurement Data System and the information in such System is available to members of Congress upon request.

In briefing today, Nancy mentioned:

- that she would not be able to quote a 21-day advance coach rate because the rates are based on demand

- at present, helicopter use is considered an official security measure only for the DC to Andrews portion and she bills for other lifts. We, of course, can change this policy, but I did want to point out that this is a change.

- First Lady personal guests are presently being billed when the First Lady is traveling on official travel -- again, we can change the policy, but it would be a change.

I also still have a policy memo on Official Travel of the First Lady on Military Aircraft that Airlift Ops believes we need to re-issue to reflect this Administration's policy. Is this memo being worked or do I need to send a copy to you for review. Please advise.

Please let me know if you have any questions. I would like to get a finalized, signed memo as soon as possible. Thanks.

MEMORANDUM FOR CATHY ALIX

FROM: BRETT M. KAVANAUGH

SUBJECT: AIRCRAFT BILLING

As we discussed, this memorandum reiterates certain processes for billing costs associated with reimbursable travel.

After completion of the Presidential or First Lady travel on military aircraft, the White House Military Office should forward an after-action manifest to the Advance Office. This manifest should reflect the actual travelers for all legs of the trip. The Advance representative will review the manifest and determine which travelers should be billed for the cost of the airfare or other in-flight costs. After this review, the WHMO Airlift Operations representative should prepare the requisite bills for airfare or in-flight costs and forward these bills to the traveler or to the White House Office of Management and Administration as appropriate.

Unofficial travel aboard fixed-wing aircraft should be reimbursed at a 21-day advance coach rate (divided in half for each leg in keeping with the practice of billing per leg). Use of DOD helicopters by the President is considered an official security measure and is therefore not ordinarily reimbursable for travelers traveling with the President. Exceptions to this policy can occur in situations in which the helicopters are the sole source of transportation.

Family members of the President or First Lady travel on a non-reimbursable basis. Personal guests travel on a non-reimbursable basis when the President or First Lady is traveling on official travel.

These procedures are not intended to amend or affect other processes in place for the billing of costs associated with travel of the President, First Lady, or staff members.

The Counsel's Office is prepared to assist as necessary with these processes.

ALBERTO GONZALES'S HIGH-WIRE ACT
Friend of the Court
by Ryan Lizza

One weekend in early May, Alberto Gonzales, President Bush's White House counsel and longtime confidant, found himself motoring out to a Ritz-Carlton in the Virginia suburbs to hang out with creationists and Christian reconstructionists.
Gonzales spoke before some 500 members of the Council for National Policy (CNP), an umbrella group of social conservatives that includes major figures such as James Dobson and Gary Bauer, as well as some of the fringiest elements of the right--including Henry Morris, who has devoted his career to the proposition that evolution is a myth; and R.J. Rushdoony, a reconstructionist who advocates replacing the American legal system with the injunctions of the Old Testament. But several of the attendees say they were disappointed by Gonzales, who gave a humdrum speech about the daily life of the White House counsel and offered little ideological red meat. Even during the question-and-answer session, when he was peppered with questions about various social issues, Gonzales remained cautious, betraying little about his personal beliefs--and doing little to win over a skeptical audience. As one attendee put it: "It was not a conservative being cautious; it was a judicial liberal being cautious."

It's not hard to figure out why Gonzales shows up at these conservative-themed events. Everyone assumes he's on Bush's shortlist for the next vacancy on the Supreme Court, and appearances like his speech before the CNP are a way to build conservative support for his potential nomination. And there's a reason conservatives need convincing: Everything in Gonzales's record prior to his arrival in Washington suggests he is a moderate jurist uncomfortable and unfamiliar with the kind of conservative judicial activism identified with Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas. And that worries Washington conservatives who fear a replay of 1990, when Bush pere nominated David Souter--another state supreme court judge with an ambiguous record--to the high court, only to have him become a stalwart of its liberal minority.

But if "No More Souters!" has become a rallying cry among conservatives, Democrats are equally determined not to allow another Scalia, an Italian-American right-winger who won confirmation in part because Democrats didn't want to be seen as standing in the way of an ethnic milestone. And if Gonzales's record in Texas causes him problems on the right, his conservative stances as White House counsel--on judicial picks, on terrorism, on administration secrecy--raise red flags for Senate Democrats and their allies on the left. Alberto Gonzales, in other words, has the misfortune to be a potential Supreme Court pick at a time when the window of political acceptability--between being too liberal to be nominated and too conservative to be confirmed--is narrower than ever before. Michael Farris, a home-schooling advocate and influential social conservative, summarizes the dilemma: "Until Judge Gonzales starts saying some things publicly like, `I believe the president is right both politically and constitutionally on abortion, and I'm happy to defend him,' he's not going to be rehabilitated. The problem is that if you start doing that you become unacceptable to the left." No wonder Gonzales addressed the CNP. And no wonder he didn't win them over.

As a justice for two years on the Texas Supreme Court, Gonzales has a paper trail. And it suggests moderation and deference--a throwback to the kind of judicial restraint Republicans used to advocate before they fell in love with conservative judicial activism. David Keltner, a friend of Gonzales's from Texas (and a Democrat) argues: "The activist judges we have in the U.S. are conservatives and have been for the last five to ten years. Al Gonzales went on a court that had some ofthat, and he was not that way. He truly did not legislate." Gonzales joined the court in January 1999 and resigned in December 2000 to prepare to move to Washington. During those two years he joined several other Bush appointees to form what the liberal group Texas Watch dubbed the "New Guard"--a block of moderate justices who turned the court away from the sharp conservative tilt that characterized it in the late 1980s and early 1990s. In 2000 Texas Watch noted that, led by a justice named Deborah Hankinson, the "`New Guard' increasingly is challenging the intellectual leadership of conservative activist [Justice] Nathan Hecht and his allies"--including Priscilla Owen, a judge Bush recently nominated to the federal bench and who has been targeted for defeat by liberals. It's hardly surprising that Gonzales usually agreed with his fellow Bush appointees on the Texas court: As the governor's general counsel from 1995 to 1997, he helped pick them.

Gonzales's writings during his two years on the court-- 14 majority opinions, five concurring opinions, and two dissents--display a fetish for legislative intent and a reverence for Supreme Court precedent, one reason social conservatives fear he would be too timid to vote to overturn Roe v. Wade. "He was a very workmanlike judge who was not likely to rule on either extreme," says a top legal conservative who has had conversations with Gonzales and is not encouraged by his potential nomination to the high court. "The only philosophy of judging you can extract from his opinions is he's the quintessential judge who goes in and tries to figure out the law and applies it."

The Texas supreme court has long been a bastion of pro-business jurisprudence; and Gonzales, who spent 13 years as a corporate lawyer in Houston, came to Bush's staff with a reputation as a pro-business Republican. But here, too, his record on the court was centrist. In large part, the moderate trend on the Texas court that observers noted in the late '90s involved cases that pitted consumers against corporations. In such cases Gonzales voted with the majority in 47 decisions that favored individuals over business defendants, while signing on to 38 majority opinions that favored businesses over individuals. In one opinion he argued for the majority that a person exposed to asbestos who wins a claim against a company is not precluded from suing again if he develops a separate asbestos-related disease.
In another case--in which Owen and two other conservatives on the court dissented sharply--Gonzales's decision in favor of an injured motorist suing the Texas Department of Transportation created a whole new cause of action for plaintiffs' lawyers.

As someone who arrived on the Texas bench amid speculation that it was a stop on the way to the Supreme Court, Gonzales's opinions sometimes read like those of a man who knows his words will be carefully scrutinized. In a case against General Motors, for example, he wrote an opinion finding the company negligent--but not grossly negligent, as a jury had. This cautious centrism is also present in one of the more significant opinions he wrote. In Osterberg v. Peca the Texas court wrestled with some of the same First Amendment issues likely to arise out of the McCain-Feingold campaign finance legislation recently signed by Bush (and challenged by the Republican National Committee). The case dealt with the constitutionality of a state election law that required individuals to disclose expenditures made on behalf of a candidate; the court found that the disclosure requirement being challenged didn't violate the First Amendment. Gonzales agreed with the majority on that narrow issue but felt it necessary to add in a concurrence that he worried some "disclosure requirements can be so onerous that they violate the First Amendment"--a matter now at the heart of the McCain-Feingold law. In other words, Gonzales gave himself the wiggle room he'd need if the ruling came back to haunt him in a confirmation fight.

But the most well-known opinion Gonzales wrote on the court is the one that has most alienated him from conservatives. A new law signed by then-Governor Bush in 1999 prevented a minor from seeking an abortion without parental notification--unless a judge found her to be "mature and sufficiently well informed."

joined the majority in overturning a lower court's ruling and allowing a 17-year-old, who told the court her parents did not "believe in abortion," to have the procedure without notifying her parents. The decision fractured the court six to three and precipitated an angry volley of opinions. "It was just incredibly tense around here," says one court official. Justice Owen wrote in a dissent that the majority's "actions raise disturbing questions about its commitment to the rule of law and to the process that is fundamental to the public's trust in the judicia ry." She further accused the court of "manufactur[ing] reasons to justify its action" and concluded her dissent by thundering that the majority "has acted irresponsibly in this case ... has disregarded the law and has trampled the process on which the legitimacy of our law depends." Justice Hecht added that Gonzales and his ideological brethren "adamantly refuse to listen to all reason" because they "have resolved to impair the Legislature's purposes in passing the Parental Notification Act, which were to reduce teenage abortions and increase parental involvement in their children's decisions." He added that the court's ruling "trivializes the decision to have an abortion."

Gonzales's concurring opinion, by contrast, was a paean to legislative intent and--like so many of his other opinions--a careful effort to achieve a delicate political balance. Hinting that he may be pro-life, he wrote: "While the ramifications of such a law and the results of the Court's decision may be personally troubling to me as a parent, it is my obligation as a judge to impartially apply the laws of this state without imposing my moral view on the decisions of the Legislature." Owen's and Hecht's dissents, he said, were "unconscionable act[s] of judicial activism."

Gonzales's record on the Texas Supreme Court, in short, is not that of a Scalia-style conservative. And Gonzales's friends from the period confirm that the record honestly reflected his judicial philosophy. When he was leaving his position on the court to join Bush in Washington, Gonzales had a short, soul-searching conversation with a friend at the courthouse about his impending journey. Gonzales's friend was concerned about the rightward ideological turn the new Bush administration was taking. "When he was leaving, I was worried about the obligations this administration will pay to the right wing," says the friend. But Gonzales, he says, reassured him by asserting, "I'm a moderate, and I believe the governor is a moderate."

But just as the moderate governorship of George W. Bush has metamorphosed into an extremely conservative presidency, so too has Gonzales's moderate judicial philosophy been replaced by an aggressive partisanship as White House counsel. Gonzales has stocked his office with former Scalia and Thomas clerks and veterans of the last decade's most contentious political fights--including Timothy Flanigan, a lawyer who helped write Bush's Supreme Court brief during the Florida recount; Brett Kavanaugh, who wrote part of the Starr report; and H. Christopher Bartolomucci, a Senate Whitewater investigation lawyer. Gonzales's early decision to no longer allow the American Bar Association to vet judicial nominees immediately won him cachet on the right, which has loathed the legal group ever since four members of its review board rated Robert Bork as "not qualified" in 1987. "It's the sort of bogeyman which one gets a lot of mileage for banishing," says one activist. "That act earned him a tremendous amount of support among conservatives."

In contrast with his record in Texas, Gonzales's new office has recommended the most conservative batch of jurists of any recent administration. One of the most telling picks is his old sparring partner on the Texas Court, Priscilla Owen, whom Bush nominated to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals one year ago. The administration had actually interviewed Deborah Hankinson--Gonzales's old ally and the leader of the Texas New Guard--for the job, but her nomination was scuttled. "She read the writing on the wall," says a person close to her. "She wasn't a right winger ... wasn't conservative enough. She felt the right wing has grabbed Bush and is off and running." Gonzales picked Owen for the spot instead.

Gonzales has also taken political ownership of a host of other conservative issues. He wrote and publicly defended Bush's executive order on military tribunals. He advised Bush not to grant prisoner-of-war status to Al Qaeda prisoners at Guantanamo Bay. His office has also led a multifront campaign to expand the authority of the executive branch and insulate the administration from records requests, whether they come from Congress, the General Accounting Office, or presidential scholars.

But establishing these conservative bona fides has come at a cost. Democrats on the Senate Judiciary Committee bitterly complain about Gonzales's unwillingness to consult with them over judges. They warn there will be payback if he's ever nominated to the Supreme Court and have already developed several potential lines of attack. Some Democrats argue that Gonzales is a lightweight being steamrolled by a right-wing staff. "Some think he's out of his league," says a top Judiciary Committee staffer, noting that Gonzales's deputy, Flanigan, was the lead White House negotiator on the anti-terrorism bill. Others make essentially the opposite case: that Gonzales has not only played a critical role in Bush's most conservative and controversial policies, but also that he has been the key figure in shielding the decision-making process that produced them from public review.

Finally there is Enron, the Democratic gift that keeps on giving. Gonzales spent 13 years as a lawyer with Houston-based Vinson & Elkins (V & E), now best known as Enron's law firm. He worked in the business, real estate, energy section--known colloquially as "the deals group"--and one of his colleagues there was Joseph Dilg, for one decade the firm's chief liaison to Enron. Dilg is a main defendant in at least one massive Enron-related lawsuit charging that V & E conducted and participated in an illegal enterprise. National Journal has reported that Gonzales had an attorney-client relationship with Enron, but he has never explained exactly what it was. While at V & E, Gonzales also got to know Kenneth Lay: The two worked together on a 1990 economic summit in Houston and on the 1992 Republican convention. And when Gonzales ran for reelection to the Texas Supreme Court (Texas Supreme Court justices are initially appointed but must go before the voters to earn additional terms), he took $15,000 in campaign donations from the political action committees of Enron and V & E. Perhaps most questionable is that despite these connections, Gonzales has declined to recuse himself from the response to the various Enron-related inquiries and investigations currently embroiling the White House, including Senator Joseph Lieberman's widening probe.

Ultimately, though, much of the Democratic brief against Gonzales is weak. Gonzales left V & E in 1995--before the firm appears to have started most of its suspect work for Enron. And the conflicting nature of the other Democratic lines of attack--Gonzales the conservative mastermind, Gonzales the moderate dupe--is a pretty clear indication that neither characterization is a slam dunk.

The Republican case against Gonzales, however, is another matter. Many conservatives have not been reassured by his rightward lurch over the past year and half. Indeed, they often make their own version of the "moderate controlled by conservatives" argument--suggesting that in his current post Gonzales is simply hemmed in by the presence of so many conservative staffers and the expectation of loyalty to administration policies. "I think that Justice Gonzales was the real Al Gonzales, and White House Counsel Gonzales is the loyal Bush administration aide," says one prominent conservative. Adds another, "I have no reason to believe that he has changed his views from when he was on the court."

For many on the right, his opinion in Jane Doe 1 is all they know about Gonzales--and all they really need to know. "I've been told he voted the wrong way on a parental-notification bill on abortion," says Farris. "That would make him absolutely unacceptable to the pro-life community." Other conservatives worry about Gonzales's views on affirmative action, an issue the Supreme Court is likely to tackle in the next few years. Gonzales has said, for example, that Bush is building an administration that "looks like America"--the same phrase famously used by Bill Clinton. Roger Clegg, an affirmative action opponent at the Center for Equal Opportunity, had a heated exchange with Gonzales on race at a Heritage Foundation event in Philadelphia not long ago. The administration is "not making appointments based strictly on the merits," says Clegg. "They are being driven by racial and ethnic decisions. That's wrong, and that's objectionable. To the extent he really believes that's an OK thing to do, that's troubling as a potential Supreme Court justice." Adds Ed Blum of the conservative American Civil Rights Institute, "We're all very nervous about Al Gonzales and how he sees the issue of race and public policy." Blum, who knows Gonzales from Texas, saw him speak recently at a monthly meeting of the Federalist Society held at Tony Cheng's Mongolian Restaurant in Washington. Gonzales, says Blum, believes "that a person's race or ethnicity does have a bearing on who that person is, and that is anathema to this movement. He has bought into the bedrock argument that the other side makes."

The irony, of course, is that Bush believes the same thing. Indeed, when Bush first appointed Gonzales to the Texas Supreme Court, a reporter asked the then-governor if race had played a role in his decision. "Of course it mattered what his ethnicity is," Bush replied. And more broadly, the question conservatives now pose about the "real" Alberto Gonzales--is he the moderate he was in Texas or the conservative he has been in Washington?--could well be asked about Bush himself. Bush, too, one might argue, has been surrounded since taking office by a permanent Beltway conservative establishment that has made his presidency more ideological than his governorship. Conservatives' assessment of what Gonzales would do if given the independence of a Supreme Court seat is, in some ways then, an assessment of what Bush himself might do--were conservatives not there to keep him in line.

And it's precisely because of those doubts that many on the right would prefer to see Bush choose someone like Miguel Estrada, the ideologically committed right-winger currently up for the D.C. Circuit. Estrada, they figure, could be confirmed for the same reason as Gonzales: Democrats wouldn't dare torpedo the first Hispanic nominee. And he'd be a reliable Thomas-Scalia ally on the Court.

But Estrada doesn't have Gonzales's close relationship to Bush--"more like a brother than a lawyer," says a friend of both men. And most close Bush-watchers assume that the president, if given his druthers, favors loyalty over ideological purity. Unlike Gonzales, Estrada has yet to spend time on the bench--a lack of experience that could make confirmation more difficult. Moreover, Gonzales has one other advantage over Estrada and other potential rivals: As White House counsel, he'll be the one leading the search for a new justice when a vacancy occurs. And the last time Bush put someone else in charge of this sort of hunt, Dick Cheney ended up picking himself.

Subject: Lieberman chronology -- press release

Lieberman just issued the timeline below as a press release. If anyone sees inaccuracies, we should probably point them out to Anne.

Governmental Affairs Committee Enron Investigation Timeline

January 2 Investigation announced into whether the various federal agencies charged with overseeing or regulating Enron's business could have done something to detect or prevent the problems associated with the company or its downfall.

January 24 First hearing: "The Fall of Enron: How Could It have Happened?"

February 5 Second hearing: "Retirement Insecurity: The 401(k) Crisis

at Enron."

February 15 Committee sends letters to four agencies responsible for regulating or overseeing aspects of Enron's business seeking contacts, communications, investigations, complaints, etc. regarding Enron and/or Andersen (SEC, CFTC, FERC, Department of Labor). Committee also subpoenas Enron for its communications with CFTC, FERC, SEC and Department of Labor and Andersen for its communications regarding Enron with any federal agency. The letters and subpoenas seek information back to 1992.

February 27 Third hearing: "The Watchdogs Didn't Bark: Enron and the Wall Street Analysts."

March 20 Fourth hearing: "Rating the Raters: Enron and the Credit Rating Agencies."

March 25 Committee subpoenas Enron directors

March 27 Committee sends letters to the White House and the U.S. Archivist (on behalf of the first Bush Administration and the Clinton Administration). The Committee requests of the White House information about:
1. Communications between Executive Office of the President (EOP) and Enron regarding eight agencies charged with regulating or overseeing parts of Enron's business (SEC, FERC, CFTC, Labor, Energy, Commerce, OPIC, Exc-Im), and any appointments to those agencies.
2. Communications between EOP and any federal agency regarding those eight agencies and their oversight of Enron, and any appointments to those agencies.
3. Communications between Enron and the EOP or any member of the National Energy Task Force regarding National Energy Policy.
Committee requests of the Archivist documents (not just information) regarding these topics from the previous two adminsitrations.

April 11 Meeting between Committee staff and White House Counsel staff to discuss request. Committee anticipates next communication from White House would be proposed time frame for providing Committee with information.

April 19 White House Counsel Gonzales writes Chairman Lieberman, reiterating objections expressed by staff at April 11 meeting: argues that request is overbroad, seeks information removed from the Committee's inquiry, and intruded on Executive Branch prerogatives. Judge Gonzales offered information already provided to the House and indicated he would take unspecified "appropriate steps" to gather unspecified information to provide to the Committee at an unspecified time.

April 24 Chairman Lieberman writes White House Counsel expressing disappointment that the process has not moved farther along. He says his request is not overbroad and is relevant to Committee's inquiry.

April 29 White House Counsel writes to Chairman Lieberman and announces first concrete step to collect information in response to Committee request: three-question, yes/no survey to be distributed among senior EOP personnel. White House Counsel continues to object to providing information relating to the National Energy policy and the appointments process. Survey does not ask about National Energy Policy contacts, among other things.

May 3 Chairman Lieberman writes White House Counsel expressing inadequacy of White House response: Survey appears designed to slow the process down, survey distribution list is too small, survey does not cover WAVE records, email, etc., survey does not cover former staff. Lieberman remarks on absence of White House attempt to search for National Energy Policy information, as well as contacts with other federal agencies.

May 6 White House Counsel seeks meeting with Chairman Lieberman.

May 7 White House Counsel writes to Chairman Lieberman and agrees to search WAVES and e-mail but says the President and Vice President have already described their relevant communications. White House Counsel says former employees will not be surveyed and says he wants to discuss Committee's interest in National Energy Policy.

May 8 Chairman Lieberman and Gonzales meet. They discuss the issues, but reach no resolution. Chairman Lieberman expects to hear back from White House Counsel early the next week with further decisions about how to respond to Committee request.

May 14 White House Counsel's office informs Committee staff it will add two additional questions to its survey. The first concerns communications regarding National Energy Policy and other policy issues. The second concerns communications between EOP and other federal agencies.

May 16 White House Counsel writes Chairman Lieberman reiterating steps his office has taken, attaches a transcript of a presidential press conference during which the President discusses whether he communicated with Ken Lay or other Enron officials in the six weeks preceding Dec. 28, 2001. The Counsel did not address whether the White House would reconsider its position and provide the information requested on all the issues, including National Energy Policy information, communications of the President, Vice President, former employees or the universe of EOP employees.

Chairman Lieberman responds to White House Counsel the same day. He notes that more than seven weeks had passed since his request and the White House has provided no information, nor has it assured the Committee responsive information would be forthcoming. Lieberman expressed dismay that several outstanding issues were still not addressed such as the communications of the President, the Vice President, former employees, National Energy Policy. Chairman Lieberman informed Judge Gonzales that he would ask for the Committee to approve a subpoena unless the White House provided assurances that 1. EOP would search for all the information the Committee asked for and 2. EOP would provide the Committee with all responsive information unless it claimed it was privileged.

May 17 White House Counsel's office contacted Committee staff and agrees to survey all EOP employees if the subpoena threat is withdrawn. The Counsel's office made no assurances about other outstanding items, e.g. determining whether President, Vice President, or former employees had responsive communications with Enron.

Chairman Lieberman concluded he would not get all the information he requested and decided to proceed with the subpoena request.

May 21 White House Counsel writes to Chairman Lieberman saying the subpoena request is "precipitous." Chairman Lieberman calls White House Counsel to inform him of his decision to proceed with subpoena requests.

May 22 Governmental Affairs Committee voted 9-8 to subpoena the White House.

Senate panel subpoenas White House staff in Enron investigation%)

MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) _ A Senate panel voted on party lines Wednesday to issue Congress' first subpoenas to the Bush White House, seeking information on staff contacts with Enron Corp. officials.

The vote was 9-8 to subpoena President Bush's executive office and the office of Vice President Dick Cheney to compel them to produce relevant documents by noon on June 3. The vote followed a two-hour debate that at times turned bitterly partisan. The material being sought also covers the Clinton administration, going back to January 1992.

The vote grew out of the Governmental Affairs Committee's investigation of Enron, which filed the biggest corporate bankruptcy in U.S. history last year. The Houston-based company has been among Bush's biggest campaign contributors.

Some Republican senators accused Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., chairman of the committee, of being politically motivated in requesting the subpoenas and unfairly giving the impression that wrongdoing in the Enron affair had occurred in the White House.

Republicans noted that the White House had indicated it would deliver material to the panel on Wednesday and asked Lieberman to hold off the subpoenas.

``Are we doing this to attract the attention of the public?'' Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., asked. ``It makes me very suspicious about the motivation of asking for a subpoena.''

Lieberman, chairman of the committee because Democrats control the Senate, told Cochran: ``Your suspicions are unwarranted.''

``The clear message I've gotten from the White House is that they're not going to give us what we want,'' Lieberman said. He noted he has been seeking the information since late March.

``I have finally concluded that we were being slow-walked ... at the least and stonewalled at worst,'' Lieberman said.

He stressed that he was not accusing anyone in the White House of wrongdoing but was seeking material needed in the committee's investigation.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, already has sued Cheney to force release of the names of Enron and other industry figures who met last year with his energy task force.

The Bush administration disclosed in January that former Enron chairman Kenneth Lay made a series of telephone calls to members of the Bush Cabinet, including Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, as the company spiraled toward collapse last fall.

Lieberman, who was Al Gore's running mate in 2000 and is considering a run for president in 2004, had said Friday he would seek a subpoena unless the White House promised to provide all the material requested by the end of the month.

``I respectfully suggest that you reconsider and withdraw the threat of a subpoena until, at a minimum, you can review the information we intend to provide soon to the committee,'' White House counsel Alberto Gonzales told Lieberman in a letter Tuesday.

Lieberman spokeswoman Leslie Phillips said Gonzales' letter contained no new proposal to resolve the impasse.

Sen. Fred Thompson of Tennessee, the ranking Republican on the committee, said it was premature and needlessly confrontational to issue subpoenas, with no specific allegations of wrongdoing by the White House having been raised.

Some of the material the subpoenas are seeking may be ``at the core of the executive function,'' said Thompson. He said their issuance ``appears to be an effort to force the president to claim executive privilege'' and withhold the material.

The energy-trading company filed for bankruptcy court protection on Dec. 2. Investors nationwide were burned and thousands of Enron employees were stripped of nearly all their retirement assets as the company's stock plummeted. The Governmental Affairs Committee has been looking into why federal regulators did not raise warning flags about Enron's questionable business practices and intervene.

Gonzales said Tuesday the panel would be acting ``precipitously,'' and in a manner contrary to how Congress and the executive branch traditionally interact, if it issued a subpoena now.

In response to Lieberman's request, Gonzales on April 29 asked 204 White House staffers to fill out a questionnaire.

On Friday, Gonzales offered to give the questionnaire to all 2,000 or so executive office employees if Lieberman would withdraw his subpoena threat.

``We have yet to hear your response,'' Gonzales wrote.

``We already have taken numerous steps to gather information requested by the committee,'' he said. Gonzales said his staff was gathering and reviewing documents, e-mails and entry records of visitors to the White House, and was interviewing people with relevant information.

``We are preparing to respond soon to assist the committee's inquiry,'' he told Lieberman.

107th CONGRESS

2d Session

H. R. 4231

AN ACT

To improve small business advocacy, and for other purposes.

HR 4231 EH

107th CONGRESS

2d Session

H. R. 4231

AN ACT

To improve small business advocacy, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Small Business Advocacy Improvement Act of 2002'.

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS- Congress finds the following:

(1) Excessive regulations continue to burden the Nation's small businesses.

(2) Federal agencies continue to propose regulations that impose disproportionate burdens on small businesses.

(3) An independent office of small business advocacy will help to ensure that Federal agencies are responsive to small businesses and that those agencies comply with their statutory obligations with respect to small businesses.

(4) The independence of an office that acts as an advocate for small businesses is essential to ensure that it can serve as an effective advocate without being restricted by the views or policies of the Small Business Administration or any other Federal executive branch agency.

(5) To be effective an office that acts as an advocate for small businesses needs sufficient resources to conduct creditable economic studies and research which are necessary for the maintenance of small business databases and for the accurate assessment of the impact of regulations on small businesses, the role of small business in the Nation's economy, and the barriers to the growth of small businesses.

(6) The research, information, and expertise provided by an independent office of small business advocacy will be a valuable source of information and advice for Congress and Federal agencies with which the office will work on behalf of small businesses.

(b) PURPOSES- The purposes of this Act are--

(1) to ensure that there exists an entity that has the statutory independence and adequate financial resources to effectively advocate for and on behalf of small business;

(2) to require that such an entity report to the Chairmen and Ranking Members of the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and to the Administrator of the Small Business Administration in order to keep them fully and currently informed about issues and regulations affecting small business concerns and the necessity for corrective action by the regulatory agency or Congress;

(3) to provide a separate authorization for appropriations for such an entity; and

(4) to strengthen the role of the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman by ensuring greater cooperation between the Ombudsman and the Office of Advocacy of the Small Business Administration.

SEC. 3. APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF COUNSEL OF ADVOCACY.

(a) IN GENERAL- Section 201 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634a) is amended--

(1) by inserting `(a)' before `There is established';

(2) by striking the second sentence; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

`(b) The management of the Office shall be vested in a Chief Counsel for Advocacy who shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who should be appointed without regard to political affiliation and on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the office.

`(c) No individual may be appointed under subsection (b) if such individual has served as an officer or employee of the Small Business Administration during the 5-year period preceding the date of such individual's appointment.

`(d) Any Chief Counsel appointed after the date of the enactment of this subsection shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate of basic pay for level III of the Executive Schedule.

`(e) After the expiration of the term of a President, the Chief Counsel may continue to serve at the pleasure of the President for a period of not to exceed one year until such date as a successor to the Chief Counsel is nominated.'.

REV_00145792

(b) INCUMBENT CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ADVOCACY- The individual serving as the Chief Counsel for Advocacy of the Small Business Administration on the date of the enactment of this Act shall continue to serve in that position after such date in accordance with section 201 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634a), as amended by this section.

SEC. 4. PRIMARY FUNCTIONS OF OFFICE OF ADVOCACY.

Section 202 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634b) is amended--

(1) in paragraph (6) by striking `to minority enterprises' and inserting `to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, to small business concerns owned and controlled by women, and to small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans';

(2) in paragraph (7) by striking `minority enterprises' and inserting `small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, small business concerns owned and controlled by women, and small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans';

(3) in paragraph (8) by striking `minority and other small business enterprises' and inserting `small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, small business concerns owned and controlled by women, small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and other small businesses';

(4) in paragraph (9) by striking `complete' and inserting `compete';

(5) by striking paragraph (11);

(6) by redesignating paragraph (12) as paragraph (11);

(7) in paragraph (11) (as so redesignated)--

(A) by striking `serviced-disabled' and inserting `service-disabled'; and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting `; and'; and

(8) by adding at the end the following:

`(12) make such recommendations and submit such reports as the Chief Counsel determines appropriate to the President, to the Chairmen and Ranking Members of the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and to the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, with respect to issues and regulations affecting small businesses and the necessity for corrective action by any Federal agency or by Congress.'.

SEC. 5. ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL- Section 203 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634c) is amended--

(1) by inserting `(a)' before `The Office of Advocacy shall also perform'; and

REV_00145793

(2) in subsection (a) (as so designated)--

(A) in paragraph (4) by striking `and' at the end;

(B) in paragraph (5) by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon; and

(C) by adding at the end the following:

`(6) maintain economic databases and make the information contained therein available to the Administrator of the Small Business Administration and to Congress;

`(7) carry out the responsibilities of the Chief Counsel under chapter 6 of title 5, United States Code; and

`(8) enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman regarding methods and procedures for cooperation between the Ombudsman and the Office of Advocacy and transmit a copy of such memorandum to the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate.'.

(b) APPROPRIATION REQUEST- Section 203 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634c) is further amended by adding at the end the following:

`(b)(1) For each fiscal year, the Chief Counsel shall transmit the Office of Advocacy's appropriation estimate and request to the Office of Management and Budget, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

`(2) Each budget of the United States Government submitted by the President shall include a separate statement of the amount of appropriations requested for the Office of Advocacy.'.

SEC. 6. DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSELS AND REGIONAL ADVOCATES.

Section 204 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634d) is amended--

(1) by inserting `(a)' before `In carrying out'; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

`(b)(1) The Chief Counsel may appoint 2 individuals to serve as Deputy Chief Counsels.

`(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the pay rate for each Deputy Chief Counsel may not exceed the rate of basic pay for level III of the Senior Executive Service.

`(3) Individuals appointed to positions under this subsection shall not be counted toward the limitation contained in subsection (a)(1) regarding the number of individuals who may be compensated at a rate in excess of the lowest rate for GS-15 of the General Schedule.

`(1) assist in examining the role of small business in the economy of the United States by identifying academic and other research institutions that focus on small business concerns and linking these research resources to research activities conducted by the Office of Advocacy;

`(2) assist in representing the views and interests of small business concerns before Federal agencies whose policies and activities may affect small business;

`(3) in coordination with the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman, assist the functioning of regional small business fairness boards;

`(4) assist in enlisting the cooperation and assistance of public and private agencies, businesses, and other organizations in disseminating information about the programs and services provided by the Federal Government that are of benefit to small business concerns and the means by which small business concerns can participate in or make use of such programs and services; and `(5) carry out such duties pursuant to the mission of the Office of Advocacy as the Chief Counsel may assign.'.

SEC. 7. OVERHEAD AND ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT.

Section 205 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634e) is amended by inserting before `Each department' the following:

`(a) The Administrator of the Small Business Administration shall provide the Office of Advocacy with appropriate and adequate office space at central and field office locations of the Administration, together with such equipment, office supplies, communications facilities, and personnel and maintenance services as may be necessary for the operation of such offices.

`(b)'.

SEC. 8. REPORTS.

Section 206 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634f) is amended by striking `The Chief Counsel may' and all that follows through `on his activities.' and inserting the following:

`(a) Not less than annually, the Chief Counsel shall submit to the President, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, the Committee on Government Affairs of the Senate, the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, and the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration a report on agency compliance with chapter 6 of title 5, United States Code.

`(b) In addition to the reports required by this title, the Chief Counsel may prepare and publish such other reports as the Chief Counsel determines appropriate.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 207 of Public Law 94-305 (15 U.S.C. 634g) is amended by striking `not to exceed

REV_00145795

$1,000,000' and inserting `$10,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, $12,000,000 for fiscal year 2004, and $14,000,000 for fiscal year 2005'.

SEC. 10. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.

(a) EXECUTIVE PAY SCHEDULE- Title 5, United States Code, is amended--

(1) in section 5314 by adding at the end the following:

`Chief Counsel for Advocacy, Small Business Administration.'; and

(2) in section 5315 by striking the following:

`Chief Counsel for Advocacy, Small Business Administration.'.

(b) RURAL TOURISM TRAINING PROGRAM- Section 311 of the Small Business Administration Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 1990 (15 U.S.C. 653 note; 104 Stat. 2832) is amended by striking `Chief Counsel for Advocacy' and inserting `Administrator'.

Senate GOP Plans New Offer On Terrorism Insurance Bill Senate Republicans leading the fight on terrorism reinsurance legislation are poised to make a new counteroffer this week to Senate Democratic leaders, sources said Wednesday.
The new offer, crafted by Senate Banking ranking member Phil Gramm, R-Texas, and Sen. Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., will address GOP concerns about both the formula for coverage and the bill's tort reform language. Sources said the GOP members hope to make their new offer to Senate Majority Leader Daschle before the chamber breaks for the Memorial Day recess.
Daschle said Wednesday he remains determined to bring the reinsurance
"legislation to the floor, either as an amendment to another bill; or, if I need to make a motion to proceed to the legislation sometime in the not-too-distant future, I intend to do

Speaking at the National Press Club, Daschle said he still wanted to reach a unanimous consent agreement with Republicans. And he disagreed that "the urgency"
for the legislation has been reduced.
"I think there is still great urgency to pass the bill. I think there is a very important level of exposure here that needs to be addressed," he said.

The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, DC 20500

Dear President Bush:

As you know, New York City is at the forefront of America's adjustment to the realities of the post 9/11 world. As the city's leading business organization, the New York City Partnership is focusing on the economic consequences of terrorism. One such consequence is the unavailability of terrorism insurance for real estate, which emerged shortly after the attack as a major obstacle to economic recovery and future growth. Your efforts to help us deal with this issue are deeply appreciated.

We have recently learned of a new dimension to this problem: the fact that workers compensation insurance that covers acts of war and terrorism will not be available to companies that have large concentrations of employees in one location. This problem is coming to a head first in New York, but it will not end here. Every major employer in America will need to confront this issue.

Attached is a letter from a number of our city's largest employers, all of which are threatened by the impending unavailability of workers compensation coverage. The Federal government must assume responsibility for protecting America's workforce from the consequences of acts of war and terrorism, or our economy – our society – could be shattered. We trust that you will, once again, take the initiative to work with Congress on enacting appropriate measures to deal with this issue. Our members are prepared to help!

Sincerely,

The President
The White House
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

As major employers in New York City, we are writing to you about an urgent problem that confronts the welfare of our employees, as well as the future of New York City and any other city with large concentrations of employees.

A number of prominent private citizens and public officials have called attention to the fact that the United States remains vulnerable to the threats of war or biological, nuclear or chemical attack. As required by law, under the terms of all workers compensation programs, death or injury from these risks cannot be excluded. And yet, given the magnitude of the potential losses to thousands, if not millions, of employees, it is impossible for any large employer to absorb these losses or for an insurer to insure them. Some recent modeling puts these losses, under certain scenarios, in the tens of billions of dollars.

The U.S. Constitution makes clear that it is the responsibility of government to protect its citizens from attack. As such, we believe it is entirely appropriate for the Congress to pass legislation authorizing the Administration to provide full relief against losses incurred from war, or biological, nuclear or chemical attack for any employer and any insurer who writes workers compensation insurance. The need is clear and is not complicated by the debate over tort reform.

Without this kind of Federal backstop, workers compensation coverage will quickly become unavailable to large concentrations of employees. Should this acute situation remain un-addressed, our companies will have to make difficult decisions about future employee locations. This will be inefficient for us but, more importantly, highly disadvantageous to the future recovery and growth of New York City.

We hope you will give this proposal immediate, favorable consideration.

Sincerely yours,

American International Group, Inc.
Maurice R. Greenberg

NEW YORK CITY'S CEO'S CALL ON PRESIDENT BUSH AND CONGRESS TO PROVIDE WORKERS COMPENSATION RELIEF IN THE EVENT OF FUTURE TERRORIST ATTACKS

NEW YORK, May 22, 2002 - The CEO's of 14 major New York City-based corporations urged President George W. Bush and members of Congress to enact legislation authorizing full workers compensation relief against losses that would be incurred as a result of a possible future war or biological, nuclear or chemical attack. The appeal was made in a letter sent today. According to the CEO's, whose participation was coordinated by the New York City Partnership & Chamber of Commerce, potential workers compensation payments for death or disability could, under certain worst-case scenarios, create financial losses in the billions or ten of billions of dollars for some large employers or their insurers. In the letter sent to President Bush, the group warned that workers compensation coverage will quickly become unavailable unless the Federal government agrees to make changes to reflect new threats, especially to major metropolitan cities.

"We have recently learned of a new dimension to new realities of the post 9/11 world," said New York City Partnership President and CEO Kathryn Wylde. "Workers compensation insurance that covers acts of war and terrorism will not be available to companies that have large concentrations of employees in one location. This problem is coming to a head first in New York, but it will not end here. Every major employer in America will need to confront this issue."

Current state workers compensation laws mandate coverage for all employees, and such coverage cannot be narrowed by either the employer or insurer. Unlike other forms of insurance, therefore, death or injury from acts of war or terrorism cannot be excluded. As a result, some insurers already are refusing to write workers compensation policies for large employers, and premiums for those that do are increasing significantly.

The letter, which was forwarded to all members of the Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives, asks Congress to assume responsibility for protecting America's workforce from the consequences of acts of war and terrorism. Should the situation not be addressed, the New York City business leaders warn, large companies will have to make difficult decisions about future employee locations.

"A number of prominent private citizens and public officials have called attention to the fact that the United States remains vulnerable to the threats of war or biological, nuclear or chemical attack," adds Ms. Wylde. "The U.S. Constitution makes clear that it is the responsibility of government to protect its citizens from attack. As such, we believe it is entirely appropriate for the Congress and the Administration to ensure full relief against losses incurred from war or attack."

The New York City Partnership and Chamber of Commerce is the leading voice for New York City business. Its members include CEO's of the city's top corporate, investment and entrepreneurial firms. Working with the public sector, the Partnership mobilizes the resources of business to address issues that are central to the city's economy, such as rebuilding lower Manhattan, reform of the public education system and development of the infrastructure necessary to support emerging industries. In the wake of 9/11, the Partnership and its affiliate, the New York City Investment Fund, have leveraged the business community's assets to assess the economic impact of the terrorist attack and provide financial and strategic support to small businesses affected by the disaster.

SEC.__. COLONIAS GATEWAY INITIATIVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make grants to a regional organization, or to regional organizations, for the purpose of enhancing the availability of affordable housing, economic opportunity, and infrastructure in the colonias.

(b) SELECTION OF REGIONAL ORGANIZATIONS.—The Secretary shall competitively select a regional organization, or regional organizations, to carry out the activities of this section. The Secretary shall establish selection criteria that reflect the purposes of this section and that include a demonstration of the extent to which the applicant has the capacity to:

(1) enhance the availability of affordable housing, economic opportunity, and infrastructure in the colonias by carrying out the eligible activities set forth in subsection (e);

(2) provide assistance in each State in which the colonias are located;

(3) form partnerships with the public and private sectors and local and regional housing and economic development intermediaries to achieve the purposes of this section;

(4) ensure accountability to the residents of the colonias through active and ongoing outreach to, and consultation with, residents and local governments; and

(5) meet such other criteria as the Secretary may specify.

As part of any selection determination, the Secretary shall consider the applicant's proposed work plan.

(c) ADVISORY BOARD.

(1) MEMBERSHIP.—The Secretary shall appoint an Advisory Board that shall consist of nine members, including:

(A) one representative of each State with colonias;

(B) four members of non-profit or private sector organizations with substantial investments in the colonias, and with at least one such member representing the private sector; and

(C) one member who shall be a resident of, and represent the residents of, the colonias.

(2) CHAIRPERSON.—The Secretary shall designate a member of the Advisory Board as Chairperson.

(3) TERM.—Advisory Board members shall be appointed for two year terms that the Secretary may renew.

(4) COMPENSATION.—Advisory Board members shall serve without compensation, but the Secretary may provide for reimbursement of their travel and other expenses required by the performance of their duties herein.

(5) FUNCTIONS.—The Advisory Board shall perform the following functions:

(A) assist any selected regional organization in the development and implementation of its final work plan;

(B) review and approve all final work plans;

(C) assist the Secretary in monitoring and evaluating the performance of any regional organization in implementing its final work plan; and

(D) provide such other assistance as the Secretary may request.

(d) WORK PLANS.—Any regional organization applying for selection pursuant to subsection (b) shall, in its application, include a proposed work plan. Once having been competitively selected pursuant to subsection (b), any selected regional organization shall, annually thereafter, and subject to the Secretary's determination to continue to provide grant amounts to such regional organization, submit a proposed work plan to the Advisory Board and the Secretary for review and approval. In any fiscal year, including the fiscal year in which any regional organization is selected pursuant to subsection (b), prior to final determination and allocation of specific grant amounts, any selected regional organization shall, with the assistance of the Advisory Board, develop a final work plan that thoroughly describes how the regional organization will use specific grant amounts to carry out its functions under this section. A work plan shall address, in part, the effects its implementation would have on areas around colonias. A work plan or work plans (if more than one regional organization has been selected) for any fiscal year shall ensure that grant amounts are used in a manner that results in assistance and investments for colonias in each State containing colonias, and the Advisory Board and the Secretary may require a minimum level of such investment and assistance as a condition of the approval of the work plans. Until the Advisory Board and the Secretary approve a final work plan, which includes a specific grant amount, no regional organization shall receive any grant amounts pursuant to this section. To the extent that the Advisory Board or the Secretary does not approve a work plan, the Advisory Board or the Secretary shall, to the maximum extent practicable, assist the selected regional organization that submitted the plan to develop an approvable plan.

(e) ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES.—Grant amounts under this section may be used to carry out the following eligible activities to benefit the colonias—

(1) coordination of public, private, and community-based resources;

(2) technical assistance and capacity building, including training, business planning and investment advice, and the development of marketing and strategic investment plans;

(3) sustainable investments in housing, community infrastructure, and economic development, and in replicable business models;

(4) development of comprehensive, regional, socio-economic and other data, and the establishment of a centralized information resource, to facilitate strategic planning and investments;

(5) housing counseling and financial education, including counseling and education about avoiding predatory lending;

(6) improving access to financial services;

(7) administrative and planning costs of any regional organization in carrying out this section, except that the Secretary may limit the amount of grant funds used for such costs; and

(8) such other activities as the Secretary deems appropriate to carry out this section.

(f) GRANT AGREEMENTS. –A grant under this section shall be made only pursuant to a grant agreement between the Secretary and any regional organization selected under this section.

(g) TERMINATION AND RECAPTURE.—If the Secretary determines that any regional organization awarded a grant under this section has not substantially fulfilled its obligations under its final work plan or grant agreement, the Secretary shall terminate the regional organization's participation under this section, and shall recapture any unexpended grant amounts.

(h) DETAILS FROM OTHER AGENCIES.—Upon request of any selected regional organization that has an approved work plan, the head of any Federal agency may detail, on a reimbursable basis, any of the personnel of such agency to that regional organization to assist it in carrying out its duties under this section.

(i) ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW.—For purposes of environmental review, projects assisted by grant amounts under this section shall be treated as special projects that are subject to section 305(c) of the Multifamily Housing Property Disposition Reform Act of 1994, and shall be subject to regulations issued by the Secretary to implement such section.

(j) AUTHORIZATION.—There are authorized to be appropriated $16,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2004 through 2009, to carry out this section.

(k) SUNSET.—No new grants may be provided under this section after September 30, 2009.

(l) DEFINITIONS.—For the purposes of this section:

(1) The term "colonia" means any identifiable community that--

(A) is in the State of Arizona, California, New Mexico, or Texas;

(B) is in the United States-Mexico border region, as defined in paragraph (4);

(C) is determined to be a colonia on the basis of objective criteria, including lack of potable water supply, lack of adequate sewage systems, and lack of decent, safe, and sanitary housing; and

(D) was in existence and generally recognized as a colonia before the date of the enactment of this section.

(2) The term "regional organization" means a nonprofit organization or a consortium of nonprofit organizations with the capacity to serve colonias.

(3) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(4) The term "United States-Mexico border region" means the area of the United States within 150 miles of the border between the United States and Mexico, except that the term does not include any standard metropolitan statistical area that has a population exceeding 1,000,000.

May 2002 DRAFT

COLONIAS GATEWAY INITIATIVE
Sectional-by-Section Analysis

Background

The Colonias Gateway Initiative (the Initiative) is designed to enhance the capacity of organizations working in the U.S.-Mexico border region to develop affordable housing and infrastructure and to foster economic opportunity in the colonias. The Initiative's role would be as a catalyst, helping businesses, nonprofit organizations, and State and local governments to make sustainable, long-term investments in the quality of life for colonias residents, investments that would continue after the Initiative's funding ends.

To that end, the HUD Secretary would select, through a competitive process, one or more regional organizations with the capacity to achieve these ends.

Section-by-Section

(a). IN GENERAL. This would authorize the Secretary to make annual grants to a regional organization, or regional organizations, to carry out the purposes of this Colonias Initiative.

(b). SELECTION OF REGIONAL ORGANIZATION. After enactment of this section, on a competitive basis, the Secretary would select one or more regional organizations that would be capable of carrying out the purposes of this section. It is HUD's intent that once a regional organization or organizations are selected, any such organization would continue to be funded under this section to the extent that the Secretary determines that continuing to fund the organization would further the purposes of this section, and to the extent that the organization continues to substantially fulfill its obligations under its final work plans and grant agreements. After the initial selection of a regional organization or organizations, however, the Secretary would have the authority, at any time, to conduct any additional competitions that the Secretary determines to be necessary or appropriate to further carry out the activities of this section.

Criteria for selection would include the extent to which the applicant has the capacity to: enhance the availability of affordable housing, economic opportunity and infrastructure in the colonias; provide assistance in each State with colonias; form partnerships with the public and private sectors and local and regional housing and economic development intermediaries to achieve the purposes of this section; and ensure accountability to the residents of the colonias.

The applicant's proposed work plan would be an essential component of selection. Proposed work plans submitted by applicants would provide HUD with valuable information with respect to the capacity of various applicants to use various grant amounts to carry out the purposes of this section.

(c). ADVISORY BOARD. The Advisory Board would have nine members appointed by the Secretary. It would include one representative for each of the four States with colonias (Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and California), four members of nonprofit and private organizations that have substantial investments in the colonias, and one colonias resident representative. The Secretary would choose which member was chair. The members would serve two-year terms, renewable at the Secretary's discretion. Advisory Board members would serve without compensation except, at the Secretary's discretion, for travel and other expenses required by the performance of their Advisory Board duties.

The Advisory Board's functions would include assisting each selected regional organization to develop and implement its final work plan, reviewing and approving (or not approving) each final work plan, assisting the Secretary in evaluating each regional organization's performance in carrying out its final work plan, and other assistance as the Secretary may request.

(d). WORK PLAN. This subsection would require that each application include a proposed work plan. Again, a proposed work plan in each application would provide HUD with valuable information with respect to the capacity of various applicants to use various grant amounts to carry out the purposes of this section.

Once having been competitively selected, any selected regional organization, without further competition, would continue to receive grant amounts in subsequent fiscal years to the extent that the Secretary determines that such funding should continue. To enhance the prospects of successful leveraging and effective implementation of this Initiative in the colonias, HUD intends to select a regional organization or regional organizations and continue to fund any such organizations in subsequent fiscal years.

Any regional organization that is to continue to receive funding would, in any subsequent fiscal year, submit a proposed work plan to the Advisory Board and HUD for review and approval. In any fiscal year, including the fiscal year in which any regional organization is selected, prior to final determination and allocation of specific grant amounts, any selected regional organization would work with the Advisory Board to determine a specific grant amount and specific activities to be included in its final work plan. Both the Advisory Board and the Secretary would be required to approve the final work plan before any selected regional organization receives any grant amounts. To the extent that the Advisory Board or the Secretary does not approve a work plan, the Advisory Board or the Secretary would be required, to the maximum extent practicable, to assist the selected regional organization that submitted the plan to develop an approvable plan.

A work plan would be required to address, in part, the effects its implementation would have on areas around colonias. A work plan or work plans (if more than one regional organization has been selected) for any fiscal year would be required to ensure that grant amounts are used in a manner that results in assistance and investment for colonias in each State containing colonias, and the Advisory Board and the Secretary would have the authority to require a minimum level of such investment and assistance as a condition of approval of any work plan.

(e). ELIGIBLE ACTIVITIES. In listing forms of assistance that a work plan could include and a regional organization could use, this subsection would set the tone for their approaches. Important working principles would include the coordination of public, private, and community-based organizations and enterprises; the provision of technical assistance in how to make private business enterprises and investments work in the colonias; and the development of investments in housing, community infrastructure and economic development that would be sufficiently robust to continue on after financial support from the Initiative ended. The creation of replicable business models would be a way for the Initiative to extend the benefits of its investments beyond the immediate scope of its funding.

Another form of assistance would be helping colonias residents gain access to financial services, with an educational component to prevent them from becoming victims of predatory practices.

The bill would authorize the Secretary to limit the amount of Initiative funds spent on a regional organization's administrative and planning costs.

(f). GRANT AGREEMENT. The Secretary and each regional organization would have to execute a grant agreement after approval of the regional organization's final work plan.

(g). TERMINATION AND RECAPTURE. If the regional organization failed to fulfill its obligations under the final work plan or the grant agreement, the Secretary would be required to terminate its participation and recapture unexpended grant money.

(h). DETAILS FROM OTHER AGENCIES. Any Federal agency could supply personnel to help a selected regional organization with an approved work plan to carry out its Initiative duties, provided the Federal agency was reimbursed.

(i). ENVIRONMENTAL REVIEW. This provision would provide for the State or local government assumption of Federal environmental review responsibilities by making projects assisted by grant funds under this section subject to HUD's environmental assumption provisions and regulations.

(j). AUTHORIZATION. The Initiative would have a seven-year life. The first year's authorization would be $16 million. The subsequent authorizations would be for the amounts necessary for the Initiative's remaining six years.

(k). SUNSET. The Initiative would sunset in seven years by barring new grants after September 30, 2009.

(l). DEFINITIONS. This subsection would define these terms: colonia, regional organization, Secretary, and United States-Mexico border region.

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL EOP EMPLOYEES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: ENRON SUBPOENA

On May 22, 2002, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee issued the attached subpoena to the Executive Office of the President requesting documents pertaining to certain Enron-related communications occurring between January 1, 1992, and December 2, 2002. Please read the subpoena carefully.

You are directed to produce to Counsel's Office all official EOP documents in your possession (including any e-mails) responsive to the subpoena no later than May 31, 2002.

Please be advised that you are expected to perform a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all official documents in your possession for materials responsive to the subpoena.

You will have satisfied your responsibilities if you produce all of your official EOP documents relating to, referring to, or incorporating the following:

(a) Communications between Enron and any EOP employee occurring between January 1, 1992, and December 2, 2001

(Note: "Enron" means anyone you knew was working for, or communicating on behalf of, Enron Corporation or one of its businesses.); and

(b) Communications about Enron between any EOP employee and any employee of any Executive Branch department or agency occurring between January 1, 1992, and December 2, 2001

(Note: The Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President are not departments or agencies. Thus, category (b) does not include internal communications solely between or among EOP/OVP employees.)

You are also directed to complete the attached Certification and return it by May 31. Note that you must complete the Certification whether or not you have responsive documents.

All documents and Certifications should be delivered to Hana Brilliant (6-5049) in EEOB 158.

If you have any questions, please call Associate Counsels Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984), Brad Berenson (6-2318), or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

CERTIFICATION

Please check one of the following:

_____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the official EOP documents in my possession (including any e-mails I have) for materials responsive to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committees subpoena dated May 22, 2002, and have produced all such documents to the Office of the Counsel to the President.

_____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the official EOP documents in my possession (including any e-mails I have) for materials responsive to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committees subpoena dated May 22, 2002, and have no such documents.

I received a telephone call from Elaine Halchin. Elaine is with the Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress. Her telephone number is 202 707-0646. She is responsible for all requests for information realted to travel policy for the Federal government. She has had a request for information regarding Policy, Procedures, Guidelines, and Instructions related to Senior Official Travel and the expense calculations and accounting. Particularly as it relates to reimbursement of expenses to the government by travelers and how calculation of reimbursements distribution. RE: 1982 memo referenced in the Washington Post 5/21. I told her that I would need to make a few inquiries before I was able to respond to her. Mr. Danial has asked me to forward this information to you.

107th CONGRESS
1st Session
H. R. 3148
To amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to provide equitable treatment of Alaska Native Vietnam Veterans, and for other purposes.
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
October 16, 2001
Mr. YOUNG of Alaska introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on Resources

A BILL
To amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to provide equitable treatment of Alaska Native Vietnam Veterans, and for other purposes.
Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
SECTION 1. ALASKA NATIVE VETERANS.
Section 41 of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1629g) is amended as follows:
(1) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) are amended to read as follows:
`(1) The period for filing allotments under this Act shall end on July 31, 2003. A person described in paragraph (1) or (2) or subsection (b) shall be eligible for an allotment of not more than two parcels of Federal land totaling 160 acres or less.
`(2) Allotments may be selected from--
`(A) vacant lands that are owned by the United States; or `(B) lands that have been selected or conveyed to the State of Alaska or a Native Corporation if such entity voluntarily relinquishes or conveys to the United States the land for the allotment.'.
(2) Subsection (a)(3) is repealed.
(3) In subsection (b)(1), strike `A person' and insert `Except as provided in paragraph (3), a person'.
(4) Subsection (b)(1)(B) is amended to read as follows:
`(B) is a veteran who served during the period between August 5, 1964, and May 7, 1975, including such dates.'.
(5) Subsection (b)(2) is amended to read as follows:
`(2) If an individual who would otherwise have been eligible for an allotment dies before applying for the allotment, an heir on behalf of the estate of the deceased veteran may apply for and receive the allotment.'.
(6) In subsection (b)(3), insert before the period the following: `, except for an heir who applies and receives an allotment on behalf of the estate of a deceased veteran pursuant to paragraph (2)'.

(7) Subsection (e) is amended to read as follows:
`(e) REGULATIONS- All regulations in effect immediately before the enactment of subsection (f) that were promulgated under the authority of this section shall be repealed in accordance with section 552(a)(1)(E) of the Administrative Procedure Act (5 U.S.C. 552(a)(1)(E))'.
(8) Add at the end the following new subsection:
`(f) APPROVAL OF ALLOTMENTS- (1) Subject to valid existing rights, and except as otherwise provided in this subsection, not later than January 31, 2005, the Secretary shall approve an application for allotments filed in accordance with subsection (a) and issue a certificate of allotment which shall be subject to the same terms, conditions, restrictions, and protections provided for such allotments.
`(2) Upon receipt of an allotment application, but in any event not later than October 31, 2003, the Secretary shall notify any person or entity having an interest in land potentially adverse to the applicant of their right to initiate a private contest or file a protest under existing Federal regulations.
`(3) Not later than January 31, 2005, the Secretary shall--
`(A) if no contest or protest is timely filed, approve the application pursuant to paragraph (1); or `(B) if a contest or protest is timely filed, stay the issuance of the certificate of allotment until the contest or protest has been decided.'.
SEC. 2. CODIFICATION.
Unless otherwise provided in an agreement to which the tribe or tribal organization is a party, (including a Tribal-State compact), section 2(2) of the Act of July 5, 1935 (49 Stat. 450, chapter 372) shall not apply to the Indian tribe or tribal organization when the Indian tribe or tribal organization is carrying out a health care program pursuant to a self-determination contract, compact, annual funding agreement, grant, or cooperative agreement under the Indian Self Determination Act.

Thanks for your time last Friday to talk about the adminstration's views on war risk insurance for airlines. As you asked, I've attached the marketing info we have received about the Allianz third party aviation war risk scheme, a competitor to the AIG syndicate. This information was relayed to us by AMR's insurance broker, Aon.

ATTACHED BELOW IS A COPY OF A PRESENTATION GIVEN BY ALLIANZ THIS MORNING IN LONDON TO ANNOUNCE THIS SCHEME. FOR YOUR INFORMATION, NOTE THE FOLLOWING:

THIS IS NOT A RISKS ATTACHING SCHEME - ALLIANZ ARE "OPEN FOR BUSINESS" ON 8 MAY 2002 AND WHEN THE FIRST RISK ATTACHES, THE SCHEME WILL RUN FOR 12 MONTHS FROM THAT DATE SO THAT ANY RISK INCEPTING AFTER THE FIRST RISK WILL BE FOR A PRO RATA PERIOD - RISKS ATTACHING NEARER TO THE END OF 12 MONTHS WILL BE SUBJECT TO A MINIMUM PREMIUM - THOSE ATTACHING NEARER TO THE START OF THE 12 MONTHS WILL NOT.

THE RATING SHOWN IS NOT NEGOTIABLE - THERE ARE ADDITIONAL SUM INSURED BANDS WHICH WE WILL BE ADVISED OF ASAP - THE ONLY NEGOTIABLE FACTOR IS THE NO CLAIMS
BONUS FEATURE WHICH CAN BE UP TO 25% - THE NO CLAIMS BONUS IS A MASTER SLIP FEATURE AND WILL BE LOST TO ALL INSUREDS IF ONE HAS A CLAIM. THE AMOUNT OF NCB WILL OF COURSE VARY AND ALLIANZ ARE "KEEN" FOR AIRLINES TO GET TOGETHER TO MAXIMISE THE NCB - THIS DILUTES THE AGGREGATE.

THE MASTER SLIP REFERS TO MASTER EVENTS WHICH APPLY TO INCIDENTS WHICH ARE ACTUALLY INSURED BY THE SCHEME AND ALLIANZ HAVE 45 DAYS IN WHICH TO

MASTER EVENT.

THE MASTER SLIP CEASES AFTER 4 MASTER EVENTS OR EXHAUSTION OF THE MASTER SCHEME

WE ARE AWAITING SIGHT OF A POLICY DOCUMENT WHICH SHOULD BE AVAILABLE EARLY NEXT WEEK AS THERE ARE CERTAIN ISSUES WHICH WE NEED TO REVIEW.

FURTHER ADVICES TO FOLLOW.

FLORIDA FALLOUT: DoJ Reverses Course And Finds No Election Violations
One week "after reigniting the controversy" over the WH 2000 FL vote, the DoJ told Congress 5/28 that "no Floridians were intentionally prevented from voting and that problems at the polls caused only a few people to leave without voting." In a letter to the Senate Jud. Cmte, DoJ Assistant AG Ralph Boyd wrote, "While the Civil Rights Division discovered evidence of significant confusion and delay in the three counties (Orange, Osceloa, and Miami-Dade), there were relatively few voters who actually did not vote because of these problems." Boyd said after "looking into 11,000 complaints" about the election, the DoJ "found violations in the three counties - mostly because of language barriers - and this 'may have resulted in at least 26 voters choosing to leave the polls.'" Boyd said, "that number of voters 'doesn't reasonably cast any doubt on President Bush's several hundred vote margin of victory" in FL. The DoJ's "announcement was immediately greeted with partisan skepticism." Sen. Bill Nelson (D-FL): "This is a stretch for me to believe, out of 11,000 complaints with everything that we went through." Last week, Boyd "told members" of the Sen. Jud. Cmte that the civil rights division "was preparing to sue the three counties for election law violations relating" to WH 2000, "with an eye toward reaching quick settlements." Rob Labasky, an atty for FL's assn of election supervisors, said the DoJ's "new letter appeared to counterbalance Boyd's statements about the lawsuits last week" (Smith/Allison, St. Petersburg Times, 5/29). FL Dem Chair Bob Poe, on the DoJ letter: "The U.S. Department of Justice's determination that there is little evidence that Florida voters were intentionally denied their right to vote in the 2000 general election is a slap in the face to all Floridians" (release, 5/29).

Defendant.

DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

Pursuant to Rule 12(b)(1) and (6), defendant moves to dismiss this case as non-justiciable and for failure to state a claim upon which relief can be granted. Defendant further opposes plaintiff's motion for summary judgment. In support of defendant's motion to dismiss and in opposition to plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, defendant respectfully refers the Court to the attached memorandum of points and authorities.

MEMORANDUM OF POINTS AND AUTHORITIES IN SUPPORT OF DEFENDANT'S MOTION TO DISMISS AND IN OPPOSITION TO PLAINTIFF'S MOTION FOR SUMMARY JUDGMENT

REV_00146033

PRELIMINARY STATEMENT

Comptroller General David M. Walker seeks to place this Court in the middle of an asserted inter-branch dispute over access to executive branch documents. Specifically, he sought (and continues to seek), based on a request from two individual legislators, documents from the Vice President regarding the process by which the Vice President and top presidential advisers assisted the President in the development of the President's National Energy Policy. In response, the Vice President explained that the Comptroller General's request exceeded his statutory authority and sought unconstitutionally to interfere with the functioning of the presidency. The Comptroller General then filed this suit to enlist the courts in his effort to compel the Vice President to disclose documents. The Comptroller General's claim for judicial relief requires ignoring well-established limits on the judiciary and relies on a virtually boundless view of the Comptroller General's own authority. The Comptroller General's view would work a revolution in the separation of powers. Disputes between the executive and legislative branches that have been resolved without judicial involvement from the earliest days of the republic would be the subject of district court litigation, with the Comptroller General, a congressional agent, playing the central role. Fortunately, the Court can avoid this fundamental reworking of the constitutional scheme by deciding this case on narrower statutory grounds.

The Vice President moves to dismiss the suit principally on the grounds that: (1) the Comptroller General lacks standing; (2) the doctrines of justiciability and equitable discretion warrant dismissal of the case; (3) Section 716 of title 31, the asserted jurisdictional basis for this suit, only authorizes suits against the head of an agency, and the Vice President is not the head of an agency; (4) Sections 712 and 717 of title 31, the asserted bases for the Comptroller General's inquiry, do not provide statutory authority for this inquiry; (5) if these statutes did provide the authority that the Comptroller General claims, they would be unconstitutional as applied in this case; and (6) at a minimum, the statutes should be interpreted to avoid such a constitutionally doubtful reach. To survive this motion to dismiss, the Comptroller General must prevail on every one of these statutory and constitutional issues.

If the Court dismisses the case on one of the narrower grounds for decision — that the Comptroller General lacks standing to sue, that the doctrines of justiciability or equitable discretion warrant dismissal, or that the Comptroller General cannot sue the Vice President under Section 716 of title 31 because he is not the head of an agency — the Court need not resolve the full reach of the Comptroller General's statutory authority or whether that authority is consistent with the constitutional separation of powers. If the Court goes beyond these narrow grounds, it should strive to interpret the Comptroller General's statutory authority to avoid constitutional difficulties. The Comptroller General asserts a virtually unlimited authority to investigate the Executive Branch. He claims the authority to investigate all expenditures of money, and he views time as money. He claims the authority to investigate program results, and interprets results to include the entire process by which the results were produced. The Comptroller General's interpretation of his authority is neither the only nor the most natural reading of the statutory text, and the most natural reading of the text gives the Comptroller General a still formidable statutory power that co-exists with the Constitution. If, however, this Court determines that Congress intended to aggrandize its agent at the expense of powers exclusively entrusted to the executive branch, then it should strike down the statute as unconstitutional.

The Vice President's Message to the House and Senate stated clearly why the Comptroller General's suit cannot stand as a matter of constitutional law:

> If the Comptroller General's misconstruction of the statutes * * * were to prevail, his conduct would unconstitutionally interfere with the functioning of the Executive Branch. For example, due regard for the constitutional separation of powers requires respecting the independence of the President, the Vice President and the President's other senior advisers as they execute the function of developing recommendations for policy and legislation — a core constitutional function of the Executive Branch. Also, preservation of the ability of the Executive Branch to function effectively requires respecting the confidentiality of communications among a President, a Vice President, the President's other senior advisers and others. A President and his senior advisers must be able to work in an atmosphere that respects confidentiality of communications if the President is to get the good, candid advice and other information upon which wise decisionmaking depends.

Compl. Ex. J at app. 2.

REV_00146035

For the reasons explained below, the Vice President asks the Court to deny Comptroller General Walker's motion for summary judgment and to grant the Vice President's motion to dismiss the case.

BACKGROUND AND STATEMENT OF FACTS

I. GAO's History and Statutory Basis

Congress created the office of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office (GAO) in the Budget and Accounting Act of 1921, 42 Stat. 20, 23 (1921). It established GAO as an agent of Congress, "independent of the executive departments," 31 U.S.C. § 702(a), and made the Comptroller General removable only by Congress through the impeachment process or by enactment of a joint resolution removing the Comptroller General for specified causes, 31 U.S.C. § 703(e)(1). See Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714, 730-731 (1986) (describing Comptroller General as "an agent of Congress") (citation omitted).

Prior to the adoption of the 1921 Act, no centralized budget process existed. Rather, each department and agency submitted independent budget proposals to Congress, which Congress determined resulted in "extravagance, inefficiency, and duplication of service." H.R. Rep. No. 14, 67th Cong., 1st Sess. 4 (1921). The 1921 Act thus created both the Bureau of the Budget (now the Office of Management and Budget, 31 U.S.C. § 501), to centralize the budget process, and the General Accounting Office, to provide Congress with a mechanism for auditing certain activities of the other parts of government "to insure at all times a businesslike execution of the budget." H.R. Rep. No. 14, supra, at 7. As the House committee described it:

> The creation of [the General Accounting Office] will enable it to furnish information to Congress and to its committees regarding the expenditures of the Government. He could and would be expected to criticize extravagance, duplications, and inefficienc[ies] in executive departments.

Id. at 8 (emphasis added).

Accordingly, the 1921 Act authorized the Comptroller General to "investigate * * * all matters relating to the receipt, disbursement, and application of public funds." § 312, 42 Stat. 20, 25. That same authorization now exists in 31 U.S.C. § 712(1), which authorizes the Comptroller

REV_00146036

General to "investigate all matters related to the receipt, disbursement, and use of public money."[1] Then, as now, this authorization was intended to allow the Comptroller General to secure "necessary information concerning the financial transactions of the Government." The General Accounting Office: A Study of Its Functions and Operations, H.R. Rep. No. 81-1441 at 6 (1949) (emphasis added). Consistent with that limited financial purpose, "GAO's activities in the first several decades emphasized strict compliance with laws governing the federal spending process." See Staff of the Senate Comm. on Governmental Affairs, 103d Cong., 2d Sess., The Roles, Mission and Operation of the U.S. General Accounting Office, 2 (Comm. Print 1994) (National Academy of Public Admin.); Pl's. S. J. Mem. 10.

In 1967, Congress mandated that GAO undertake a more comprehensive review of specified economic opportunity programs to determine not only whether those programs were operating efficiently, but also whether their results were fulfilling the policy goals Congress had set for them. See Economic Opportunity Amendments of 1967, Pub. L. No. 90-222, 81 Stat. 672, 727. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970, Pub. L. No. 91-510, 84 Stat. 1140, and the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974, Pub. L. No. 93-344, 88 Stat. 297, subsequently gave the Comptroller General a similar authority to evaluate the results of federal programs in general. As currently codified, that authority purports to allow the Comptroller General to "evaluate the results of a program or activity the Government carries out under existing law — (1) on the initiative of the Comptroller General; (2) when either House of Congress orders an evaluation; or (3) when a committee of Congress with jurisdiction over the program or activity requests the evaluation." 31 U.S.C. § 717(b).

GAO's authority to conduct program-results evaluations under § 717(b) remains limited to reviewing whether programs created and funded by congressional enactment are efficiently and effectively satisfying Congress's stated goals. See H.R. Rep No. 91-1215 at 17-18, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4417, 4432-33 (House Report to the 1970 Act describing the new "extension[]" of GAO's work in a section entitled "Oversight and Program Analysis Assistance to the Congress," and stating that GAO's new non-audit responsibilities were intended to assist Congress in "determining whether existing programs are being administered in accordance with congressional intent" and in "exploring the advisability of modifying or even of abolishing such programs") (emphasis added). As then-Comptroller General Staats explained, § 717(b) clarifies GAO's "charter to review and evaluate Federal and federally assisted programs as to whether these programs are being carried out as intended by the Congress. In other words, [the statute allows GAO to determine] whether programs are achieving congressionally stated objectives in the most effective manner and at the lowest cost." Letter from Comptroller General Elmer B. Staats to Rep. B.F. Sisk (Oct. 31, 1969) (Pl's. S.J. Mem. Ex. 7) (emphases added).

Finally, in the General Accounting Office Act of 1980, 94 Stat. 311, 312, Congress added the current provisions of 31 U.S.C. § 716(b), which purport to provide a judicial-enforcement mechanism to assist the Comptroller General in his efforts to inspect agency records. Where "an agency record is not made available to the Comptroller General," he may make a written request to the head of the agency. § 716(b)(1). If the agency head does not provide the requested records within twenty days, the Comptroller General may report that fact to the President, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, the Attorney General, the agency head, and Congress. Ibid. The Act provides that, after waiting twenty more days, the Comptroller General may initiate litigation "to require the head of the agency" to produce the records. § 716(b)(2) (emphasis added). No suit may be filed, however, if the records sought pertain to foreign intelligence or counterintelligence, if the records are exempt by statute from disclosure to the Comptroller General, or if the President or the OMB Director certifies within twenty days of the Comptroller General's report that the records would be exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act's exemptions for deliberative or confidential law enforcement records and that disclosure would "impair substantially the operations of the Government." § 716(d)(1).

Title 31 defines the term "agency" to mean "a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government." 31 U.S.C. § 101. Nothing in either the text or legislative history of title 31 identifies the President, the Vice President, or close presidential advisers within the definition of "agency" subject to suit by the Comptroller General.

II. The Present Dispute

On January 29, 2001, the President created the NEPDG, composed of the Vice President, the Secretaries of Treasury, Interior, Agriculture, Commerce, Transportation and Energy, the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Deputy Chief of Staff to the President for Policy, and the Assistants to the President for Economic Policy and Intergovernmental Affairs. Compl. Ex. A. Acting pursuant to the powers granted to the President by the Constitution, including the powers to obtain opinions from the principal officers in the Executive Branch and to recommend for the consideration of Congress such measures as the President judges "necessary and expedient," see U.S. CONST. art II, § 2, cl. 2; id. art. II § 3, the President charged the NEPDG to develop, under the Vice President's leadership, a national energy policy and "to gather information, deliberate, and * * * make recommendations to the President." Compl. Ex. A at 2. The NEPDG made its recommendations to the President in May 2001. Under the terms of the President's memorandum, the NEPDG ceased to exist by September 30, 2001. Id. at 3.

Even before the NEPDG completed its work, two individual congressmen, Rep. John D. Dingell, who happens to be the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, and Rep. Henry A. Waxman, who happens to be the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Government Operations, asked GAO to investigate the manner in which the NEPDG conducted its business. Compl. ¶ 21. Solely as a result of this request, GAO initiated an investigation. Id. at ¶¶ 21-22. See also id. at ¶ 14. GAO initially demanded access to a broad range of documents as well as interviews with members and staff. Id., Exh. C. Although it questioned GAO's legal authority to investigate the NEPDG, the Office of the Vice President did provide, as a matter of comity and reserving all authorities and privileges, information concerning the composition of the NEPDG staff, the nature of their activities, the number and dates of NEPDG meetings, and its expenditures. Id. at ¶ 26, 30.

GAO persisted in its sweeping requests for information about the NEPDG. Following informal attempts at an amicable resolution, the Comptroller General formally demanded a broad range of information under 31 U.S.C. § 716(b) on July 18, 2001. Among the categories of information he sought were the identities of all persons who attended NEPDG meetings, information regarding staff, the identity of all persons consulted by the Vice President and NEPDG staff, the contents of all discussions with such persons (including minutes and notes of such meetings), and the criteria used to determine with whom the Vice President and the staff met. Compl. ¶ 39, Ex. I. As alleged in the Complaint, the Comptroller General subsequently withdrew his initial requests for minutes and notes of meetings. Id. at ¶ 42. Nevertheless, as the Complaint and plaintiff's memorandum in support of his motion for summary judgment both make clear, the Comptroller General continues to insist that the Vice President must disclose, inter alia, every person with whom the Vice President met while he was serving as a close presidential adviser discharging express constitutional functions at the request of the President and the "purpose" and "agenda" of each of those meetings. He even demands information concerning what decision-making process the Vice President and his staff followed in "determin[ing] who would be invited to the meetings." Compl. Prayer for Relief ¶ (a); Pl's. S.J. Mem. 25-26,28,34.

The Vice President declined to comply with these sweeping, intrusive, and unprecedented requests because they exceeded the Comptroller General's statutory authority and would unconstitutionally have interfered with the functioning of the Executive Branch. Compl. ¶ 44.[2]

Again invoking § 716, the Comptroller General reported the existence of the dispute to the President, the Vice President, Congress, the Attorney General, and the Director of the Office of Management and Budget on August 17, 2001. Id. at ¶ 47. On September 6, 2001, the Office of the Vice President provided certain additional information relating to the identities of the NEPDG staff, id. at ¶ 52, but again declined to provide the expansive range of documents demanded. The Comptroller General then filed this unprecedented action, initiating a lawsuit, purportedly under 31 U.S.C. § 716(b), for a judicial decree forcing the Vice President to comply with the Comptroller General's demands for information regarding the deliberations of the President's internal task force.

ARGUMENT

The Comptroller General alleges a right to documents concerning the discharge of the President's constitutional functions in the possession of the President's closest advisers, and indeed the President himself. That alleged right is completely inconsistent with the constitutional system of separation of powers. That doctrine limits the role of the judiciary to deciding only those cases where the plaintiff has a genuine stake in the outcome of the litigation. Where, as here, a plaintiff has not suffered any personal injury and attempts to assert only the general, institutional interests of Congress, he lacks standing. Moreover, even when parties have had standing, courts in comparable cases have relied on principles of separation of powers to decline to exercise jurisdiction, remitting such matters to the political branches for resolution. In addition, the Comptroller General lacks the statutory authority he claims, especially in light of separation-of-powers principles. A straightforward construction of the applicable statutes alone compels the conclusion that the Comptroller General's demands in this case are ultra vires. That

---

[2] As the Complaint correctly notes, GAO also pursued similar inquiries with other agencies, whose heads were members of the NEPDG. Those agencies responded to GAO's requests, except to the extent that the requests overlapped with those directed to the Vice President for meetings held by the Vice President or NEPDG staff. Compl. ¶ 51.

REV_00146041

conclusion is only bolstered by the separation-of-powers implications of this case; the principle of constitutional avoidance clearly precludes the Comptroller General's overly expansive interpretation of his statutory authority. Finally, if the Comptroller General's sweeping construction of his statutory authority were correct, then his demands for documents from the Vice President would violate the separation of powers by directly interfering with the President's ability to discharge his express constitutional functions and by providing a legislative agent with an executive power to seek judicial enforcement of the law.

I. Plaintiff Lacks Standing to Maintain This Action

This Court need not reach the merits of this dispute because the Comptroller General lacks Article III standing to bring this suit. "No principle is more fundamental to the judiciary's proper role in our system of government than the constitutional limitation of federal-court jurisdiction to actual cases or controversies." Raines v. Byrd, 521 U.S. 811, 818 (1997) (quoting Simon v. Eastern Ky. Welfare Rights Org., 426 U.S. 26, 37 (1976)). It is a bedrock of Article III's case-or-controversy requirement that a plaintiff must establish his personal standing to sue. Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561 (1992) (plaintiff bears burden of establishing standing); see also Valley Forge Christian College v. Americans United for Separation of Church and State, 454 U.S. 464, 471 (1982).

The Supreme Court has repeatedly emphasized that a core purpose of Article III's standing doctrine is to safeguard the proper separation of powers by preventing courts from wading into disputes that are better resolved by the political branches of government. "[T]he law of Article III standing is built on a single basic idea – the idea of separation of powers." Allen v. Wright, 468 U.S. 737, 752 (1984). These separation-of-powers concerns are heightened where the courts are asked to resolve a dispute between the coordinate political branches. The "standing inquiry [is] especially rigorous when reaching the merits of the dispute would force [the court] to decide whether an action taken by one of the other two branches of the Federal Government was unconstitutional." Raines, 521 U.S. at 819-20 (citations omitted).

To satisfy his burden of establishing standing, "[a] plaintiff must allege personal injury fairly traceable to the defendant's allegedly unlawful conduct and likely to be redressed by the requested relief." Allen, 468 U.S. at 751. Whether a plaintiff possesses standing "often turns on the nature and source of the claim asserted." Warth v. Seldin, 422 U.S. 490, 500 (1975). The Supreme Court has "consistently stressed that a plaintiff's complaint must establish that he has a 'personal stake' in the alleged dispute, and that the alleged injury suffered is particularized as to him." Raines, 521 U.S. at 819.

This "personal stake" requirement is of particular concern in a suit, such as this one, brought to vindicate congressional interests. See Raines, 521 U.S. at 818-20. Under those circumstances, an individual plaintiff must assert a personal, not institutional, interest to establish injury in fact. Id. at 820-21. Because plaintiff's Complaint does not allege any such personal stake in this case, it must be dismissed for lack of standing.

Indeed, this suit is far removed from an exercise of the "judicial Power" and the resolution of "Cases" and "Controversies" as the Framers understood those terms. As the Supreme Court has explained, "Article III's restriction of the judicial power to 'Cases' and 'Controversies' is properly understood to mean 'cases and controversies of the sort traditionally amenable to, and resolved by, the judicial process.'" Vermont Agency of Natural Resources v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 774 (2000) (citation omitted). There certainly is no history or tradition that would support inter-branch lawsuits, much less inter-branch suits brought by a mere agent of Congress.

In Raines, the plaintiffs were members of Congress challenging the validity of the Line Item Veto Act, which they had opposed as legislators. They brought suit under a provision of the Act that purported to grant standing and authority to challenge the Act's constitutionality to "[a]ny member of Congress." 521 U.S. at 815 (citation omitted). The plaintiffs claimed that the Act injured them by altering the balance of powers between the executive and legislative branches and by changing the effectiveness of their votes on appropriations bills. At the outset, the Supreme Court warned that "[i]n the light of th[e] overriding and time-honored concern about keeping the Judiciary's power within its proper constitutional sphere, we must put aside the natural urge to proceed directly to the merits of this important dispute." Id. at 820. "Instead," the Court explained, "we must carefully inquire as to whether appellees have met their burden of establishing that their claimed injury is personal, particularized, concrete, and otherwise judicially cognizable." Ibid.

The Court in Raines found no such injury on the part of the individual members of Congress. At most, the Court ruled, the members had only alleged "institutional injury (the diminution of legislative power), which necessarily damages all Members of Congress and both Houses of Congress equally." 521 U.S. at 821. Because "the institutional injury they allege[d was] wholly abstract and widely dispersed," id. at 829, it was insufficient to confer standing on any individual member of Congress.[3]

The Raines Court also emphasized that history cut strongly against legislative standing. "It is evident from several episodes in our history that in analogous confrontations between one or both Houses of Congress and the Executive Branch, no suit was brought on the basis of claimed injury to official authority or power." 521 U.S. at 826. The Court recounted separation-of-powers disputes that arose over more than a century of the Nation's history and concluded that in each case, neither Congress nor the Executive sought judicial intervention. Id. at 826-828. While the Court acknowledged that "[t]here would be nothing irrational about a system that granted standing in these cases," it held that such a system "is obviously not the regime that has obtained under our Constitution to date." Id. at 828. Rather, "[o]ur regime contemplates a more restricted role for Article III courts." Ibid.

The Raines Court held that Congress cannot evade the Article III requirement of a particularized injury by authorizing an individual who lacks such an injury to bring suit. "It is settled that Congress cannot erase Article III's standing requirements by statutorily granting the right to sue to a plaintiff who would not otherwise have standing." 521 U.S. at 820 n.3. Accordingly, the Court found no Article III standing despite the Line Item Veto Act's express [3] The Supreme Court contrasted Raines with Powell v. McCormack, 395 U.S. 486 (1969), where it recognized the standing of an individual congressman to challenge his expulsion by the House because he had a personal interest in, inter alia, receiving a congressional salary.

authorization of "[a]ny member of Congress" to bring an action for declaratory and injunctive relief challenging the Act's constitutionality.

The Supreme Court in Raines emphasized that Congress itself had taken no action to press the dispute and that individual congressmen had alternative remedies they could pursue:

> We attach some importance to the fact that appellees have not been authorized to represent their respective Houses of Congress in this action * * * . We also note that our conclusion neither deprives Members of Congress of an adequate remedy (since they may repeal the Act or exempt appropriations bills from its reach) * * * .

521 U.S. at 829 (footnote omitted). The Raines Court cited Bender v. Williamsport Area School Dist., 475 U.S. 534, 544 (1986), and United States v. Ballin, 144 U.S. 1, 7 (1892), for the proposition that legislative bodies must generally act collectively. 521 U.S. at 829. The absence of such collective action precludes the assertion of an institutional injury, even where Congress has initially authorized suits by certain individuals.

In two subsequent cases, the D.C. Circuit has applied this same rule to preclude challenges by individual members of Congress on standing grounds. In Chenoweth v. Clinton, 181 F.3d 112 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1012 (2000), the court held that individual members of Congress lacked standing to challenge an executive order on the protection of rivers on the ground that the order denied them the opportunity to vote on the order's subject matter. The court found such a claimed injury "identical" to that dismissed by the Supreme Court in Raines as insufficient. 181 F.3d at 117. And, in Campbell v. Clinton, 203 F.3d 19, 20-21 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 531 U.S. 815 (2000), the court held that individual congressmen lacked standing to challenge the President's alleged noncompliance with either the War Powers Resolution, 50 U.S.C. § 1541 et seq., or the War Powers Clause of the Constitution. The court confirmed that individual members do not have standing to assert Congress's institutional interests in an inter-branch dispute because "political self-help [is] available to congressmen," in the form of power over appropriations or even "the possibility of impeachment." 203 F.3d at 23, 24. "Indeed," the court reasoned, "Raines explicitly rejected [the] argument that legislators should not be required to turn to politics instead of the courts for their remedy." Id. at 24.

REV_00146044

Raines, Chenoweth, and Campbell preclude the Comptroller General's standing in this case. Here, the Comptroller General, is simply acting as a surrogate for two individual members of Congress, purportedly to vindicate an institutional Legislative Branch interest in access to executive branch documents. The Comptroller General makes no claim of any individualized or personal injury to himself. To the contrary, he asserts that he instituted this action as an agent of Congress, acting at the behest of two individual members. Nor do the two congressmen assert a personal interest in the documents, and the only legitimate interest that could be asserted by congressmen qua congressmen would be for the use of the documents necessary for the legislative process. The Comptroller General lacks standing to vindicate that institutional interest, as Raines makes clear. This is particularly true where, as here, Congress has numerous potential political avenues for obtaining information it needs for legislative purposes, and Congress and the Executive Branch have traditionally used their political mechanisms to resolve disputes over documents. Indeed, as GAO has acknowledged, if it fails to obtain documents under § 716, "Congress could invoke its own authorities to attempt to gain access." Pl's. S. J. Mem. Ex. 6, at 14. The give and take of informal interactions between Congress and the Executive Branch, on occasion backed by more formal mechanisms of, e.g., congressional subpoenas — not judicial actions brought by congressional agents — is "the regime that has obtained under our Constitution to date." Raines, 521 U.S. at 828.[4]

Here, however, no House of Congress or congressional committee has invoked the traditional mechanisms to obtain information or has undertaken any effort to obtain any of the [4] Notably, the Constitution provides for the political branches to address each other directly in the governance of the Nation in various ways, see, e.g., U.S. CONST. art. II, § 3 (President authorized to "give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union," and to "recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient"); id. art. I, § 7, cl. 2. (Congress required to "present[]" bills for President's review, and if he disapproves he must return it "with his Objections"); id. art. I, §§ 2,3 (describing impeachment power), but provides no mechanism for invoking judicial resolution of inter-branch disputes.

records plaintiff seeks. As in Raines, neither House of Congress has authorized any action on behalf of either the Senate or the House. Raines thus makes clear that individual Members of Congress cannot assert Congress's institutional interests.

Section 716's authorization for judicial actions does not suffice to give the Comptroller General standing. As Raines demonstrates, the "authorization" that is potentially relevant to the standing inquiry is an authorization by Congress acting collectively after a particular dispute has arisen, not some general statutory authorization to file suit made in advance of a particular dispute. See 521 U.S. at 820, 829. In sum, as was the case with the plaintiffs in Raines, the Comptroller General "ha[s] alleged no injury to [himself] as [an] individual[] (contra, Powell), the institutional injury [he] allege[s] is wholly abstract and widely dispersed (contra, Coleman), and [his] attempt to litigate this dispute at this time and in this form is contrary to historical experience." Id. at 829.

Indeed, plaintiff's claim presents an even more attenuated case for standing than the claims in Raines, Chenoweth, or Campbell because this suit is not brought by a member of Congress, but by a congressionally created stalking horse. The Comptroller General acts as Congress's agent, Bowsher, 478 U.S. at 732, and, as such, he necessarily seeks to vindicate Congress's institutional interests. And here, the Comptroller General is essentially acting to fulfill the curiosity of two individual members. While Raines left open the question of whether Congress itself could bring suit for institutional injuries through a majority vote of its members (or the members of one chamber), it makes clear that anything short of such collective action does not satisfy Article III. 521 U.S. at 827-30 & n.10. If Congress could not delegate to individual members the right to sue in Raines, 521 U.S. at 820 n.3, it, a fortiori, cannot delegate that right to a surrogate acting at the request of a few individual members. (Indeed, purporting to do so creates unique separation-of-powers problems.) Were it otherwise, the holding in Raines would be entirely ineffective and inexplicable. GAO, acting as an agent of Congress, but without the specific authorization of even one House of Congress, simply cannot satisfy the particularized, personal injury requirement of Article III.[5]

II. This Action Is Also Nonjusticiable under the Doctrine of Equitable Discretion

Even if plaintiff had standing, the D.C. Circuit has practiced restraint in cases of this type, in recognition of the same separation-of-powers concerns that underpinned the Supreme Court's holding in Raines. Disputes between the executive and legislative branches over access to documents date back to the Washington Administration. Judicial resolution of these inherently political disputes, however, is virtually unprecedented. Raines, 521 U.S. 826-828. That no court has ever examined GAO's statutory authority to sue the Executive Branch under § 716 is no mere coincidence. No Comptroller General has ever sued under those provisions (see Pl's. S.J. Mem. 17). That record presumably reflects that the courts, rather than enter this inherently political thicket, generally leave such political disputes for resolution by the political branches through the political process, and that the political process has proved capable of resolving such disputes in the past. Indeed, as demonstrated below, these concerns have led courts, even when faced with demands sanctioned by full committees or even full chambers of Congress, to decline to hear such cases. This lawsuit provides an even less compelling circumstance for departure from this longstanding tradition of judicial restraint, as no legislative [5] Indeed, even if a suit by the Comptroller General could somehow be treated the same as a suit brought by Congress as a whole (rather than by the two individual members who requested the investigation), plaintiff would still lack standing for the basic reasons articulated in Raines. This unprecedented GAO suit threatens core separation-of-powers values by injecting the courts into inter-branch disputes. Such judicial actions are not "the regime that has obtained under our Constitution to date," Raines, 521 U.S. at 828, and Article III standing principles prohibit this innovation. As explained below in Part IV, Congress has no right to information concerning the process by which the President exercises his constitutionally-assigned powers to call for the opinions of his top advisers and to recommend legislation to Congress that he judges necessary and expedient, and therefore it simply has not suffered any judicially congnizable injury sufficient to satisfy Article III. Moreover, as explained below in Part III.D, the Comptroller General has not followed the procedures for initiating suit set forth by Congress, and so this suit has not been "authorized" in any sense of the term.

body has authorized either GAO's request for records or this litigation.

Even before the Supreme Court confirmed that Article III precludes suit by individual members of Congress to vindicate institutional interests, the D.C. Circuit accommodated the serious separation-of-powers concerns inherent in inter-branch disputes under the equitable or remedial discretion doctrine, which calls for courts to refrain from exercising jurisdiction over such litigation. The D.C. Circuit first expressly applied that doctrine in cases brought by legislators where the standing or political-question doctrines were thought to be insufficient means of articulating the separation-of-powers concerns presented by such cases. See Riegle v. Federal Open Market Comm., 656 F.2d 873, 880-81 (D.C. Cir.), cert. denied, 454 U.S. 1082 (1981). Thus, the D.C. Circuit concluded, "[t]he most satisfactory means of translating our separation-of-powers concerns into principled decisionmaking is through a doctrine of circumscribed equitable discretion" to be applied in cases "[w]here a congressional plaintiff could obtain substantial relief from his fellow legislators * * * ." Id. at 881; see also Melcher v. Federal Open Market Comm., 836 F.2d 561 (D.C. Cir. 1987), cert. denied, 486 U.S. 1042 (1988); Moore v. United States House of Representatives, 733 F.2d 946 (D.C. Cir. 1984), cert. denied, 469 U.S. 1106 (1985). Accordingly, where individual members have sought judicial review of executive action in advance of any action by Congress itself, courts have repeatedly applied their remedial discretion to withhold relief. See, e.g., Crockett v. Reagan, 720 F.2d 1355 (D.C. Cir. 1983), cert. denied, 467 U.S. 1251 (1984); Lowry v. Reagan, 676 F. Supp. 333, 339 (D.D.C. 1987).

Those same concerns were presaged in earlier confrontations between the Executive and Congress over documents. In United States v. AT&T Co., 551 F.2d 384 (D.C. Cir. 1976), appeal after remand, 567 F.2d 121 (D.C. Cir. 1977), the Justice Department sought to block production of a telephone company's records of national security wiretaps to a congressional committee in response to a congressional subpoena. The court noted that the subject of the inquiry, wiretap legislation, was a "suitable area of federal legislation," 551 F.2d at 393, and that the House of Representatives, as a whole, had voted to intervene in the lawsuit, thereby negating "the possibility of a wayward committee acting contrary to the will of the House." Id. Acknowledging the interests of both branches and the difficulty inherent in any judicial effort to balance those interests, the court noted that "[t]he legislative and executive branches have a long history of settlement of disputes that seemed irreconcilable." Id. at 394. The AT&T case would have been a relatively easy case for judicial resolution because, unlike most disputes between the Legislative and Executive Branches over documents, the relevant records were in the hands of a non-governmental party. But despite its power to resolve the dispute, the court declined to do so, ordering instead that the parties seek a negotiated solution. In so doing, the court emphasized that a judicial resolution would not necessarily protect the interests of both branches and could forever alter the constitutional balance of powers:

> This dispute between the legislative and executive branches has at least some elements of the political-question doctrine. A court decision selects a victor, and tends thereafter to tilt the scales. A compromise worked out between the branches is most likely to meet their essential needs and the country's constitutional balance.

551 F.2d at 394; accord Leach v. Resolution Trust Corp., 860 F. Supp. 868, 874-876 (D.D.C. 1994) (dismissing suit filed by congressman).

Applying this same rule, the court in United States v. House of Representatives, 556 F. Supp. 150 (D.D.C. 1983), declined to entertain a declaratory judgment action by the Executive Branch concerning the rights of a House committee to subpoena documents over which the President asserted executive privilege:

> When constitutional disputes arise concerning the respective powers of the Legislative and Executive Branches, judicial intervention should be delayed until all possibilities for settlement have been exhausted. Judicial restraint is essential to maintain the delicate balance of powers among the branches established by the Constitution.

556 F. Supp. at 152 (citation omitted).

Unlike AT&T or House of Representatives, the present action comes with no legislative endorsement by either House or even by a committee. No subpoena has been issued, no resolution has been passed, and no statute has been enacted in response to this dispute. This controversy thus lacks even the level of contention, urgency, or finality presented in those cases. Consequently, there is an even less compelling need for judicial intervention here.[6]

In a case strikingly similar to this one, this Court in Leach v. Resolution Trust Corp., 860 F. Supp. 868 (D.D.C. 1994), declined to give an expansive reading to a statutory provision allowing access for a ranking minority committee member to agency records otherwise exempt from disclosure under the FOIA. This Court noted that the ranking member had failed to persuade a majority of the committee to authorize his request for the documents sought in litigation and that many of the documents sought were, in fact, being produced to the committee. 860 F. Supp. at 874-76. In such circumstances, where a single member of Congress in the legislative minority sought to invoke judicial review, the Court noted that it was "extremely hesitant to interfere with the legislative process" and concluded "that the exercise of its remedial discretion to decline review * * * is the appropriate method of coping with the important separation-of-powers concerns implicated by this suit." 860 F. Supp. at 876.[7] [6] As this case amply demonstrates, the equitable jurisdiction doctrine is among "'the doctrines that cluster about Article III'" to "define[] with respect to the Judicial Branch the idea of separation of powers on which the Federal Government is founded." Allen, 468 U.S. 750 (quoting Vander Jagt v. O'Neill, 699 F.2d 1166, 1178-1179 (D.C. Cir. 1982) (Bork, J. concurring)). Because those doctrines, which in addition to equitable discretion include standing, mootness, ripeness, and political question, often "overlap[]," the same concerns that should lead this court to apply the equitable discretion doctrine also raise concerns under the ripeness and political question doctrines.

[7] In Chenoweth, the court noted that the equitable discretion doctrine had developed, in part, as an alternative application of separation-of-powers concerns, after the D.C. Circuit (prior to Raines) had erroneously permitted individual members of Congress to sue the Executive Branch. The court held that Raines compelled dismissal of the claims in Chenoweth for lack of standing. 181 F.3d at 114-116. It noted, however, that the same result would apply under its remedial discretion, as plaintiffs could seek a political solution through legislation. 181 F.3d at 116.

The same separation-of-powers concerns underlying those cases should lead this Court to dismiss this action. As plaintiff has conceded, the inquiry here originated with a request from two individual members of Congress and may now be supported by some individual Senators. See Pl's. S. J. Mem. 38-39. Neither request came with the authorization of a full House (or even a committee). Although neither Member has the authority to compel the production of any documents on his own, the Comptroller General purports to exercise his discretionary authority on their behalf.[8] The intervention of the Comptroller General, however, cannot change the fact that the two instigating Members lack the support of either a committee or chamber majority. Just as in Leach, neither ranking minority member has been able to persuade a sufficient number of his colleagues to support the request for information. Nor has any of the committees chaired by the interested Senators taken action here. Rather, in substance, the dispute here is still between the interested Members and their colleagues, not the Comptroller General and defendant, and it is precisely this type of dispute for which the equitable discretion doctrine was devised.

Congress is well-equipped under the Constitution to engage in disputes over documents with the Executive Branch, such as through the use of its subpoena power. Even if the House had done so, the same separation-of-powers concerns underlying the decisions in AT&T and House of Representatives, discussed above, would require judicial restraint. That it has not done so here is strong evidence that Congress, as a collective institution, has not deemed this matter of sufficient moment to precipitate the confrontation plaintiff now seeks. As Leach demonstrates, it makes no sense to precipitate constitutional confrontations by allowing a congressional agent ready access to federal court that circumvents the appropriately cumbersome process of getting a full House to take action. Under the equitable discretion doctrine, judicial intervention in these circumstances is simply not warranted.

III. The Comptroller General Has No Statutory Authority to Bring This Lawsuit or to Review the Activities of the NEPDG

Even if the Comptroller General were assumed to have Article III standing to bring this lawsuit (which he does not), and even if the principles of justiciability and equitable discretion were assumed not to warrant its dismissal (which they do), the Comptroller General has failed to state a claim on which relief can be granted. A straightforward reading of the statutes on which he relies does not support the virtually limitless authority he asserts. Accordingly, this Court should dismiss the Complaint.

A. Section 716 does not authorize this lawsuit because the Vice President is not the head of an agency

The Comptroller General's claim to judicial review rests on a statutory provision that purports to allow him to "bring a civil action in the district court of the United States for the District of Columbia to require the head of the agency to produce a record." 31 U.S.C. § 716(b)(2). Plaintiff's extended treatment of his statutory authority under §§ 712 and 717 (see Pl's. S.J. Mem. 23-48) is therefore all for naught if he cannot establish a statutory right to bring a judicial-enforcement action under § 716(b). Yet, the sole defendant in this lawsuit, the Vice President, is not "the head of [an] agency," as § 716(b) requires. Cf. 31 U.S.C. § 716(a) (allowing Comptroller General to "inspect an agency record"). Accordingly, by its plain terms, § 716(b) does not authorize this action. As a result, regardless of whatever "right to access and examine any records of the executive branch" (Pl's. S.J. Mem. 12) the Comptroller General claims, this lawsuit must be dismissed because it is not an attempt to require "the head of [an] agency to produce a record."

In his summary judgment motion, plaintiff contends that "Congress used the term 'agency' in its broadest sense," and that "both the NEPDG and the [Office of the Vice President]" are agencies under § 716. Pl's. S.J. Mem. 49. But like so many of plaintiff's arguments, his so-called plain-meaning argument proves far too much. If taken seriously, it would actually empower the Comptroller General to seek records directly from the President, or from this Court concerning meetings with its law clerks.[9] Plaintiff's attempt to treat the Vice President as an agency head is no less an affront to our government of separated powers, but it is, in any event, clearly barred by established case law.

REV_00146052

1. Congress has not expressly stated that the Vice President is an "agency" under title 31

Contrary to plaintiff's claims, neither the Vice President nor the Office of the Vice President (OVP) can reasonably be considered an "agency." Even if the Vice President or OVP might arguably fall within the nebulous phrase "instrumentality of the United States Government," 31 U.S.C. § 101 (defining "agency"), Congress's failure to state expressly any intent to reach the Vice President prevents this Court from concluding that he is an agency or head of an agency for purposes of title 31.

In Franklin v. Massachusetts, 505 U.S. 788 (1992), the Supreme Court considered whether the President is an "authority of the Government of the United States" and thus an "agency" under the Administrative Procedure Act. Id. at 800 (quoting 5 U.S.C. §§ 701(b)(1), 551(1)). Of course, the President is literally an "authority of the Government." Nevertheless, the Court concluded that, when the President is neither "explicitly excluded" nor "explicitly included," [9] Plaintiff emphasizes that the chapter of title 31 dealing with GAO refines the definition of "agency" by excluding "the legislative branch" and "the Supreme Court." See 31 U.S.C. § 701(1). But under plaintiff's mechanical application of statutory-construction canons, that exclusion would suffice to demonstrate that this Court is an "agency," or at least an "instrumentality" or "office * * * of the Government." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 50. Moreover, under plaintiff's theory, the express exclusion of the Supreme Court would be superfluous if Article III courts were not already included in title 31's general definition of "agency"; and the exclusion of one court certainly implies that all other courts are included. Thus, under plaintiff's construction of title 31, this Court is an "agency" subject to the Comptroller General's judicial-enforcement authority.

"textual silence is not enough" to make the President an "agency." Id. at 800-801 (emphasis added). Instead, it would "require an express statement by Congress" to establish otherwise. Id. at 801 (emphasis added). As the Court explained, this clear-statement requirement arose "[o]ut of respect for the separation of powers and the unique constitutional position of the President." Id. at 800.[10]

Two years later, the Court reconfirmed its holding that the President is not an "agency." See Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 470 (1994). Since then, courts in this Circuit have looked to Franklin's express-statement requirement in construing statutes other than the APA. See Association of Am. Physicians & Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898, 905 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (AAPS) ("Although [the anti-nepotism statute] defines agency as 'an executive agency,' we doubt that Congress intended to include the White House or the Executive Office of the President." (citing, inter alia, Franklin)); Tulare County v. Bush, 185 F. Supp. 2d 18, 28 (D.D.C. 2001) ("Because the President is not a federal agency within the meaning of the APA, presidential actions are not subject to review pursuant to the APA. Applying similar logic, the President is not a federal agency for the purposes of [the National Environmental Policy Act]." (internal citations omitted)).

Franklin's clear-statement requirement should apply equally to the Vice President. Like the [10] The Court's reference to "respect for the separation of powers," 505 U.S. at 800, does not change the fact that it required an "express statement," rather than merely invoking the canon of constitutional avoidance to construe a statutory term. Although they are sometimes both implicated in an individual case, the two principles are different. See, e.g., Vermont Agency v. United States ex rel. Stevens, 529 U.S. 765, 787 (2000) (explaining that the Court's construction of the word "person" in the qui tam statute was "buttressed by two other considerations," a clear-statement requirement and the constitutional-avoidance doctrine). In this case, the clear-statement requirement means that Congress must expressly mention the President or the Vice President in a statute (which it has not done in the case of title 31). The canon of constitutional avoidance, as discussed below in Part V, independently means that this Court should, in order to avoid the serious constitutional problems posed by plaintiff's broad readings of §§ 712, 716, and 717, adopt the straightforward constructions offered by the defendant — such as a construction of § 716 that excludes the Vice President from its scope.

REV_00146054

President, the Vice President has a "unique constitutional position." Franklin, 505 U.S. at 800. He alone, among senior executive-branch officials, is "totally protected from the President's removal power." Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288, 1295 (D.C. Cir. 1993). He alone is designated by the Constitution to serve as Acting President (see U.S. CONST. amend. XXV), or to "become President" upon the death of the President elect (id., amend. XX, § 3), or upon the removal, death, or resignation of the President (see id., amend. XXV, § 1). In fact, he and the President are the only two public officials in the United States who are elected through a process involving every State. See id., art. II, § 1 & amend. XII. Similarly, the presidency and vice presidency are the only two offices that are defined in Article II of the Constitution, rather than by statute. Finally, the Vice President alone has legislative functions as the President of the Senate. See U.S. CONST. art. I, § 3, cl. 4. Given his unique constitutional status in the Executive Branch, the Vice President should enjoy the protection of Franklin's clear-statement requirement.

In fact, in a parallel context, Congress itself has already recognized that the President and the Vice President are like each other but unlike federal agencies. The general statutory framework that governs the preservation, handling, and disclosure of federal-government records creates two mutually exclusive categories. See Armstrong v. Executive Office of the President, 90 F.3d 553, 556 (D.C. Cir. 1996), cert. denied, 520 U.S. 1239 (1997). The first category, "agency" records, is covered by the Federal Records Act. See id.; 44 U.S.C. §§ 3101-3107, 3301-3314. The second category is covered by the Presidential Records Act. See Armstrong, 90 F.3d at 556; 44 U.S.C. §§ 2201-2207. Tellingly, Congress has classified the executive records of the Vice President and his staff as "Presidential records" rather than "agency" records. See 44 U.S.C. § 2207 ("Vice-Presidential records shall be subject to the provisions of [the Presidential Records Act] in the same manner as Presidential records."); Armstrong v. Bush, 924 F.2d 282, 286 n.2 (D.C. Cir. 1991) ("The President, the Office of Vice President, and the components of the [Executive Office of the President] whose sole responsibility is to advise the President are subject to the [Presidential Records Act] and create 'presidential records.' The components of the EOP that have statutory responsibility * * * are subject to the [Federal Records Act] and create 'federal records.'").[11]

In this case, there is simply no "express statement by Congress" that includes the President or Vice President within title 31's definitions of "agency." If anything, the General Accounting Office Act of 1980, which added the judicial-enforcement provisions to what is now § 716, indicates that the President and Vice President are excluded from the category of agency heads who are subject to judicial enforcement at the Comptroller General's behest. Section 102 of the Act, which added the judicial-enforcement provisions now codified in § 716, referred generically to the "records of any department or establishment." General Accounting Office Act of 1980, Pub. L. No. 96-226, § 102, 94 Stat. 311, 312 (emphasis added). By contrast, the preceding section of the Act (section 101), which expanded GAO's authority to audit certain confidential accounts, referred three times to agencies and the President using the disjunctive. Twice it referred to "the approval, authorization, or certificate of the President of the United States or an official of an executive agency." § 101, 94 Stat. 311. The third time it referred to "the President or the head of the agency concerned." Ibid.[12] These references show clearly that Congress, at [12] These references are currently codified, as amended, at 31 U.S.C. § 3524(a)(1) ("the approval, authorization, or certificate of the President or an official of an executive agency"), and 31 U.S.C. § 3524(a)(2) ("the President or head of the agency").

[11] The Presidential Records Act is not the only statute that distinguishes between the Vice President and agencies. Another was invoked by the court in Haddon v. Walters, 43 F.3d 1488 (D.C. Cir. 1995). The D.C. Circuit determined that Congress did not consider the "Executive Residence" to be an "independent establishment" for purposes of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. In doing so, the court looked to an unrelated statute, 3 U.S.C. § 112, which allows "[t]he head of any department, agency, or independent establishment" to detail employees to certain entities in the White House, including "the White House Office, the Executive Residence at the White House, [and] the Office of the Vice President." See 43 F.3d at 1490. If the Executive Residence is not an "independent establishment" because those terms are placed in separate lists in § 112, it must also follow that the Office of the Vice President is not an "agency."

the precise moment when it adopted the judicial-enforcement provision invoked by plaintiff, knew how to include the President within a provision otherwise applicable to agency heads. Congress's failure to do the same thing in § 716's judicial-enforcement provision demonstrates that Congress did not intend for the President or Vice President to be included in that provision. See Brown v. Gardner, 513 U.S. 115, 120 (1994) ("[W]here Congress includes particular language in one section of a statute but omits it in another section of the same Act, it is generally presumed that Congress acts intentionally and purposely in the disparate inclusion or exclusion." (internal quotation marks omitted)); accord Barnhart v. Sigmon Coal Co., Inc., 534 U.S. 438 (2002).

In the face of this evidence that Congress did not intend to treat the President or Vice President as the "head of [an] agency" under § 716 — or at best was silent on the question — plaintiff asserts that § 716's "structure" "indicates that Congress envisioned that the Comptroller General could * * * bring suit * * * for records under the control of high-level officials at the White House." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 51. He extrapolates that dubious proposition from the fact that some records may be exempted from the reach of judicial enforcement if they are related to activities designated by the President as foreign intelligence or counterintelligence activities, or if the President or Director of OMB certifies that they would fall within certain FOIA exemptions. See 31 U.S.C. § 716(d)(1)(A) and (C). But the fact that the President may prevent certain agency disclosures does not suggest a right to insist on disclosures directly from the Office of the President or the Vice President.[13]

Many traditional "agencies" have records related to foreign intelligence activities or records that fall within the relevant FOIA exemptions. Thus, § 716(d)(1)(C) shows only that Congress

[13] Of course, this provision has its own constitutional problems. To the extent this statute is construed to authorize a congressional agent to seek documents from the Executive (with no expenditure of political capital by the Congress as a whole) and allow the Executive to resist only if the President expends the political capital inherent in an assertion of privilege, it represents an improper effort by Congress to aggrandize itself at the expense of the Executive.

empowered the President or Director of OMB to stop an enforcement action by the Comptroller General against any agency for such records, not that the Office of the President or the Office of the Vice President was to be implicitly included among the agencies subject to the provision. In fact, as plaintiff has indicated, the certification procedure in § 716(d)(1)(C) was employed by the Clinton Administration in connection with the Comptroller General's attempt to obtain access to records of the Department of Defense and the Department of State. See Access to Executive Branch Records, GAO-01-440R (Mar. 6, 2001) (Pl's. S.J. Mem. Ex. 6).[14]

The only other evidence that plaintiff provides to demonstrate Congress's purported intent to reach the President or Vice President is contained in committee reports associated with the GAO Act of 1980. Of course, as an initial matter, those reports cannot satisfy Franklin's requirement of an "express statement." On its face, Franklin requires "an express statement by Congress." 505 U.S. at 801 (emphasis added). Needless to say, committee reports cannot satisfy this standard. See, e.g., FEC v. Rose, 806 F.2d 1081, 1090 (D.C. Cir. 1986) ("Congressmen typically vote on the language of a bill rather tha[n] on reports that accompany it" (emphasis in original, internal quotation marks omitted)). Moreover, abjuring reliance on committee reports is consistent with the manner in which the Supreme Court applies its clear-statement requirements. Unlike mere "interpretative presumption[s]," the Court's clear-statement requirements protect [14] This reasoning also explains why plaintiff over-reaches when he relies on the 1979 testimony of the Director of OMB. See Pl's. S.J. Mem. 54. Testifying on a version of the bill that did not yet include any exclusions in the judicial-enforcement provisions (i.e., no exclusion for records about foreign intelligence activities, nor any general exclusion for records exempted from disclosure to the Comptroller General by other statutes), the Director noted that the judicial-enforcement provisions "could potentially permit the Comptroller General to sue to compel the disclosure of the same documents which section 101 of H.R. 24 would deny him access to." General Accounting Office Act of 1979: Hearing Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Gov't Operations, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 89, 110 (1979). Because section 101 of H.R. 24 expressly exempted "certain authorities of the Director of Central Intelligence * * * for sensitive foreign intelligence and counter-intelligence activities," as the Director of OMB pointed out (id. at 87, 104), his caution about the potentially broader scope of section 102 was well-taken, even without assuming that section 102 would apply to suits against the President.

"weighty and constant values," often constitutional ones. Astoria Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Solimino, 501 U.S. 104, 108-109 (1991) (citations omitted). When such requirements apply, "the unequivocal expression" that the Court has "insist[ed] upon is an expression in statutory text. If clarity does not exist there, it cannot be supplied by a committee report." United States v. Nordic Village, Inc., 503 U.S. 30, 37 (1992) (emphases added, internal quotation marks omitted); see also EEOC v. Arabian Am. Oil Co., 499 U.S. 244, 262-63 (1991) (Marshall, J., dissenting) (noting that "[c]lear-statement rules," like the one adopted by the majority in that case, do not operate "to reveal actual congressional intent," rather they "foreclose inquiry into extrinsic guides to interpretation, and even compel courts to select less plausible candidates from within the range of permissible constructions" (emphasis added, internal citations omitted)). Thus, the statutory language is dispositive in demonstrating that plaintiff has not met his burden under Franklin of identifying an express statement by Congress.

Yet, even if — contrary to precedent — the committee reports are considered here, they contain no express statement indicating an intent to include the Vice President within the definition of an agency. Plaintiff relies upon a single sentence in the Senate Report, which refers to "enforcement actions at the Presidential level" and the President's ability to avoid a suit against himself or his close advisers by exercising the certification power now contained in § 716(d)(1)(C). S. Rep. No. 96-570, at 8, reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 732, 739. That reference, however, which merely assumes without expressly stating that the President is subject to a § 716 suit, is too opaque to satisfy Franklin. More importantly, it is inconsistent with the statutory text. The Senate Report states that the bill allows the President or Director of OMB to "preclude a suit * * * for information which would not be available under the Freedom of Information Act." S. Rep. No. 96-570, supra, at 8, reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 739. Thus, the report says that the President can prevent the disclosure of records "which would not be available under [FOIA]," or, in other words, that the Comptroller General's access does not extend beyond what is allowed under FOIA.

The Senate Report's description of the President's certification authority is inconsistent with the terms of the statute. The certification authority in § 716(d)(1)(C) contains no broad carve-out or per se exclusion for presidential advisers co-extensive with FOIA, as the Senate Report implies. Instead, the statute requires a determination (by the President or Director of OMB) that one of two specific FOIA exemptions (out of nine) would apply to the records and that "disclosure reasonably could be expected to impair substantially the operations of the Government." 31 U.S.C. § 716(d)(1)(C). While not insubstantial, that certification power does not extend as far as the protections afforded by FOIA, and its exercise imposes a much higher administrative burden on the Executive than does FOIA. In 1980, as it does today, FOIA did not make available any documents from the President and his principal advisers and assistants; there was no need whatsoever to determine whether documents fell within individual exemptions, or how harmful disclosure might be. All of those records were simply off-limits under FOIA because presidential advisers were "not included within the term 'agency' under the FOIA." Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press, 445 U.S. 136, 156 (1980); see also Part III.A.2, below.[15] The Senate Report incorrectly suggests that the certification power prevents the judicial-enforcement power from being any broader than FOIA. That inconsistency with the statute renders the Senate Report especially unworthy of respect in attempting to establish an express congressional statement. See, e.g., Public Citizen v. Carlin, 184 F.3d 900, 904 (D.C. Cir. 1999), cert. denied, 529 U.S. 1003 (2000) ("Legislative history may show the meaning of the texts * * * but may not be used to show an 'intent' at variance with the meaning of the text." (quoting In re Sinclair, 870 F.2d 1340, 1344 (7th Cir.1989)). In other words, because the Senate Report mischaracterizes the President's certification power, its apparent assumption that there [15] Kissinger was actually decided the week after the date of the Senate Report. But even before the release of the Kissinger opinion — which affirmed the district and appellate courts on this point — it was settled that presidential advisers were not considered agencies under FOIA. See, e.g., 1 KENNETH CULP DAVIS, ADMINISTRATIVE LAW TREATISE § 1.2, at 8 (2d ed. 1978).

can be "enforcement actions at the presidential level" should be given no credence. (Moreover, even if that sentence in the Senate Report is taken seriously, the only way to give practical effect to its conclusion that the Comptroller General's access to presidential-level documents is co-extensive with FOIA is to exclude the President and Vice President from the definition of "agency."[16])

Plaintiff also attempts to locate congressional intent to allow judicial-enforcement against the President and Vice President in the fact that the House and Senate Reports both reprint (in an appendix) GAO's own list of the difficulties it claimed to have had in gaining access to executive branch documents, including two examples involving entities within the Executive Office of the President. See Pl's. S.J. Mem. 52-53. Of course, those appendices, prepared by GAO, are even less convincing as an "express statement by Congress" than the actual committee reports (which were at least prepared by congressional staffers). The Senate Report itself neither discusses any examples of prior access problems, nor does it specifically endorse all of the examples in GAO's list. Nowhere does it indicate that the new provisions would have prevented each of the problems cited by GAO. See S. Rep. No. 96-570, supra, at 5, reprinted in 1980 U.S.C.C.A.N. 736. The House Report is even less helpful to plaintiff. Although it reprints GAO's list in an appendix, the only examples of access problems that the Committee actually describes involved the Department of Defense and the Department of State, not the White House. See H.R. Rep. No. 96-425, at 5 (1979).

There is simply no clear statement of any congressional intent to include the President or Vice President among the agency heads to which § 716(b) applies. To the contrary, given the differences between sections 101 and 102 of the GAO Act of 1980, there are affirmative indications that Congress excluded them. The best that can be said for the Comptroller [16] This is also consistent with the statutory distinction, discussed above, between "agency records," which are subject to FOIA, and presidential and vice presidential records, which are not.

REV_00146061

General's case is that the President and Vice President are "not explicitly excluded" nor "explicitly included"; but such "textual silence" led the Supreme Court to conclude in Franklin that the President is not an "authority of the Government of the United States." 505 U.S. at 800. Under these circumstances, the Vice President cannot be considered an agency or an agency head subject to the judicial-enforcement provisions in § 716.

2. Entities whose "sole function is to advise and assist the President" are not "agencies"

The same conclusion also follows from well-established interpretations of the term "agency" in other statutes dealing with access to records. As mentioned above, even when the judicial-enforcement provisions were added in 1980, it was clear that the definitions of "agency" under the APA and FOIA did not include the President's close advisers or entities whose sole function was to advise and assist the President. The definition of "agency" in title 31 is no broader than those used in the APA and FOIA. Furthermore, as relevant here, the sole function of the Vice President is to advise and assist the President (and the same was true for the NEPDG while it existed). Accordingly, for this independent reason, neither the Vice President nor the NEPDG can be considered to be or to have been an "agency" under § 716.[17]

As the Supreme Court explained just one month before the GAO Act of 1980 became law, telephone notes made by Henry Kissinger while he was serving as Assistant to the President were not "agency records" under FOIA. Kissinger v. Reporters Comm. for Freedom of the Press,

[17] Plaintiff purports to sue the Vice President in part as the Chairman of the NEPDG, but the Vice President is always a constitutional officer, regardless of the "capacity" in which he is alleged to have acted. This means that Franklin applies to him regardless of how he is characterized by plaintiff. Moreover, as a matter of law, the NEPDG ceased to exist by September 30, 2001, several months before this lawsuit was filed (see Compl. Ex. A at 3 (Memorandum from the President directing that "[t]he Energy Policy Development Group shall terminate no later than the end of the fiscal year 2001")), which would render moot any suit against the Vice President as Chairman of the NEPDG. Nevertheless, defendant discusses here why the NEPDG was not an "agency," and thus why the Vice President could not have been the head of an agency by virtue of being Chairman of the NEPDG.

445 U.S. 136, 156 (1980).[18] The FOIA defines "agency," then and now, to include not only the APA's definition of "agency" (any "authority of the Government") but also "any * * * establishment in the executive branch of the Government (including the Executive Office of the President)." 5 U.S.C. §§ 551(1), 552(f)(1). In spite of that broad definition, the Court concluded that "the 'Executive Office' does not include the Office of the President," and therefore that "'the President's immediate personal staff or units in the Executive Office whose sole function is to advise and assist the President' are not included within the term 'agency' under the FOIA." Kissinger, 445 U.S. at 156 (quoting H.R. Conf. Rep. No. 93-1380, at 15 (1974)).

The D.C. Circuit has repeatedly applied this exception for presidential advisers to entities within the White House and the Executive Office of the President that advise and assist the President. For example, in Meyer v. Bush, 981 F.2d 1288 (D.C. Cir. 1993), the court considered an entity similar to the NEPDG. The plaintiff had brought a FOIA action against President Reagan's Task Force on Regulatory Relief, which was headed by then-Vice President Bush and included certain cabinet members as well as the President's Assistant for Policy Planning. Id. at 1289. The court concluded that the task force was not an "agency" by focusing on "three interrelated factors": "how close operationally the group is to the President, what the nature of its delegation from the President is, and whether it has a self-contained structure." Id. at 1293. Ultimately, the court concluded that the task force primarily advised the President; because it did not "exercise substantial independent authority," its members — including the cabinet officers — "were acting, in truth, just as would senior White House staffers." Id. at 1297.

In other cases, the D.C. Circuit has determined that the National Security Council and the Counsel to the President are not agencies under FOIA. See Armstrong, 90 F.3d at 565 (National Security Council); National Sec. Archive v. Archivist of the United States, 909 F.2d 541, 545 (D.C. Cir. 1990) (Counsel to the President). More recently, this Court has concluded that the logic that excludes the President and his staff from the definition of "agency" necessarily excludes the Vice President and his staff as well:

> Offices within the White House whose functions are limited to advising and assisting the President do not come within the definition of an 'agency' within the meaning of FOIA or the Privacy Act. This includes the Office of the President (and by analogy the Office of the Vice President) and undoubtedly the President and Vice President themselves.

Schwartz v. United States Dep't of Treasury, 131 F. Supp. 2d 142, 147 (D.D.C. 2000), aff'd, 2001 WL 674636 (D.C. Cir. 2001). Several other decisions have applied the presidential-adviser exception to the Government in the Sunshine Act or the Privacy Act, both of which borrow FOIA's definition of "agency."[19]

The term "agency" in § 716 (which does not expressly refer to "the Executive Office of the President") should, a fortiori, be read to incorporate the same exemption for presidential advisers. The GAO Act of 1980 referred to the "records of any department or establishment." Pub. L. No. 96-226, § 102, 94 Stat. 311, 312 (1980). The current version speaks simply of "agency," which is defined as "a department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States Government." 31 U.S.C. § 716(b); id. § 101. When applied within the Executive Branch, those references are, if anything, less inclusive than FOIA's definition of "agency," which includes any "authority of the Government" and "any executive department * * * or other establishment in the executive branch of the Government (including the Executive Office of the President)." 5 U.S.C.

In this case, the sole function of the Vice President and the NEPDG was to advise and assist the President. Of course, as Congress has recognized, that is the Vice President's general function (aside from his duties as President of the Senate). By statute, the Vice President is authorized to appoint and pay staff members in order to enable him "to provide assistance to the President in connection with the performance of functions specially assigned to the Vice President by the President in the discharge of executive duties and responsibilities." 3 U.S.C. § 106(a). There can be no doubt here that the Vice President was acting solely "to provide assistance to the President."

The three-part test set forth in Meyer makes clear that the Vice President and task force here, just like the Vice President and task force there, do not qualify as agencies. First, the NEPDG was "close operationally * * * to the President." 981 F.2d at 1293. Like the Task Force on Regulatory Relief in Meyer, the NEPDG included the Vice President, several cabinet members, and members of the President's personal staff. See 981 F.2d at 1289 (identifying task force members); Compl. Ex. A ¶ 1 at 1-2 (identifying NEPDG members). In addition, the NEPDG reported directly to the President. See Compl. Ex. A. ¶¶ 2-3 at 2.

Second, the President did not delegate "substantial independent authority" to the NEPDG. 981 F.2d at 1297. If anything, the NEPDG had even less independent authority than the task force in Meyer, which not only advised the President but also provided "'guidance' and 'direction' to the OMB Director" and possessed "authority to resolve disputes between agencies and OMB." 981 F.2d at 1294. By contrast, the NEPDG's only functions were to "develop a national energy policy" by "gather[ing] information, deliberat[ing], and * * * mak[ing] recommendations to the President." Compl. Ex. A ¶ 2 at 2.[20] As the D.C. Circuit has [20] It is appropriate to evaluate the NEPDG's role on the basis of the presidential memorandum that established it. See Meyer, 981 F.2d at 1294 (calling the Executive Order that established the task force "the most important indication of the Task Force's role").

subsequently explained, the "authority to make policy recommendations for approval by the President" is a "quintessentially advisory" function, and demonstrates a lack of substantial independent authority under the Meyer test. Armstrong, 90 F.3d at 561; see also Rushforth v. Council of Econ. Advisers, 762 F.2d 1038, 1041 (D.C. Cir. 1985) (contrasting the ability to "take direct action" with providing "advice and assistance").

Third, the NEPDG did not have a "self-contained structure." 981 F.2d at 1293. Like the task force in Meyer, it was akin to "a partial cabinet group," which "operated out of the Vice President's office * * * borrowing [staff]" from an agency. Id. at 1296; see Def's. Response to Pl's. Statement of Material Facts ¶ 5 (describing NEPDG staff). In addition, because the NEPDG included among its members the "Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy, [the] Assistant to the President for Economic Policy, and [the] Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs" (Compl. Ex. A. ¶ 1 at 1-2), it was obviously "intertwine[d] * * * with the President's immediate personal staff," rather than self-contained. Armstrong, 90 F.3d at 560.

Because the Vice President, the OVP, and NEPDG are neither agencies nor agency heads, § 716 is inapplicable here. Not only is there no legal obligation to provide access to records under § 716(a), but there is no cause of action granted by § 716(b). Without a cause of action, the Comptroller General has failed to state a claim upon which this Court can grant relief. Thus, under Rule 12(b)(6), this Court can — and should — dismiss the Complaint for that reason alone, without the need to reach any of the other statutory or constitutional arguments discussed below.

B. Section 712 does not apply because the Comptroller General is not investigating the use of public money

Plaintiff's self-aggrandizing method of interpreting his authorizing statute continues with respect to 31 U.S.C. § 712, which provides the first substantive ground for his asserted right to access NEPDG records. Under that section, the Comptroller General is given the power to "investigate all matters related to the receipt, disbursement, and use of public money." There were, of course, certain NEPDG activities that were related to the disbursement or use of public money (see Def's. Response to Pl's. Statement of Material Facts ¶ 7), and the Vice President has already, as a matter of comity, furnished the Comptroller General with documents pertaining to the NEPDG's costs. See id. at ¶¶ 16-17; Compl. ¶ 23.

Plaintiff, however, would turn § 712(1) into a "sweeping" clause of all-encompassing power. Pl's. S.J. Mem. 3. Few things even tangentially associated with the federal government would elude his jurisdictional mandate. No minute of any federal employee's day — from the President on down — would be beyond his searching gaze, because he literally equates time with money: He claims authority "to determine how time, and therefore money, was spent." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 26. He claims the need to know, and the authority to learn, everything about meetings and even the planning processes for them — not just who attended (id. at 25), but also what "subjects [were] discussed at the meetings held by the Vice President" (ibid.), "how many meetings were focused on one subject versus another" (id. at 26), and even how the Vice President and his staff decided who would be invited (id. at 25). All of those details are supposed to provide Congress with the information necessary to determine "whether the NEPDG spent public funds for meetings efficiently and effectively." Id. at 26. Of course, it strains the bounds of credibility to assert that the 1921 Congress, which adopted the predecessor to § 712(1) focused on the need to audit the federal spending process, contemplated any need, let alone authority, to so micromanage the Executive — or, for that matter, to treat the Judiciary the same way merely because it also "use[s] * * * public money."

Plaintiff's reading of § 712(1) is untenable for three principal reasons. First, it would render superfluous several subsequent grants of authority to the Comptroller General. If the power to investigate "all matters related to the * * * use of public money" were as unbounded as plaintiff contends, there would have been no need, for example, for Congress to have fifty years later added § 717(b) to grant the power plaintiff invokes to evaluate the results of federal programs. Indeed, in addition to rendering superfluous other sources of authority to investigate the government, plaintiff's reading would also render nugatory the procedural and substantive limits contained in those other sources, since § 712(1) could always be used to achieve what would not be permitted under another statutory provision. Plaintiff himself, moreover, describes the enactment of § 717(b) as an "expanded mandate" that required GAO to develop new areas of "expertise beyond auditing and accounting." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 12.

Second, the very breadth of plaintiff's view of his own authority would create obvious constitutional difficulties in many circumstances. Congress's powers to investigate are not limitless. Congress "cannot inquire into matters which are within the exclusive province of one of the other branches of the Government" (Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109, 112 (1959); see also Part IV.A, below), and it is inconceivable that Congress could expand its power by delegating it to an agent. Yet it is difficult to conceive of a matter within the "exclusive province of one of the other branches of the Government" that would not be "related to the * * * use of public money" in the sense that plaintiff construes that phrase. 360 U.S. at 112.

Third, plaintiff's reading of § 712(1) ignores canons of statutory construction that would counsel in favor of a reading that would avoid the first two problems. The statute refers to "matters related to the receipt, disbursement, and use of public money." 31 U.S.C. § 712(1) (emphasis added). The three related terms "receipt, disbursement, and use" should be read together, and the apparently broad concluding term "use" should be read as limited to the class addressed by "receipt" and "disbursement." "Under the principle of ejusdem generis, when a general term follows a specific one, the general term should be understood as a reference to subjects akin to the one with specific enumeration." Norfolk & Western R.R. v. Train Dispatchers, 499 U.S. 117, 129 (1991); see also Bazuaye v. United States, 83 F.3d 482, 484 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (following both the ejusdem generis and noscitur a sociis canons to limit the meaning of "any other law enforcement officer"). The word "use" must be read as coming from the same vein as the other two fiscal and accounting terms: "receipt" and "disbursement." This explains why, despite having had § 712(1) authority for decades, GAO's expertise before 1970 was focused in "auditing and accounting" (Pl's. S.J. Mem. 12) and a 1949 congressional summary had emphasized GAO's role in securing "necessary information concerning the financial transactions of the Government," The General Accounting Office: A Study of Its Functions and Operations, H.R. Rep. No. 81-1441 at 6 (1949) (emphasis added).

In order to avoid creating severe statutory problems (by rendering nugatory GAO's other sources of authority to investigate the government), and constitutional problems (by expanding GAO's investigative powers beyond those available to Congress itself), this Court should reject plaintiff's untethered reading of § 712(1), and recognize that GAO's powers under that provision pertain only to financial transactions.

C. Section 717(b) does not apply because the Comptroller General is not evaluating the "results of a program or activity the Government carries out under existing law," and because the procedural prerequisites for a § 717(b) evaluation have not been met

As a general proposition, Congress has the power of inquiry only in aid in its exercise of its legislative power. See Barenblatt, 360 U.S. at 111-112. It has purported to delegate part of its power of inquiry by statute to the Comptroller General. As the Comptroller General acknowledges, his investigative powers were expanded when, in 1970 and 1974, Congress directed him to "evaluate the results of a program or activity the Government carries out under existing law." 31 U.S.C. § 717(b) (emphasis added). GAO's investigation in this case goes far beyond the limits of that statutory authorization because (1) a "program or activity * * * under existing law" refers only to programs authorized by Congress and does not include the Executive's exercise of constitutional functions; (2) GAO is attempting to investigate the process by which the NEPDG developed its recommendations rather than the "results" of that process; (3) the NEPDG is not included in § 717(b)'s reference to "Government" for the same reasons that it is not included within § 716's references to "agency"; and (4) GAO's inquiry was not requested by a committee or conducted on the initiative of the Comptroller General, as § 717(b) requires.

*1. The NEPDG did not engage in a "program or activity * * * under existing law"*

REV_00146069

The Comptroller General's authority to conduct evaluations under § 717 does not extend to any governmental program or activity, but only to those that are "carrie[d] out under existing law." 31 U.S.C. § 717(b). In the context of the statutory scheme, this is evidently part of Congress's attempt to determine whether the programs and activities it has established by statute are achieving Congress's goals. But the NEPDG was not created pursuant to any statutory program, and it did not attempt to achieve any results intended by Congress. Instead, it was established by the President, pursuant to his Article II powers, including his powers to obtain opinions from the principal officers in the Executive Branch and to recommend for the consideration of Congress such measures as he judges "necessary and expedient." U.S. CONST. art II, § 2, cl. 2; id. art. II § 3. Indeed, the NEPDG's mission of formulating policy recommendations to the President, including proposals for new legislation, is the antithesis of Congress's concern with measuring the success of existing programs or activities.

Taken in context, the phrase "under existing law" refers to statutory law. The limitation to statutory programs is implicit in the fact that evaluations done at the request of a congressional committee are limited to those instances where the committee has "jurisdiction over the program or activity." Id. § 717(b)(3). Moreover, the legislative history of § 717(b) unambiguously shows that the Comptroller General's authority to conduct program-results evaluations was limited to programs created by Congress, and GAO itself has repeatedly characterized its power in precisely that way.

The first general incarnation of § 717's program-results evaluations appeared in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 (1970 Act),[21] which was largely directed at improving Congress's

[21] As plaintiff notes, even before 1970, GAO had conducted program-results reviews when Congress had specifically authorized them by statute. As GAO's in-house history program has explained: "As a result of 1967 legislation, GAO began to evaluate government programs, specifically the poverty programs." Roger R. Trask, GAO History Program, GAO History, 1921-1991, GAO/OP-3-HP at 61 (Feb. 1991). "The poverty programs work between 1967 and 1969 * * * demonstrated GAO's qualifications to do program evaluation and was a dress rehearsal for the major thrust of GAO reporting in the 1970s." Id. at 63; see also id. at 90 ("with the effort on the poverty programs between 1967 and 1969, GAO moved into program evaluation"); Staff of ability to review executive branch implementation of congressionally-created programs. Thus, the House Report described the new "extension[]" of GAO's work in a section entitled "Oversight and Program Analysis Assistance to the Congress," and said GAO's new non-audit responsibilities were intended to assist Congress in "determining whether existing programs are being administered in accordance with congressional intent" and in "exploring the advisability of modifying or even of abolishing such programs." H.R. Rep No. 91-1215, supra, at 17-18, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4417, 4432-4433 (emphases added). These goals underscore that GAO's reviews were to be limited to statutory programs, not constitutional provisions; Congress, of course, lacks authority to "modify[]" or "abolish[]" the President's constitutional functions, and thus would not need GAO's assistance in "overseeing" those functions.

The 1970 Act also expanded the responsibilities of congressional committees. In describing those new responsibilities (which were among those that GAO's new powers were supposed to aid), the House Report makes clear that references to "laws" meant only "statutory laws":

> [E]ach Senate standing committee shall review and study * * * the application, administration, and execution of those laws, or parts of laws, the subject matter of which is within the jurisdiction of that committee. The stated purposes of these reviews and studies is to assist the Senate in its analysis, appraisal, and evaluation of the application, administration, and execution, of the laws enacted by the Congress and in the formulation, consideration, and enactment by the Senate of such modifications of, or changes in, those laws, and of such additional legislation, as may be necessary or appropriate.

H.R. Rep No. 91-1215 at 72-73, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4491 (emphases added); see also id. at 73-74, reprinted in 1970 U.S.C.C.A.N. 4492 (substantively identical discussion about House standing committees). Just as in the descriptions of congressional committees' the Senate Comm. on Governmental Affairs, 103d Cong., 2d Sess., The Roles, Mission and Operation of the U.S. General Accounting Office, 3 (Comm. Print 1994) (National Academy of Public Admin.) ("in the 1960's * * * GAO developed a new role in evaluating government programs, beginning with an 18-month evaluation of economic opportunity programs that Congress mandated in 1967"). Obviously, this precursor of § 717(b) authority was a review of previously enacted statutory laws.

legislative-review functions, the reference in § 717(b)(3) to requests for GAO from committees "with jurisdiction over the program or activity" should be understood as referring only to programs carried out under the "laws enacted by the Congress."

Several of the Comptroller General's own contemporaneous descriptions of the potential new program-results authority evinced this same understanding, and stand in stark contrast to the virtually unbounded authority he now claims before this Court. Comptroller General Staats, for example, explained that § 717(b) would clarify GAO's "charter to review and evaluate Federal and federally assisted programs as to whether these programs are being carried out as intended by the Congress. In other words, [the statute would allow GAO to determine] whether programs are achieving congressionally stated objectives in the most effective manner and at the lowest cost." Letter from Comptroller General Elmer B. Staats to Rep. B.F. Sisk (Oct. 31, 1969) (Pl's. S.J. Mem. Ex. 7) (emphases added).[22]

Thus, the legislative history of § 717(b) and the contemporaneous statements of the [22] GAO repeated the express reference to congressional objectives in its in-house Comprehensive Audit Manual, which described the purpose of program-results reviews as to "evaluate whether desired results or benefits of agency programs and activities are being achieved and whether the objectives established by the Congress are being met." Quoted in FREDERICK C. MOSHER, THE GAO: THE QUEST FOR ACCOUNTABILITY IN AMERICAN GOVERNMENT 177 (1979) (emphasis added). Later, in 1975 congressional testimony, Comptroller General Staats explained that "program evaluation and analysis" determined "whether programs are achieving the results which the Congress envisioned in enacting legislation." Review of the Powers, Procedures, and Policies of the GAO: Hearing Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Gov't Operations, 94th Cong., 1st Sess. 4 (1975) (emphasis added); see also id. at 28 ("we are trying to see if the objectives of the statutes have been carried out effectively, and if not, why not" (emphasis added)). Indeed, as plaintiff notes (Pl's. S.J. Mem. 36), even Comptroller General Staats's 1969 testimony described the first question posed by a review of program results as follows: "Is the program accomplishing the results intended as spelled out in the legislative objectives or through implementing directives of the executive branch agency and within the costs anticipated at the time the legislation was enacted?" Capability of GAO to Analyze and Audit Defense Expenditures: Hearings Before the Subcomm. of the Senate Comm. on Gov't Operations, 91st Cong., 1st Sess. 33 (1969) (GAO 1969 Hearing) (emphasis added). The reference to "implementing directives of the executive branch agency" obviously does not contemplate the Executive's constitutional functions.

REV_00146072

Comptroller General recognized that program-results evaluations were intended to measure programs against benchmarks established by Congress — and therefore could not be intended to apply to the Executive's formulation of new proposals or exercise of independent constitutional functions, which Congress cannot regulate.[23] That understanding, moreover, comports with the long-recognized distinction between the statutory and constitutional functions of the Executive. In Marbury v. Madison, for example, Chief Justice Marshall's opinion for the Court distinguished between "cases in which the executive possesses a constitutional * * * discretion" and those where "the legislature proceeds to impose on that officer other duties." 5 U.S. (1 Cranch) 137, 166 (1803); cf. Dalton v. Specter, 511 U.S. 462, 474 (1994) (explaining the "recognized" "distinction between claims that an official exceeded his statutory authority, on the one hand, and claims that he acted in violation of the Constitution, on the other").[24]

[24] The evidence of congressional intent specific to § 717(b) defeats plaintiff's attempts to support his expansive interpretation of the term "existing laws." The fact that the term "law" often includes, for example, the common law (Pl's. S.J. Mem. 41 n.21) is unremarkable, since common law persists only to the extent that the legislature does not supplant it with legislation. Similarly, the fact that the Constitution is law under the Supremacy Clause or Rule 11 (id. at 41) is inapposite, since those provisions are not directed exclusively at areas over which Congress may inquire in aid of its legislative power.

The NEPDG was not created pursuant to any statutory program, and it did not attempt to achieve any results intended by Congress. Instead, it was established by the President, pursuant to his Article II powers, including his powers to seek opinions from his principal officers and to recommend measures that he judges "necessary and expedient" for consideration by Congress. U.S. CONST. art II, § 2, cl. 2; id. art. II § 3. The NEPDG's sole mission was to make policy recommendations to the President, not to "carr[y] out" any "program or activity" authorized by statute. It thus falls clearly outside the scope of the authority granted by § 717(b) to conduct program-results evaluations.

There is simply no truth to plaintiff's claim that the NEPDG "necessarily carried out activities under a variety of statutes." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 45. Even if any of the NEPDG's recommendations related to the President's own duties under LIHEAP or other statutory programs, the recommendations still came in response to the President's constitutional authority to request them, and were therefore not subject to the usual statutory limitations on agency behavior. See, e.g., Alaska v. Carter, 462 F. Supp. 1155, 1160 (D. Alaska 1978) (invoking constitutional doubt doctrine to "hold[] that any recommendations by the Secretary of Interior on the exercise of the President's powers under the Antiquities Act, which recommendations have been requested by the President, do not come under the NEPA impact statement process [which would otherwise apply to Secretary of Interior]"). Nor is there any evidence that the NEPDG's report took the place of the Energy Secretary's annual report on the Strategic Petroleum Reserve

Of course, plaintiff's attempt to define "existing law" in § 717 by reference to uses of that phrase in other contexts is fundamentally misguided. Needless to say, there are many instances in the United States Code where the phrase "existing law" patently means only statutory law. See, e.g., 36 U.S.C. § 2103(c) (excepting American Battle Monuments Commission from "the requirements of existing laws or regulations" for purposes of contracting); 40 U.S.C. § 806 (repealing "[a]ll existing laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this chapter"); 31 U.S.C. § 1105(a)(16) (requiring budget to include "the level of tax expenditures under existing law in the tax expenditures budget * * * for the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted").

(see Pl's. S.J. Mem. 46), or any other independent statutory obligation.

2. GAO is not evaluating the "results" of a program or activity

Even assuming that the NEPDG somehow carried out a program or activity under existing law (which it did not), § 717(b) only gives GAO authority to "evaluate the results of" that program or activity. 31 U.S.C. § 717(b) (emphasis added). In this case, however, GAO seeks to evaluate the process by which the NEPDG developed its recommendations rather than the results of that process.

The noun "result" means "the outcome of the deliberations of a council or assembly," or "[t]he effect, consequence, issue, or outcome of some action, process, design, etc." 13 OXFORD ENGLISH DICT. 761 (2d ed. 1989). It thus necessarily rests on the contrast between an outcome and the process by which it was produced. In this case, it is obvious that the "results" of the NEPDG's work were "the outcome of [its] deliberations" (i.e., its actual report). Indeed, plaintiff himself admits that an activity's "results" are its "consequences, effects, or conclusions." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 32 (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). Yet, he attempts to deprive the term "results" of any function in § 717(b) by asserting that "an inquiry into the NEPDG's processes is necessary to any evaluation of the results of the NEPDG's activities." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 34.[25]

Plaintiff, however, would (plausibly) claim precisely the same power if the statute omitted any reference to results and instead read "[t]he Comptroller General shall evaluate a program or activity the Government carries out." This Court should refuse to adopt a construction that [25] Plaintiff's attempt to claim that a "result" includes the "process" that leads to or culminates in that result illogically and unnecessarily conflates two words that are defined — even in plaintiff's dictionary — in relation to each other. See WEBSTER'S THIRD NEW INT'L DICT. 1808 (1993) (defining "process" as a "progressively continuing operation that consists of a series of controlled actions or movements systematically directed toward a particular result or end" (emphasis added)); see also 12 OXFORD ENGLISH DICT. 546 (defining "process" as "[a] continuous and regular action or succession of actions, taking place or carried on in a definite manner, and leading to the accomplishment of some result" (emphasis added)).

would render utterly superfluous the statutory phrase "the results of." See Duncan v. Walker, 533 U.S. 167, 174 (2001).

Moreover, contrary to plaintiff's assertion, a result or outcome can be evaluated independent of the process by which it was achieved. Proposals like the ones contained in the NEPDG's final report have their own value as policy ideas, and can be meaningfully evaluated on their own terms. Plaintiff's attempt to pretend otherwise is the equivalent of saying that a reviewer cannot comment on the merits of a book or a judicial opinion without being able to analyze the author's word-processing software, work schedule, and sources of inspiration — as well as all of the rough drafts that preceded the published product. GAO's own history belies that attempt.[26] The Comptroller General's conflation of results and process also creates needless friction between the Legislative and Executive Branches. Although the results of a deliberative process may reflect that process and lead to a claim of privilege, the legislative intrusion into the deliberative process itself inevitably creates the prospect of privilege assertions and inter-branch conflict. Notably, plaintiff's misguided attempt to treat "results" as if it meant "process" provides the alleged foundation for this lawsuit. The Comptroller General began his July 18, 2001 "statutory 'demand letter'" (Compl. ¶ 29) by saying that GAO was "reviewing the process by which the National Energy Policy was developed." Compl. Ex. I at 1 (emphasis added). Similarly, in his August 17, 2001 report purportedly made under § 716, the Comptroller General explained that he was seeking "records relat[ed] to the process by which the National Energy Policy was [26] As plaintiff points out (Pl's. S.J. Mem. 15-16), in 1993, GAO evaluated the recommendations of the National Performance Review (Vice President Gore's task force to reform government management). GAO's nearly-300-page interim report provided its "initial comments" on the National Performance Review's major recommendations. Although the report noted whether or not GAO agreed with each recommendation, it was "primarily based on [GAO's previously] issued reports and testimonies," rather than on any analysis of the processes pursued by the National Performance Review in developing its recommendations. developed." Compl. Ex. K at 1 (emphasis added). Because that purpose for the investigation was not authorized by the plain statutory language of § 717(b), this suit must be dismissed.

3. As presidential advisers, the Vice President and the NEPDG should not be presumed to fall within § 717(b)'s generic reference to "Government"

As discussed above, in Part III.A.1, it is established that the President or Vice President should not be assumed to be an "authority of the Government" unless Congress expressly states otherwise. Franklin, 505 U.S. at 800. For the same reasons, the term "Government" in § 717(b) should not be read to encompass the President or Vice President absent an express statement by Congress to the contrary. No such express statement exists in § 717.[27]

Similarly, as described above, in Part III.A.2, when the term "agency" includes "any authority of the Government," it is construed so as not to apply to presidential advisers. Thus, the undefined term "Government" in § 717(b) should not be assumed to incorporate those entities within the White House whose sole function is to advise and assist the President, and § 717(b) should not be read to apply to the Vice President or the NEPDG, because they did nothing but give advice to the President.

4. The procedural prerequisites of § 717(b) have not been met because GAO's evaluation was not requested by a committee or conducted on the initiative of the Comptroller General

Under § 717, the Comptroller General may conduct a program-results evaluation only at the request or order of a "House" or "committee of Congress," or "on the initiative of the Comptroller General." 31 U.S.C. § 717(b)(1)-(3). Here, however, none of those preconditions has occurred.

As GAO's General Counsel explained in his June 1, 2001 letter to the Vice President's Counsel, [27] Even though Franklin's express-statement requirement is grounded in separation-of-powers concerns, it obviously applies to the exercise of statutory as well as constitutional functions by the President or Vice President. See 505 U.S. at 801 ("We would require an express statement by Congress before assuming it intended the President's performance of his statutory duties to be reviewed" as agency action (emphasis added)).

REV_00146077

GAO concluded that its "review of the development of the National Energy Policy is * * * required by law" because it was "requested by a congressional committee of jurisdiction." Compl. Ex. G at 1 (emphasis added). In other words, the Comptroller General did not decide to initiate this evaluation. Rather, GAO's Assistant Director for Natural Resources and Environment "supervised the opening of GAO's investigation into the NEPDG" pursuant to her understanding of GAO's Congressional Protocols. 04/08/02 Decl. of Margaret J. Reese ¶ 2 (Pl's. S.J. Mem. Ex. 1). But those protocols incorrectly declare that GAO "has a statutory obligation to fulfill requests" from "committee leaders," which it defines improperly as "those from the committee or subcommittee Chair, Ranking Minority Member (Ranking Member), * * * on a program or activity within the committee's jurisdiction." GAO's Congressional Protocols, GAO-01-145G at 4, 5 (Nov. 2000).

Treating ranking minority members as the equivalent of a "committee of Congress" misconstrues the statute and ignores the democratic foundations and practical realities of Congress. Belatedly recognizing that a request by ranking minority members does not in fact trigger a statutory obligation to conduct an evaluation, plaintiff now portrays GAO's Congressional Protocols as the means by which he had "channel[ed]" the discretion available to him under § 717(b)(1). Pl's. S.J. Mem. 39. Read properly, however, § 717(b)(1) requires at a minimum the Comptroller General to exercise his discretion in a particular instance to initiate an evaluation; it should not allow him simply to rely on a generic policy of treating all requests from ranking minority members as triggering a statutory obligation. Such a policy would contravene Congress's express decision to trigger an automatic investigation only at the request of a majority of a committee or House, and it would be inconsistent with the principles of standing and equitable discretion discussed above.[28] [28] Moreover, any attempt by the Comptroller General to institute such a suit on his own discretion, without any particular request or authorization from Congress, would only exacerbate those standing and equitable discretion problems.

REV_00146078

Where, as here, the Comptroller General asks the judiciary to intervene in a dispute between the two political branches, his failure to exercise his own discretion personally to initiate an investigation may not be dismissed as a kind of harmless error. As described above, in Part II, courts are particularly wary of intervening in such disputes before it is clear that they are truly intractable and that the issue is joined at the highest levels within each branch. For similar reasons, Congress imposed an exhaustion requirement on the Comptroller General when it gave him the power to initiate a civil suit under § 716(b). The drafters of § 716 recognized that any judicial-enforcement action should be taken only as a "remedy of last resort." General Accounting Office Act of 1979: Hearing Before a Subcomm. of the House Comm. on Gov't Operations, 96th Cong., 1st Sess. 96 (1979) (Rep. Horton); see also Pl's. S.J. Mem. 13 (recognizing that Comptroller General can pursue judicial enforcement "only after exhausting a set of detailed procedures").[29]

Thus, even assuming that Congress possesses the power to bring a lawsuit against the President or the Vice President and delegated that power to its agent, the Comptroller General (which is not the case), the courts should refrain from hearing such a dispute where, as here, Congress's designated agent has not even followed the minimal procedures that Congress contemplated. Here, a GAO staff member initiated an investigation under the erroneous impression that it was "required by law" under § 717(b)(3). There was thus no "decision" as such, but merely a check to see whether the request had come from ranking minority members on a committee of jurisdiction. Of course, once that action was taken, the Comptroller General's own discretion

[29] This exhaustion requirement refutes plaintiff's attempt to assert that this question is "moot" now that four Senate Committee Chairman have expressed their support for "continu[ing] the ongoing investigation." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 39 n.20; Compl. Ex. P. The Comptroller General's "statutory 'demand letter'" (Compl. ¶ 29) was written on July 18, 2001. The purposes of the exhaustion requirement obviously could not be served if the investigation purportedly justifying the July 18, 2001 letter did not become legitimate until the Senate Chairmen wrote their letter on January 22, 2002.

was permanently compromised. He was no longer able to exercise his independent judgment to determine whether to initiate an evaluation, because doing so would second-guess the automatic, but already public, "decision" his staff had made to investigate the NEPDG. Under the circumstances, it would defeat the purpose of the carefully calibrated exhaustion scheme in § 716 to allow this lawsuit to proceed on the basis of an investigation with such a tainted origin.

IV. The Statutory Provisions Plaintiff Invokes Would Be Unconstitutional If Applied to Authorize GAO's Investigation of the NEPDG and the Filing of This Lawsuit

Even assuming that § 712(1) or § 717(b) grants, as a matter of statutory construction, the broad investigative powers that the Comptroller General claims (which they do not), and that such an authority is judicially enforceable under § 716 (which it is not), the exercise of those powers against the Executive in the circumstances of this case would violate well-established separation-of-powers principles. The NEPDG functioned pursuant to the President's express Article II powers, including his powers to seek opinions from principal officers in executive departments (art. II, § 2, cl. 1) and to "recommend to [Congress's] Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient" (art. II, § 3). Therefore, Congress is barred from encroaching upon or interfering with the exercise of those functions through a non-textual and delegated investigatory authority. This result is true whether this Court analyzes the question under the per se test applicable to the exercise of express Article II powers, or under the balancing test that has been applied in the context of implied executive powers.[30]

[30] In Association of Am. Physicians & Surgeons v. Clinton, 997 F.2d 898 (D.C. Cir. 1993) (AAPS), the D.C. Circuit considered constitutional concerns arising from interference with the President's ability to seek advice from his "closest advisers." Id. at 910. The court's ultimate holding was one of statutory construction, but it looked to constitutional concerns before it applied the canon of constitutional avoidance to its statutory analysis. The government

A second constitutional problem would be created if § 716(b) were interpreted to provide the Comptroller General the authority to file this lawsuit against the Vice President: The Constitution does not countenance the spectacle of having a legislative agent exercise executive powers by filing a civil enforcement action against the Executive.

A. The NEPDG's information-gathering and policy-developing activities for the President are within his exclusive enumerated responsibilities under Article II and are beyond Congress's investigative and legislative powers Article II, section 1 of the Constitution vests "[t]he executive Power" in the President of the United States. In order to fulfill his executive duties, the President must be able to deliberate with his advisers and to obtain information. Both the Opinion Clause and the Recommendations Clause reflect this need and provide textual foundations for the President's powers to gather information and develop policy — and both clauses also show that those executive powers are not subject to interference from Congress.

During the Constitutional Convention of 1787, the Framers considered several times whether to provide the President with some form of advisory council that included representatives of the Legislature or Judiciary. See JAMES MADISON, NOTES OF THE DEBATES IN THE FEDERAL CONVENTION OF 1787 at 487-488, 509-510, 569, 598-602 (W.W. Norton & Co. 1966) (debates of Aug. 20, 22, and 31 and Sept. 7, 1787). They rejected each of those proposals, and chose instead to enshrine in Article II the President's power to seek advice from those under his direct control. As Alexander Hamilton subsequently explained, the unity of the Executive would be destroyed if the President were "subject[ed] in whole or in part to the controul and urged a per se test based on the Recommendations Clause. In its inconclusive discussion of constitutional concerns, the court declared the government's focus on the Recommendations Clause to be "somewhat artificial," and instead found "more persuasive" the notion that constitutional concerns were raised by the "operational proximity to the President himself" of the Task Force on National Health Care Policy. Id. at 908-909. Thus, the court's discussion, rather than resting on a per se test, focused on a balancing test. Defendant discusses both forms of analysis below.

co-operation of others, in the capacity of counsellors to him." THE FEDERALIST, No. 70 at 472-73 (Alexander Hamilton) (Jacob E. Cooke ed., Wesleyan Univ. Press 1961). The Opinion Clause thus provides the President with information-gathering powers within the unitary structure of the Executive, which in turn establishes that the power to receive opinions from executive officers is not subject to interference from the other branches. As one commentator has explained:

> The juxtaposition of the power the President was granted [in the Opinion Clause] and the restrictions on that power which were rejected suggests that the Framers expressly granted the President a discrete sphere of control over the process by which he gathers the information necessary to make a decision; a process that — within the context of the separation of powers — cannot be interfered with by the other two branches of government.

Neil Thomas Proto, The Opinion Clause and Presidential Decision-Making, 44 MO. L. REV. 185, 195 (1979) (emphases in original).

The Recommendations Clause (along with the State of the Union Clause) provides further textual evidence of the President's powers to gather information and develop and propose policy. Those clauses expressly contemplate that the President will, "from time to time give to the Congress Information of the State of the Union, and recommend to their Consideration such Measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient" — two functions that he may even accomplish by invoking his power "to convene both Houses [of Congress], or either of them." U.S. CONST., art. II, § 3. The President's duties to inform Congress and to recommend measures for its consideration both presuppose that the President "must possess more extensive sources of information * * * than can belong to [C]ongress." JOSEPH STORY, COMMENTARIES ON THE CONSTITUTION OF THE UNITED STATES § 807 (Ronald D. Rotunda & John E. Nowak eds., Carolina Acad. Press 1987) (1833). Of course, those duties also presuppose that the President will be able to cultivate his sources of information, and also to develop the "measures" that he will recommend, because the quality of his recommendations will be commensurate with his ability to inform himself and deliberate about them.[31] Most importantly, the Recommendations Clause expressly vests the exercise of those powers in the President's own discretion. Because the President's duty requires him to recommend only what "he shall judge necessary and expedient" (U.S. CONST., art. II, § 3 (emphasis added)), the Constitution indicates clearly that this exclusive power must remain free from interference.

Thus, the powers in both the Opinion and Recommendations Clauses are entrusted exclusively to the President — and are textually committed to his discretion. Congress cannot regulate or exercise its derivative power to investigate the exercise of those functions. As the Supreme Court explained in Barenblatt v. United States, 360 U.S. 109 (1959): "Since Congress may only investigate into those areas in which it may potentially legislate or appropriate, it cannot inquire into matters which are within the exclusive province of one of the other branches of the Government." Id. at 111-112.[32] For this reason, the Supreme Court has consistently refused to tolerate legislative intrusions on the Executive's express powers and duties. See INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983) (Presentment Clause); United States v. Klein, 80 U.S. (13 Wall.) 128, 148 (1871) ("[I]t is clear that the legislature cannot change the effect of * * * a pardon."); Public Citizen v. Dep't of Justice, 491 U.S. 440, 482 (1989) (Kennedy, J., concurring) (Congress cannot "encroach[] upon a power that the text of the Constitution commits in explicit terms to the President.").[33]

[31] An earlier draft of the Recommendations Clause had referred to "Matters" rather than "Measures." "The greater presidential participation needed to submit 'measures' implicitly presumes that there exist presidential prerogatives of investigation, inquiry, and advocacy by which to formulate and articulate such proposed solutions." J. Gregory Sidak, The Recommendation Clause, 77 GEO. L.J. 2079, 2084 (1989).

[32] As plaintiff acknowledges (Pl's. S.J. Mem. 7), Congress's power to investigate is only implicit in its power to legislate, and thus it cannot extend beyond the function it is supposed to aid. See McGrain v. Daugherty, 273 U.S. 135, 175 (1927) ("the constitutional provisions which commit the legislative function to [Congress] are intended to include [the power of inquiry] to the end that the [legislative] function may be effectively exercised").

[33] In that case, the three concurring justices found that Congress could not provide a right of access to information about the Justice Department's consultations with the ABA in the

Interference with the President's information-gathering activities is no less unconstitutional when it affects his exercise of his Recommendations or Opinion Clause authority than when it touches on his power to grant pardons, nominate judges, or have legislation presented for his approval or veto. Indeed, the interference with express constitutional functions is particularly grave because both of those clauses directly implicate the information-gathering and policy-development process itself. Although the Recommendations Clause contemplates the transfer of information to Congress, it expressly leaves to the President's judgment what it would be "necessary and expedient" to communicate. As Barenblatt shows, Congress simply lacks authority to inquire into the NEPDG's activities, because they are "matters * * * within the exclusive province" of the Executive. 360 U.S. at 111-112. Where the text of the Constitution explicitly commits a power to the President, the courts "refuse[] to tolerate any intrusion by the Legislative Branch." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 485 (concurring opinion) (emphasis in original); see also Schick v. Reed, 419 U.S. 256, 266 (1974) (pardon power "flows from the Constitution * * * and * * * cannot be modified, abridged, or diminished by the Congress"); cf. Plaut v. Spendthrift Farms, Inc., 514 U.S. 211, 227 (1995) (Congress cannot interfere with Judiciary's power to issue final judgments).

Allowing the Comptroller General to inquire into or compel disclosure about how the President carried out his constitutional functions with the NEPDG "would constitute a direct and real interference" with the President's core powers, including those granted by the Opinion Clause and Recommendations Clause. Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 488 (Kennedy, J., concurring); see also Jay S. Bybee, Advising the President: Separation of Powers and the Federal process of nominating federal judges without unconstitutionally "interfer[ing] with the manner in which the President obtains information necessary to discharge his duty assigned under the Constitution." 491 U.S. at 488 (emphasis added). The rest of the Court in Public Citizen did not resolve this constitutional issue, because it chose to avoid "undeniabl[y]" "formidable constitutional difficulties" by construing the Federal Advisory Committee Act so as not to apply to the Justice Department's consultations with the ABA. Id. at 466 (majority opinion).

Advisory Committee Act, 104 YALE L.J. 51, 105 (1994) ("Any restriction on the President's access to advice would impede not only his ability to recommend to Congress needed changes, but also his ability to carry out his remaining duties."). The Opinion and Recommendations Clauses expressly commit powers to a particular branch of the Government in the text of the Constitution, which makes any degree of congressional intrusion unconstitutional. Put simply, the "mere fact" that the statutory provisions on which the Comptroller General relies "would regulate so as to interfere with the manner in which the President obtains information necessary to discharge his duty assigned under the Constitution * * * is enough to invalidate the Act." Public Citizen, 491 U.S. at 488-89 (Kennedy, J., concurring) (emphasis added).

There can be no question that the virtually unlimited right of access that the Comptroller General asserts would significantly interfere with the process by which the Executive Branch obtains information and exercises its constitutional functions. As the D.C. Circuit has explained, the "mere presence" of legislative agents, even if they "remain completely silent," has significant "potential to influence" the decision-making process that they are observing. FEC v. NRA Political Victory Fund, 6 F.3d 821, 826 (D.C. Cir. 1993). The chilling effect recognized by the D.C. Circuit will be no different if the stages of the decision-making process are reviewed after the fact than if the observations occur while the decision-making process is still ongoing.

Indeed, plaintiff's own arguments contemplate the aggressive regulation of the President's information-gathering and policy-developing powers. He contends that Congress needs to know about the behind-the-scenes operation of the NEPDG to evaluate "the desirability of additional appropriations restrictions to control the use of public money for energy policy development in the future." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 3. Furthermore, he assumes that Congress could impose such restrictions on the Executive to prevent "establishment[s] within the White House" from being "responsib[le] for energy policy development." Id. at 34.

Contrary to plaintiff's suggestions, Congress cannot evade the constitutional limitations on its investigative and legislative powers by invoking its power of the purse. Any attempt by Congress to regulate the President's core textual powers through its power over appropriations would violate separation-of-powers principles. See United States v. Will, 449 U.S. 200, 226, 230 (1980) (holding that certain appropriations affecting judicial salaries violated Article III). Congress's spending power does not allow it to "impair the President's pardon power by denying him appropriations for pen and paper." OPM v. Richmond, 496 U.S. 414, 435 (1990) (White, J., concurring, joined by Blackmun, J.); see also Klein, 80 U.S. at 147 (holding that Congress could not use an appropriations rider to "impair[] the effect of a pardon, and thus infring[e] the constitutional power of the Executive"). Similarly, in this case, Congress cannot regulate — and, by regulating, attempt to forbid — the President's consultations with whomever he judges necessary to accomplish his constitutional functions under the Opinion and Recommendations Clauses. In sum, the per se test required by Barenblatt and the cases dealing with express constitutional functions applies in this case and clearly forecloses the powers asserted by the Comptroller General.

B. Even under a balancing approach, the President's information-gathering and confidentiality interests greatly outweigh any purported legislative interest here

Even if this Court balances the intrusion on executive power with the legislative interest at stake, rather than applying the per se test of Barenblatt, the Comptroller General's asserted authority would be just as unconstitutional. The threat to the President posed by this case is great because the intrusion is so extensive. On the other hand, the Legislature has no legitimate interest in the information the Comptroller General seeks, and has other means to pursue it in any event.

The D.C. Circuit addressed a somewhat less obvious separation-of-powers threat in AAPS. The plaintiff in that case sought to apply the Federal Advisory Committee Act to President Clinton's Task Force on National Health Care Reform. The court avoided a decision on the constitutional question by applying the doctrine of constitutional avoidance.

Nevertheless, it recognized the serious constitutional concerns that would arise from any "statute interfering with a President's ability to seek advice" "from those closest to him, whether in or out of government." 997 F.2d at 910 (internal citation and quotation marks omitted). In dicta, the court indicated that, were it to reach the constitutional issue, it would apply a standard it extrapolated from Morrison v. Olson and find the statute to be unconstitutional as applied. It summarized that standard as follows: "Morrison tells us to balance how much the interference with the President's executive power prevents the President from accomplishing his constitutionally assigned functions against the overriding need to promote objectives within the constitutional authority of Congress." 997 F.2d at 910.

Under that approach, the Comptroller General's asserted authority to intrude into the President's methods of informing himself for the purpose of proposing policy initiatives "'impermissibly undermine[s]' the powers of the Executive Branch, * * * or 'disrupts the proper balance between the coordinate branches.'" Morrison v. Olson, 487 U.S. 654, 695 (1988). It is hard to imagine a more direct assault on the President's core executive powers than the asserted authority of a congressional agent to superintend the deliberative process by which the Vice President and others formulated policy recommendations for and on behalf of the President. The information that the Comptroller General seeks would expose information-gathering and policy-making activities (including deliberations) at the heart of the Executive Branch. Despite his protestations of restraint, the broad categories of information plaintiff requests in this lawsuit speak for themselves. He asks this Court to require disclosure of everyone that the Vice President met with while he was serving as a close presidential adviser discharging express constitutional functions at the request of the President, the "purpose" and "agenda" of each of those meetings, and even what decision-making process the Vice President and his staff followed in "determin[ing] who would be invited to the meetings." Compl. Prayer for Relief ¶ (a).[34]

REV_00146087

The Comptroller General's asserted authority strikes at the heart of the Executive's constitutional functions. At a minimum, it would intrude upon powers that are textually committed to the Executive — a result that, even taken alone, must weigh heavily in the balance (if it does not dispose of the need for the balancing, see supra). Moreover, just as in AAPS, plaintiff's action "implicates executive powers" because it would interfere with a group that has "operational proximity to the President." 997 F.2d at 898 (emphasis in original). In addition, plaintiff's claim would compromise executive branch deliberations by undercutting the President's well-recognized need for confidentiality. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 708 (1974) ("A President and those who assist him must be free to explore alternatives in the process of shaping policies and making decisions and to do so in a way many would be unwilling to express except privately."); In re Sealed Case, 121 F.3d 729, 750 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("[T]he critical role that confidentiality plays in ensuring an adequate exploration of alternatives cannot be gainsaid. If presidential advisers must assume they will be held to account publicly for all approaches that were advanced, considered but ultimately rejected, they will almost inevitably be inclined to avoid serious consideration of novel or controversial approaches to presidential problems.").[35] As the court in AAPS explained, "[a] group directly reporting [to] and advising the President must have confidentiality in each stage in the formulation of advice to him." 997 F.2d at 910. But requiring "disclosure of the real information-gathering process" would "inevitably * * * compromise[]" the "confidentiality of the advice-giving function." Id. (emphasis added). The Comptroller General's claim in this case would compromise the statutory report that "we are not asking for any communications involving the President, the Vice President, or the President's senior advisers." Compl. Ex. K at 4. In any event, the constitutionality of these statutes must be evaluated on the basis of the authority they convey to the Comptroller General (which in his view is virtually limitless), not the authority he has, in fact, exercised in this test case.

[35] In In re Sealed Case, the D.C. Circuit also expressly held that the President's constitutionally protected interest in confidentiality extends to conversations among his immediate advisers for which the President is not present. See 121 F.3d at 750.

confidentiality of advice within the Executive Branch because he asserts, after all, the authority to investigate not only the "results" of the NEPDG's deliberations, but also the deliberative "process" itself.

Against those great intrusions, plaintiff can offer no bona fide congressional interests. As an initial matter, Congress's legitimate interests are non-existent when it comes to investigating the discharge of functions within the exclusive province of another branch. See Barenblatt, 360 U.S. at 111-112. Congress's non-textual investigative authority is derivative of its legislative authority and Congress could not validly regulate the process by which the Vice President and President formulate presidential recommendations.

Notwithstanding that limitation, plaintiff has suggested several hypothetical reasons why Congress might be interested in the process by which the NEPDG developed its policy recommendations. By and large, those conjectural interests rely on untenable assumptions about Congress's powers — for example, that Congress needs to know whether the NEPDG consulted with a sufficient number of people so that it can determine whether it should exercise its purported power to "attach riders to appropriations laws that prohibit the executive branch from developing comprehensive energy policies through private task force meetings with only selected members of the public." Pl's. S.J. Mem. 27.

Even if plaintiff could identify some legitimate legislative interest in the information, that peripheral interest would clearly be insufficiently weighty to justify intrusion upon the President's exercise of his constitutional powers and his interest in confidential information-gathering and deliberations. Precedent shows that it takes especially heavy interests to outweigh even those interests of the Executive that are only implicitly protected by the Constitution. See, e.g., United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. at 713 (allowing in camera review of executive communications only because of a "demonstrated, specific need for evidence in a pending criminal trial"). The D.C. Circuit has indicated just how substantial Congress's interests need to be to warrant disclosure of executive materials. In Senate Select Comm. on Presidential Campaign Activities v. Nixon, 498 F.2d 725 (D.C. Cir. 1974) (en banc), the D.C. Circuit, sitting en banc, refused to enforce a congressional subpoena for the Watergate tapes. In doing so, the court recognized the "great public interest in maintaining the confidentiality of conversations that take place in the President's performance of his official duties." Id. at 729. The court said that interest could "be defeated only by a strong showing of need by another institution of government — a showing that the responsibilities of that institution cannot responsibly be fulfilled without access to records of the President's deliberations." Id. at 730 (emphasis added). Applying that standard, the court concluded that a congressional committee's desire to satisfy its legislative responsibilities and its purported "oversight power," was insufficient to overcome the President's paramount interest. See id. at 732-733. Thus, Congress lost because it could not demonstrate that the subpoenaed evidence was "demonstrably critical to the responsible fulfillment" of its appropriate functions. Id. at 731.

Congress's needs for executive branch records are significantly less weighty in this case. Congress has already received the most important information it needs to accomplish its legislative functions: the President's actual policy proposals and initiatives, along with his judgment that those measures are necessary and expedient. Congress may use that information to reach its own independent conclusions about the recommendations. It can also obtain information to assist that process from its own sources, and does not need to know what sources were used in the development of the NEPDG's recommendations.[36] Even so, if Congress truly is [36] Plaintiff suggests that the validity or desirability of the NEPDG's policy proposals turns in part on who the Vice President and others consulted while developing those proposals. As the Supreme Court has already recognized in the legislative context, the actions of democratically accountable officials stand on their own, regardless of who pressed for or opposed those actions. See Mazurek v. Armstrong, 520 U.S. 968, 973 (1997) ("the fact that an anti-abortion group drafted the Montana law * * * says nothing significant about the legislature's purpose in passing it").

interested in further details about the President's proposals and initiatives, it may attempt to employ its own information-gathering powers (efforts that have been held to be prerequisites for judicial involvement, see supra Part II).

C. A civil enforcement action brought by a legislative agent against the Executive violates Article II's Take Care Clause

The judicial-enforcement provisions of § 716 also violate the separation of powers by impermissibly assigning an executive power to a legislative agent. Section 716(b) purports to delegate to the Comptroller General the power to enforce a statutorily created right to information. Because the power to bring an enforcement action to vindicate public interests is executive in nature, it is unconstitutional for Congress to retain it for its own agent.

In Bowsher v. Synar, 478 U.S. 714 (1986), the Supreme Court held that the Comptroller General is Congress's agent and "he may not be entrusted with executive powers." Id. at 732. That result is dictated by the nature of separation of powers: "The structure of the Constitution does not permit Congress to execute the laws; it follows that Congress cannot grant to an officer under its control what it does not possess." Id. at 726; see also Metropolitan Washington Airports Auth. v. Citizens for the Abatement of Aircraft Noise, 501 U.S. 252, 276 (1991) ("If the power is executive, the Constitution does not permit an agent of Congress to exercise it."); Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1, 136 (1976) ("[T]he legislature cannot engraft executive duties upon a legislative office * * * ." (quoting Springer v. Philippine Islands, 277 U.S. 189, 202 (1928)).

In Buckley, the Supreme Court invalidated a statutory scheme that allowed the Federal Elections Commission to file enforcement actions, because, as the FEC was then constituted, several of its members had been appointed by Congress. The Court admitted that those legislative agents could act in aid of legislative action, but it denied them the authority to seek judicial relief:

> The Commission's enforcement power, exemplified by its discretionary power to seek judicial relief, is authority that cannot possibly be regarded as merely in aid > of the legislative function of Congress. A lawsuit is the ultimate remedy for a breach of the law, and it is to the President, and not to the Congress, that the Constitution entrusts the responsibility to "take Care that the Laws be faithfully executed."

424 U.S. at 138 (emphasis added).

The power to file a lawsuit on behalf of the government to vindicate public interests is a quintessentially executive power. Here, Congress has vested that core executive power in its own agent. The Supreme Court's separation-of-powers jurisprudence has consistently recognized the substantial difference between congressional initiatives that force the executive or judiciary to share power with others, and those that actually enlarge Congress's own powers. See, e.g., Morrison, 487 U.S. at 694 ("We observe first that this case does not involve an attempt by Congress to increase its own powers at the expense of the Executive Branch."); Commodity Futures Trading Comm'n v. Schor, 478 U. S. 833, 856-857 (1986) (contrasting Bowsher's "question of the aggrandizement of congressional power at the expense of a coordinate branch" with the less-serious question of undermining of "the role of the Judicial Branch" "without appreciable expansion of [Congress's] own power"); Buckley, 424 U.S. at 122 ("The Framers regarded the checks and balances that they had built into the tripartite Federal Government as a self-executing safeguard against the encroachment or aggrandizement of one branch at the expense of the other.").

In other words, there is a salient difference between a statute that creates a so-called "private attorney general" and one that creates an additional public attorney general who is not subject to executive control. See, e.g., Atlantic States Legal Found., Inc. v. Buffalo Envelope, 823 F. Supp. 1065, 1073-1075 (W.D.N.Y. 1993) (upholding citizen-suit provision because "Congress may * * * determine who will vindicate [statutory] rights" and "[a] constitutional concern arises only where Congress has reserved unto itself the right to control or supervise the enforcement of the rights it created"); Delaware Valley Toxics Coalition v. Kurz-Hastings, Inc., 813 F. Supp. 1132, 1138 (E.D. Pa. 1993) (concluding that "citizen suits are not an unlawful delegation of executive power" because Congress has not granted executive power "to a person or persons under its control"); see also Morrison, 487 U.S. at 696 (explaining the Executive's powers to supervise and control the independent counsel; "[m]ost importantly, the Attorney General retains the power to remove the counsel for 'good cause' * * * .").

The aggrandizement in this case is especially egregious because it would allow a legislative agent to wield executive powers against the Executive — and also to invoke the powers of the Judiciary in the process. Because § 716(b), if interpreted to allow this action, would effect a congressional aggrandizement of executive power in flagrant disregard for the Constitution's separation of powers, this Court should refuse to employ it and dismiss the Complaint.

V. This Court Should Avoid Serious Constitutional Problems by Adopting Defendant's Reasonable Constructions of §§ 712, 716, and 717

This Court should adopt the statutory constructions advanced above, in Part III, based on traditional principles of statutory interpretation and governing case law. Yet, in light of the serious constitutional problems, described in Part IV, that would arise from construing the statutes to allow this lawsuit, this Court should, at the least, adopt the narrower view of these provisions urged by defendant under the well-established doctrine of constitutional avoidance. It is a "cardinal principle" that, where there is a "serious doubt of constitutionality" about a statute, a court should "ascertain whether a construction of the statute is fairly possible by which the question may be avoided." Crowell v. Benson, 285 U.S. 22, 62 (1932). Thus, to the extent that this Court finds defendant's statutory-construction arguments to be even "fairly possible," it should adopt them and dismiss this case without directly addressing the difficult separation-of-powers questions that would otherwise be posed by the Comptroller General's unprecedented enforcement action.

As described above, in Public Citizen, the Supreme Court unanimously recognized that serious constitutional problems would be posed by a potential infringement on the President's Article II power to nominate judges. See 491 U.S. at 466 (application of the statute would "undeniabl[y]" "present formidable constitutional difficulties"); id. at 482 (Kennedy, J., concurring in judgment, joined by Rehnquist, C.J., and O'Connor, J.) (finding a "plain" constitutional violation). The opinion of the Court explained that the doctrine of constitutional avoidance is "especially" applicable to cases — such as this one — that "concern the relative powers of coordinate branches of government." Id. at 466. In light of that principle, it went so far as to reject what it called a "literalistic reading" of FACA. Id. at 463-464.

In AAPS, the D.C. Circuit described the Supreme Court's decision in Public Citizen as adopting "an extremely strained construction of the [statute] in order to avoid the constitutional question." 997 F.2d at 906.[37] And in AAPS itself, the D.C. Circuit applied the avoidance doctrine and concluded that FACA did not apply to President Clinton's Task Force on National Health Care Reform. It noted that any "statute interfering with a President's ability to seek advice * * * raises Article II concerns," and found those concerns would be especially great if a statute were to interfere with the President's attempt to "seek[] advice from those closest to him, whether in or out of government." Id. at 910. The court avoided "the difficult constitutional issue" that the case posed by concluding that the First Lady was "a 'full-time officer or employee' of the government." Id. at 910, 911.

Plaintiff's claim in this case presents at least as grave a constitutional problem as those avoided in Public Citizen and AAPS. The Comptroller General seeks to gain judicially compelled access to documents that record information-gathering and policy-development activities at the highest levels of the Executive. Just as in AAPS, constitutional "difficulties arise because of the [NEPDG's] operational proximity to the President himself — that is, because the [NEPDG] provide[d] advice and recommendations directly to the President." 997 F.2d at 909

[37] In turn, an opinion from this Court has said that the decisions in both Public Citizen and AAPS resorted to "adroit semantics" in order to avoid separation-of-powers questions. Northwest Forest Res. Council v. Espy, 846 F. Supp. 1009, 1014 (D.D.C. 1994).

(emphasis added). Construing the statutes to permit this lawsuit to proceed would clearly present "serious constitutional problems." Solid Waste Agency v. Army Corps of Eng'rs, 531 U.S. 159, 173 (2001).

As described in Part III, defendant's proposed constructions of §§ 712(1), 716(b), and 717(b) are reasonable as a matter of statutory construction. Defendant's readings would shield from congressional encroachment the President's ability to have his close advisers discharge constitutionally enumerated functions, but they would do so only by preventing the excesses of plaintiff's positions — not by leaving the Comptroller General powerless. Indeed, recognizing the limits inherent in the language of §§ 716 and 717 would not interfere with the Comptroller General's ability to seek records from traditional "agencies" (i.e., virtually the entire Executive Branch, excepting only the President, the Vice President, and the President's other close advisers whose sole function is to advise and assist the President). Nor would it prevent Congress — if it actually intends for the Comptroller General to seek judicial enforcement against the President or Vice President himself — from making the "express statement" required by Franklin. Similarly, to recognize the limits inherent in the language of §§ 712(1) and 717(b) would not interfere with the Comptroller General's ability to evaluate the results of federal programs authorized by statute (i.e., most of the activities of the Executive Branch, excepting only those that are conducted pursuant to the powers expressly enumerated in Article II). Nor would it prevent the Comptroller General from initiating such an evaluation on the basis of an honest judgment rather than an automatic response to a mistaken belief about the authority of ranking minority members to act for their committees.

Public Citizen and AAPS demonstrate that this Court should prefer any reasonable statutory construction to one that would interfere with the President's ability to seek advice in pursuance of his constitutional functions. Accordingly, this Court should adopt the reasonable constructions of §§ 712(1), 716(b), and 717(b) articulated above and dismiss the Complaint.[38]

REV_00146095

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, the Court should deny plaintiff's motion for summary judgment, and grant defendant's motion to dismiss.

[38] Of course, the Court need not reach every one of the statutory questions in order to dismiss the Complaint. If the Vice President is not the head of an agency under § 716(b) — either because Congress has failed to make the express statement required by Franklin or because the NEPDG operated (like the task force in Meyer) only to advise and assist the President — that reason alone requires dismissal under Rule 12(b)(6).

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

DAVID M. WALKER, Comptroller
General of the United States, Plaintiff,

v. C.A. No.1:02cv340JDB

RICHARD B. CHENEY, Vice President of the United States,
Defendant.

DEFENDANT'S RESPONSE TO PLAINTIFF'S
STATEMENT OF MATERIAL FACTS

Pursuant to Local Rule 56.1, defendant submits his response to the numbered paragraphs of plaintiff's Statement of Material Facts:

1. Not disputed that President Bush established the National Energy Policy Development Group (NEPDG) by memorandum dated January 29, 2001, that a copy of that memorandum is attached as Exhibit A to the Complaint, and that plaintiff has accurately quoted portions of that memorandum in this paragraph. Defendant refers the Court to the memorandum for a full statement of its contents.

2. Not disputed.

3. Not disputed.

4. Not disputed that funding for the NEPDG was to be provided by the Department of Energy to the maximum extent permitted by law and that the Vice President or his designee was authorized to submit to the President a proposal to use appropriations available to the President to meet any funding needs which could not be met through DOE appropriations. Compl. Ex. A at 2-3.

5. Not disputed that the NEPDG was supported by five professionals employed at the DOE and a White House Fellow, and that plaintiff has accurately quoted a portion of Responses by Andrew Lundquist, Executive Director of the NEPDG, to Questions from the Ranking Minority Members of the House Committee on Government Reform and the House Committee on Energy and Commerce. Compl. Ex. E. Defendant refers the Court to those responses for a full statement of their contents.

6. Not disputed that individuals on the NEPDG support staff met with individuals who were not federal employees to gather information relevant to the NEPDG's work and that such meetings did not involve deliberations or efforts to achieve consensus, but were used as forums to collect individual views. Compl. Ex. E, attachments 1 at 2.

7. Not disputed that, to the extent there were costs for the activities of the NEPDG, including its meetings, public money defrayed those costs.

8. Not disputed that a letter was sent by Reps. Dingell and Waxman to plaintiff on April 19, 2001, that a copy of that letter is contained at Exhibit B to the Complaint, and that plaintiff has accurately quoted a portion of that letter. Defendant refers the Court to the letter for a full statement of its contents.

9. Not disputed.

10. Not disputed that Exhibit C to plaintiff's Complaint was provided by GAO staff to the Counsel to the Vice President on May 8, 2001. Defendant refers the Court to that exhibit for a full statement of its contents.

11. Not disputed that David S. Addington, Counsel to the Vice President, sent the letter contained at Exhibit D to the Complaint to Anthony A. Gamboa, GAO General Counsel, on May 16, 2001. Defendant refers the Court to that letter for a full statement of its contents.

12. As to the first sentence, not disputed that Mr. Addington included with the May 16 letter a copy of the Responses by Andrew Lundquist, Executive Director of the NEPDG, to Questions from the Ranking Minority Members of the House Committee on Government Reform and the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, referred to in ¶ 5, above. As to the second sentence, see response to ¶ 6, above. As to the third sentence, not disputed that the Vice President convened nine meetings of the NEPDG between January 29, 2001, and May 2, 2001. Defendant refers the Court to the Responses for a full statement of their contents.

13. Not disputed that the May 4 letter and attachment do not disclose such information. Disputed that information of this type has not been made available to GAO. See, e.g., Pl's. Statement ¶ 32; Letter of Margot H. Anderson, Deputy Director, DOE's Office of Policy, to Jim Wells, Director, GAO's Natural Resources and Environment, July 16, 2001 (attachment A, infra) (identifying, inter alia, DOE employees serving as NEPDG staff, DOE attendees at NEPDG meetings, dates, times, and places of meetings with non-federal employees by Secretary Abrams).

14. Not disputed that Mr. Gamboa sent the letter contained in Exhibit F to the Complaint to Mr. Addington on June 1, 2001. Defendant refers the Court to that letter for a full statement of its contents.

15. Not disputed that Mr. Addington sent the letter contained at Exhibit G to the Complaint to Mr. Gamboa on June 7, 2001. Defendant refers the Court to that letter for a full statement of its contents.

16. Not disputed that the Counsel to the Vice President sent to GAO as a matter of comity, under cover of a letter to the GAO General Counsel dated June 21, 2001 (Pl's. S.J. Mem. Ex. 2), 77 pages retrieved from files in the Office of the Vice President responsive to GAO's inquiry that it was "interested in obtaining the direct and indirect costs incurred by both the Vice President and the Group support staff." Defendant refers the Court to that letter for a full statement of its contents.

17. Not disputed that the letter dated June 21, 2001 forwarded 77 pages from the files of the Office of the Vice President and directed the GAO to the Department of Energy for more detailed information. See Pl's. S.J. Mem. Ex. 2.

REV_00146099

18. Not disputed that Mr. Gamboa sent the letter contained at Exhibit H to the Complaint to Mr. Addington on June 22, 2001. Defendant refers the Court to that letter for a full statement of its contents.

19. Not disputed.

20. Not disputed.

21. Not disputed.

22. Not disputed, except to clarify that both contacts occurred in July 2001, not 2002.

23. Not disputed that the Deputy White House Counsel and GAO's General Counsel were unable to reach a compromise.

24. Not disputed that the Comptroller General sent the letter contained in Exhibit I to the Complaint to the Vice President on July 18, 2001 and that plaintiff has accurately quoted a portion of that letter. Defendant refers the Court to that letter for a full statement of its contents.

25. See response to ¶ 24, above.

26. Not disputed that the Comptroller General unsuccessfully attempted to call the Vice President on July 30, 2001.

27. As to the first sentence, not disputed. As to the second sentence, not disputed that GAO has stated that it no longer seeks minutes or notes of the meetings, although defendant lacks sufficient basis to confirm or deny the particular statement to which plaintiff refers. See Pl's. Statement ¶ 30. The date on which GAO eliminated such materials from its requests is not material.

28. Not disputed that the Comptroller General received copies of the August 2, 2001, of the Messages from the Vice President of the United States to the Senate and the House of Representatives dated August 2, 2001, contained in Exhibit J to the Complaint. Defendant refers the Court to those letters for a full statement of their contents.

29. Not disputed.

REV_00146100

30. Not disputed that the Comptroller General sent, on August 17, 2001, to the President, the Vice President, the leaders of the Senate and House of Representatives, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, and the Attorney General the letter at Exhibit K to the Complaint. Defendant refers the Court to that Exhibit for a full statement of its contents. As to the last sentence, see response to ¶ 27, above.

31. Not disputed.

32. Not disputed.

33. Not disputed.

34. Not disputed.

35. Not disputed that the listed senators sent to plaintiff the letter contained in Exhibit P to the Complaint on January 22, 2002, and that plaintiff has accurately quoted a portion of that letter. Defendant refers the Court to the letter for a full statement of its contents.

36. Not disputed that the Vice President and the Comptroller General spoke by telephone and that no compromise was reached.

37. Not disputed that plaintiff sent the letter contained in Exhibit R to the Complaint to the persons identified in this paragraph on January 30, 2002. Defendant refers the Court to that exhibit for a full statement of its contents.

REPORT BY B. JOHN WILLIAMS, JR.
CHIEF COUNSEL, INTERNAL REVENUE SERVICE TO THE SENATE FINANCE COMMITTEE ON ABUSIVE TAX AVOIDANCE TRANSACTIONS
MAY 31, 2002

I INTRODUCTION

The problem of abusive tax avoidance transactions is a high priority for the Office of Chief Counsel and for the Internal Revenue Service and the Department of Treasury. I appreciate the opportunity to report to the Senate Finance Committee on my views on abusive tax avoidance transactions and the approaches I am taking to address them in my capacity as Chief Counsel of the IRS.

The Finance Committee has taken an active role in examining the nature and scope of these transactions and in developing appropriate responses. The Committee is to be commended for its efforts over the past several years to determine what additional tools the IRS needs to address abusive tax avoidance transactions. As I testified before this Committee on March 21, 2002, I believe the best approach to the problem of abusive tax avoidance transactions involves early interdiction and public guidance, coupled with vigorous enforcement activities. In addition, as a general matter I believe that clearer tax rules that depart less frequently from economic reality will reduce opportunities for abuse. Accordingly, as described below, I believe the proposals made by the Treasury Department on March 20, 2002 (the "Treasury Enforcement Proposals") which are also incorporated in S. 2498, the "Tax Shelter Transparency Act", introduced by Chairman Baucus and Senator Grassley on May 9, 2002, are timely and critical to curbing the growth of these transactions.

As the Committee knows, the efforts of the IRS to detect abusive tax avoidance transactions and fashion appropriate responses is ongoing. Thus, I offer this report as part of an ongoing analysis of the problems the IRS faces and an ongoing evaluation of existing audit and enforcement tools and tools that might be enacted. I will continue to consider the appropriateness and effectiveness of existing tools and whether additional measures are needed. Where I identify deficiencies in our current enforcement tools I will identify them for the Committee promptly, so that the Committee may consider whether additional legislation is appropriate. The Committee's continuing support for the efforts of the IRS to ensure that all taxpayers pay their fair share of taxes will be fundamental to the success of the IRS in addressing the challenge to compliance presented by abusive tax avoidance transactions.

This report first outlines the problems of defining an abusive tax avoidance transaction and institutional obstacles to prompt identification and response. It then will outline some of the changes I have made, and intend to make, to curb the use of these transactions. These include: (1) improving early detection of questionable transactions; (2) improving prompt analysis of questionable transactions; (3) accelerating public notification and guidance on questionable transactions; and (4) vigorously enforcing tax rules to ensure the system works fairly for all taxpayers, including vigorously pursuing information relating to these transactions.

II NATURE, SIZE AND SCOPE OF PROBLEM

Before crafting solutions to the issue of abusive tax avoidance transactions, we must consider the nature of the problem and its size and scope. As the Committee knows, however, this task has proven difficult.

A. Determining what is "Abusive"

In analyzing the problem of abusive tax avoidance transactions the first question is whether an "abusive" transaction can be defined in a way that distinguishes it from legitimate tax planning. Drawing that distinction has proven extraordinarily difficult, however.[1] I offer some of my observations on the problems inherent in defining and addressing these transactions.

Some transactions are indisputably "abusive" - these tax shelters are based on misstatements of law or outright fraud. They are shams in fact, and the government's response to them requires no complex policy calls. As the Committee knows, and as the Commissioner has testified, the IRS and the Treasury Department have placed a high priority on addressing these "scams and schemes" because they present a significant threat to tax compliance. They are not the focus of this report, however. This report addresses instead abusive tax avoidance transactions, which are more vexing from a policy standpoint. These are sophisticated transactions based on technical arguments, and it is less clear when they are truly "abusive." The complexity of the tax law, the diversity of the economy and the creativity of sophisticated advisors all work against a single definition of "abusive." Some of these transactions may be technically sound and therefore are not necessarily "abusive," even though the government may not like them. Shutting them down may require a change in law either by amending regulations or new legislation. Other transactions take advantage of complexity in the tax law. These transactions may seem to work on their face, but are based on unreasonable interpretations of the Internal Revenue Code or regulations, in light of the purposes of those provisions. These transactions also may not adhere to long-standing tax principles or lack economic reality. These latter transactions are "abusive."

[1] The Treasury Department and the Joint Committee on Taxation have released comprehensive studies on the tax shelter problem. Department of the Treasury, "The Problem of Corporate Tax Shelters: Discussion, Analysis and Legislative Proposals," July 1999 (Treasury Study); Joint Committee on Taxation, "Study of Present-Law Penalty and Interest Provisions as Required by Section 3801 of the Internal Revenue Service Restructuring and Reform Act of 1998 (Including Provisions Relating to Corporate Tax Shelters)" (JCS-3-99), July 22, 1999; see also Joint Committee on Taxation, "Background and Present Law Relating to Tax Shelters (JCX-19-02), March 19, 2002. This report will not repeat the discussions in those studies.

Because of the variety and complexity of today's breed of abusive tax avoidance transactions, they are not amenable to a single rule that can resolve a range of issues, like the passive loss rule enacted in 1986 in response to the tax shelters of the early 1980s. The current breed includes complex transactions that combine complicated rules to achieve unintended results. Therefore, the facts and circumstances of specific transactions must be examined to distinguish technically sound transactions from abusive ones that do not work under current law. It would be extremely difficult to legislate a rule for either business purpose or economic substance that would address adequately the multitude of situations where these doctrines may be applicable. A statutory rule that is sufficiently flexible necessarily would be subjective and thus would not provide more certainty than these existing judicial doctrines. An inflexible, mechanical rule intended to stop these transactions on substantive grounds (like the passive loss rule) would run the risk of being both too broad and too narrow.

Instead, what is needed is a broad and concerted effort to identify questionable transactions that we then can analyze to determine if they are technically sound, are consistent with longstanding tax principles, and provide tax benefits within the scope of congressional intent. See Gregory v. Helvering, 293 U.S. 465, 469 (1935) ("But the question for determination is whether what was done, apart from the tax motive, was the thing which the statute intended."). In the past, however, the IRS has not used technical arguments and has leaned too heavily on the economic substance doctrine and other "anti-abuse" rules. While there are times when the economic substance doctrine should be applied, I believe that it has been used too frequently and has been diluted and confused. An example of this is UPS v. Commissioner, 254 F.3d 1014 (11th Cir. 2001). In UPS, the Eleventh Circuit reversed the Tax Court's decision that UPS's use of an offshore reinsurance entity lacked economic substance and instead determined that the case was properly analyzed under section 482. In contrast to an economic substance analysis, which would not recognize the transactions at issue in the case, a section 482 analysis would respect the existence of the transactions but would determine whether the pricing in those transactions is appropriate.

B. Identification of Tax Shelters

While not easy to define, transactions that are abusive can be recognized once they are disclosed or discovered. For this reason, the best tool we have in dealing with them is early identification. Identifying questionable transactions early will permit the IRS to gather information and issue guidance, in some cases even before transactions show up on tax returns. Notifying the public of the IRS's position with respect to current transactions coupled with a vigorous enforcement of the disclosure, registration and list maintenance requirements should discourage taxpayers from playing the audit lottery and participating in abusive transactions.

There are three ways the IRS finds out about questionable transactions. Traditionally, the IRS has identified questionable transactions through the examination process. In addition, taxpayers and promoters are required to disclose or register questionable transactions and maintain investor lists under sections 6011, 6111 and 6112. Occasionally, the IRS and the Treasury Department find out about transactions through anonymous tips.

Although early identification is critical to stemming the tide of abusive transactions, the IRS has had difficulties identifying and responding to abusive transactions in a timely manner through the traditional examination process. The IRS's lack of timeliness is caused by several factors. First, the typical examination function of the IRS is not positioned to scrutinize a transaction until several years after it has been marketed. Second, many abusive transactions are difficult to identify on a tax return, some intentionally. Third, even after transactions are identified, there has been no effective process in place to coordinate and oversee the handling of the transactions across organizational lines. I have found that although revenue agents and field counsel have achieved a much closer working relationship in the audit process, that same close relationship has not been cultivated between the field (agents and counsel) and technical counsel in the National Office.

Beginning in 1984, with enactment of section 6111, Congress required certain tax shelter promoters to register their promotions with the Internal Revenue Service. These registration requirements apply to the sale of investments which meet certain conditions. Under section 6111(c), a promoter must register investments which meet the two following conditions. First, the tax shelter ratio[2] at the end of any of the first five years after the investment is offered for sale must exceed two to one. Second, the investment must be (1) required to be registered under a Federal or state law regulating certain [2] The "tax shelter ratio" is defined as the aggregate amount of deductions and 350 percent of the credits represented to be potentially allowable for any year divided by the investment base. The "investment base" generally means the amount of money and adjusted basis of other property (reduced by liabilities to which the property is subject) contributed by the investor. Section 6111(c)(2), (3).

types of securities, (2) sold pursuant to an exemption from registration requiring the filing of a notice with a Federal or state agency regulating the offering of sale of securities, or (3) a substantial investment. In 1997, the Congress added section 6111(d) which requires a tax shelter organizer[3] to register with the IRS any plan or arrangement that has a significant purpose of evasion or avoidance of Federal income tax, may generate fees for the promoter in excess of $100,000, and is offered for sale under conditions of confidentiality.

Also in 1984, Congress enacted section 6112 which imposed certain list maintenance requirements upon organizers and sellers of tax shelters required to be registered under section 6111 and plans or arrangements which the Secretary determines have "a potential for tax avoidance or evasion." Under these rules, promoters are required to maintain lists of investors and certain other information for seven years and make such information available to the IRS for inspection upon request.

In February 2000, the Treasury Department and the IRS issued temporary and proposed regulations, establishing new disclosure rules under section 6011 of the Code, and giving substance to the registration and list-maintenance requirements of sections 6111 and 6112. In the temporary and proposed regulations, Treasury and IRS required (1) in regulations issued under section 6011, the disclosure by corporate taxpayers of their participation in certain large transactions that have characteristics common to tax shelters; (2) in regulations issued under section 6111, the registration of confidential corporate tax shelters; and (3) in regulations issued under section 6112, the maintenance of lists of investors in certain potentially abusive transactions.

Simultaneous with the publication of the disclosure, registration and list-maintenance regulations in February of 2000, the IRS published Notice 2000-15 (2000-1 C.B. 826), notifying taxpayers that particular transactions described in previously issued guidance had been determined to be tax avoidance transactions and, as "listed transactions," were subject to the disclosure requirements, might be subject to the registration requirements, and were subject to the list maintenance requirements. Subsequent notices and rulings have added transactions to the category of "listed transactions" for which disclosure is expressly required.

The existing disclosure, registration and list maintenance regimes have brought additional transactions to the attention of the IRS but the rules have achieved only limited results. Most of the taxpayer disclosures have involved listed transactions. It is my belief that the lack of penalties for the failure to disclose, and the complicated definitions and exceptions in the current disclosure regulations have contributed to their limited results. In contrast to the obligations imposed on promoters, there is no requirement or incentive under current law for taxpayers to disclose questionable

[3] In certain cases, persons other than the promoter are required to register the corporate tax shelter.

REV_00146171

transactions, outside the rules relating to filing of tax returns.

In particular, under section 6662, taxpayers may avoid imposition of the 20% substantial understatement penalty for transactions if they have substantial authority for their position or they have a reasonable basis for their position and they disclose the position. This exception does not apply to transactions with a significant purpose of tax avoidance or evasion. Instead, individuals can avoid the penalty if they have substantial authority and a reasonable belief that their position was more likely than not correct. This exception does not apply to corporations. Instead, corporations may avoid the 20% substantial understatement penalty only where they can establish reasonable cause and good faith for their position under section 6664(c). Regulations under that provision provide that corporations may establish reasonable case and good faith by showing they had substantial authority for their position and a reasonable belief that their position was more likely than not correct, although this minimum showing does not assure the defense will apply. Thus, for both corporations and for individuals there is no statutory incentive to disclose a transaction that has a significant purpose of tax avoidance. Indeed, taxpayers might assume that disclosure would be detrimental because they perceive the likelihood of challenge in the absence of disclosure is minimal and believe disclosure would only increase the likelihood of challenge.

Moreover, the promoter registrations under current section 6111 have not proven particularly helpful, in large part because the mechanical test used in section 6111(c), which was designed to address the "retail" tax shelters prevalent in the early 1980s, is not appropriate for the kinds of abusive transactions now prevalent, and because the limitation in section 6111(d) to confidential corporate tax shelters has proven easy to circumvent. In addition, promoters have parsed the language of the regulations to argue that they are not promoters and thus have no registration or list maintenance obligation. In addition, penalties for failure to maintain customer lists are not meaningful and promoters often have refused to provide requested information to the IRS.

Lastly, even where taxpayers and promoters submitted information as required under the disclosure and registration rules, or transactions have been uncovered during audit, until recently there was no central review or analysis of the information submitted. This has been addressed through the reorganization of the IRS and creation of the Office of Tax Shelter Analysis ("OTSA") under the Large and Midsize Business Division of the IRS ("LMSB"). Despite the efforts of OTSA, there is still too much delay from the time that OTSA identifies a transaction to the time the IRS issues guidance on that transaction.

The failures to identify abusive transactions and to act quickly to issue published guidance addressing such transactions once they are detected may lead to the proliferation of such transactions. First, the delay means that the IRS is always behind the marketplace. As time passes without challenges to these transactions taxpayers assume, incorrectly, that the IRS has tacitly approved the transaction. Moreover, other taxpayers begin to take the view that they "might as well" enter into aggressive transactions themselves. They perceive a competitive disadvantage if they do not enter into these aggressive transactions and little risk if they do. Indeed, when the IRS finally takes action to shut down the transaction, taxpayers and promoters move on to the next generation of the transaction because they know they have a low risk of detection and enforcement and could benefit from IRS delays in finding and addressing the next transaction.

Second, when the IRS is slow to issue published guidance, it must address more cases through audit and litigation. As I have stated to the Committee in responses to questions issued after the March 21, 2002 hearing, I intend to ensure that the IRS rigorously identifies, develops and litigates appropriate cases in all areas, including abusive tax avoidance transactions. Litigation will always remain an important facet of the IRS's effort to combat abusive tax avoidance transactions, but litigation cannot be the answer to the problem. Litigation is far too costly, time-consuming, and fact-specific to fully address abusive tax avoidance transactions. Spending 5 to 10 years, or more, to litigate a case to conclusion is no substitute for learning about transactions as they occur and moving quickly with published guidance or legislative changes to stop the transactions. Discovering and addressing transactions through audits and litigation is the least efficient way to influence taxpayer behavior, both because of the delay and because of the limited reach of such activities. Audits and litigation are best used as enforcement tools that reinforce published guidance (and longstanding tax principles) as applied to abusive transactions.

C. Size and Scope of Abusive Tax Avoidance Transactions

As noted above, the disclosure, registration and list-maintenance rules produced only limited results. In general, the regulations required corporations to disclose only those reportable transactions entered into after February 28, 2000. For transactions entered into on or before February 28, 2001, corporations had to disclose a transaction only if it was a listed transaction that had not affected its Federal income tax liability on any previously filed returns. Consequently, disclosure statements received in calendar year 2000 covered only listed transactions, and disclosure statements received in calendar year 2001 covered listed transactions and other reportable transactions (those filed after August 2, 2001 were covered by the current revised regulations). In calendar year 2000, twenty-one corporations disclosed 51 listed transactions. In calendar year 2001, ninety-nine corporations disclosed 272 transactions, of which 64 were listed transactions.

Complementing the corporate disclosures required under section 6011, the regulations issued in 2000 also required tax shelter organizers to register tax shelters with the IRS no later than the day on which the tax shelters are first offered for sale. To date, the vast majority of registrations have involved leasing transactions.

As part of its enforcement activities, LMSB implemented a disclosure initiative under Announcement 2002-2 to encourage taxpayers to voluntarily disclose their participation in tax avoidance transactions and other transactions that might be subject to the accuracy-related penalties. The disclosure initiative was designed to provide the IRS with information about questionable transactions and provide taxpayers an opportunity to disclose their participation in a tax avoidance transaction.

Complementing the disclosure initiative, LMSB provided guidelines to IRS examiners regarding the consideration of the accuracy-related penalty under section 6662 in examinations involving listed transactions and other potentially abusive tax avoidance transactions. Together with the disclosure initiative, the penalty guidelines were intended to create a compliance incentive by ensuring that in appropriate circumstances the IRS will consider and apply penalties consistently, impartially, and fairly among all taxpayers.

The disclosure initiative under Announcement 2002-2 had a 120-day life that expired on April 22, 2002. As of May 23, 2002, OTSA has processed 1341 disclosures from 990 taxpayers involving 1268 tax returns. At this time, disclosures are still being received and processed, and we will not be able to ascertain the magnitude until all of the disclosed items have been examined and resolved. (The disclosure initiative does not require a concession by a taxpayer that a disclosed transaction was improper, and therefore the disclosed deductions and losses may not necessarily result in adjustments.) We will examine the disclosed transactions to determine if they are improper and assess deficiencies as appropriate. [need new numbers reflecting over 1600 disclosures.]

The results from the disclosure initiative, in contrast to the results from the corporate disclosures under the section 6011 regulations, illustrate that these transactions are widespread but also that the threat of detection and penalties may be a powerful deterrent. It is my belief, however, that when the IRS makes public its position on a questionable transaction, the numbers of taxpayers willing to enter into such transactions drop significantly. Public identification of a particular transaction as abusive increases the risk of detection, particularly when combined with the rules requiring registration of listed transactions (reinforced by promoter enforcement activities). Public identification also creates a more transparent system -- both the IRS and taxpayers know that such transactions will be subject to challenge. When the IRS delays such published notification, however, more taxpayers are willing to engage in such transactions. The sheer volume of some of the abusive transactions can impose an added drain on IRS resources.

Moreover, vague disclosure rules without threat of enforcement or penalties are ineffective. In contrast, a disclosure regime that provides a real incentive to taxpayers to disclose (in this case, a waiver of penalties for disclosed transactions) and disincentive for failure to disclose (the penalty policy announced at the same time as the initiative) can be very effective, particularly when coupled with an increased likelihood of detection (through the increased focus on promoters discussed further below).

Although the above numbers demonstrate that taxpayers have been willing to engage in potentially abusive transactions, I do not believe that the problem of abusive transactions is "measurable", for the simple reason that we cannot measure what we do not know. As part of its ongoing effort to identify and respond to questionable transactions and allocate its resources more efficiently to areas of higher noncompliance, the IRS should and will collect data on the types of transactions, numbers of taxpayers and revenue at issue in these transactions. However, these numbers only show us what we know is potentially at issue; they do not show what we do not know. The IRS is still analyzing the transactions that have been registered or disclosed. At this point we do not know whether the positions taken are correct and we must engage in a factual inquiry into particular transactions to determine the proper tax treatment of those transactions. Moreover, the disclosures and registrations often contain only sketchy descriptions of transactions and therefore the IRS is in the process of asking taxpayers and promoters for additional information regarding questionable transactions. In addition, I believe that revenue lost is ancillary to the fundamental concern that these transactions raise -- lack of fairness and respect for the tax system. The number of taxpayers participating in such transactions and the magnitude of such transactions is a symptom, and we must focus on guidance and fair administration and enforcement of the tax rules to reinforce taxpayer respect for the system.

III RESPONSES TO ABUSIVE TAX AVOIDANCE TRANSACTIONS

A. Early Identification of Questionable Transactions

Disclosure and registration are the best tools for the IRS to identify and address questionable transactions early. Becoming current with the market must be a top priority. The examination process does not allow for early identification of transactions, before they are widely marketed, however. Even in the best of circumstances, large corporate returns generally are not filed until nine months after the close of the tax year, and examination is not completed until several years after that. This means the IRS may not become aware of the transaction until several years after it has been marketed and taxpayers have entered into it.

The IRS is not always able to identify abusive transactions promptly through return examination and thus often must rely upon disclosure and registration to catch transactions. On March 21, 2002, the Finance Committee heard testimony about the problems with the current disclosure, registration and list maintenance provisions, and proposed solutions in the form of the Treasury Enforcement Proposals. The Tax Shelter Transparency Act, S. 2498, incorporates the Treasury Department's legislative proposals and gives the IRS tools to identify transactions early by encouraging disclosure by taxpayers and registration and maintenance of customer lists by promoters. In addition, the IRS and the Treasury Department currently are revising the disclosure, registration, and list maintenance regulations as described in the Treasury Enforcement Proposals to clarify and simplify the disclosure and registration regimes, cast a broader net over questionable transactions and require more taxpayers and other participants in questionable transactions to identify those transactions early. These changes also will integrate the disclosure registration and list maintenance rules with the penalty provisions in section 6662.

The Treasury Enforcement Proposals will improve the current disclosure, registration, and list maintenance rules in a number of ways. First, our proposals would broaden the range of persons who are required to register reportable transactions and maintain lists of investors. Promoters have not complied with these rules in the past because they have argued that they are not an organizer or seller of the tax shelter and thus do not have a reporting obligation. The proposals would also require individual taxpayers, partnerships and trusts, not just corporations, to disclose their participation in questionable transactions. Additionally, receipt of these disclosures would be centralized at one location, as are corporate disclosures, to provide for coordinated review by OTSA. These changes should cover a large number of promoters and taxpayers who have participated in reportable transactions, and it should expose a larger number of questionable transactions currently in the market.

The proposals also would amend the rules under sections 6011, 6111 and 6112 of the Internal Revenue Code to establish a consistent definition of a "reportable" transaction for disclosure, registration and list maintenance purposes and provide new or enhanced penalties for failure to comply with these rules. Because taxpayers and promoters are reading the exceptions in the current rules liberally and interpreting the requirements narrowly, a clear and consistent rule is needed. This would ensure that the IRS has multiple sources of information about a reportable transaction and would give the IRS the ability to move quickly between the various forms of information. For example, if a taxpayer fails to disclose a reportable transaction but the promoter registers the transaction, the IRS would be able to move quickly from the registration to an investor list in order to identify that taxpayer and other non-disclosing taxpayers. This creates a web of mutually reinforcing rules. For example, in one case, five taxpayers disclosed a questionable transaction under the 6011 disclosure rules. The IRS obtained a list from the promoter of that transaction that included seventeen taxpayers. The IRS is now pursuing the remaining twelve nondisclosing taxpayers. Thus, these proposals working together provide the certainty of detection that, coupled with the penalties for failure to disclosue, will encourage taxpayers to disclose questionable transactions or deter them from entering into such transactions where they believe their position is too uncertain.

The proposals would clarify the definition of "listed transaction." Taxpayers have applied the "substantially similar" standard narrowly to conclude that disclosure is not required. The regulations would be amended to provide that the term "substantially similar" includes any transaction expected to obtain the same or similar types of tax benefits and that is either factually similar or based on the same or similar tax strategy. This change should prevent more taxpayers from avoiding disclosure. The proposals also would discourage taxpayers from participating in transactions based on the asserted invalidity of a regulation without disclosure. Reliance on opinions asserting that a regulation is invalid will not be a defense to the accuracy-related penalties unless proper disclosure is made. The administration's proposals would apply the accuracy-related penalties under section 6662 if a listed transaction is not disclosed and results in an underpayment, and eliminate the ability of taxpayers to rely on opinions to establish reasonable cause under section 6664(c), where a reportable transaction is not disclosed.

Finally, we are seeking legislation that would allow the government to seek injunctive relief against promoters who repeatedly disregard the registration and list maintenance requirements. Some promoters are blatantly ignoring the rules regardless of the penalties they face. An injunction would place a promoter in a public proceeding under court order to comply with the rules. Failure to comply in the future would place the promoter in contempt of court. The threat of such an injunction (and the associated publicity) should be enough to end noncompliance.

These changes should make compliance and enforcement easier by providing taxpayers strong incentives to disclose questionable transactions. The proposals will work together to ensure certainty of detection because the rules identify clearly, without exceptions and loopholes, which transactions must be disclosed and registered and which transactions require list maintenance. They create a broad web of taxpayers and other participants, including promoters, who must give the IRS information. Enforcement is more certain because the IRS will use this information to determine the proper tax treatment of the transactions. Finally, the proposals ensure certainty that penalties will be imposed in appropriate circumstances for failure to comply with the rules.

Our overarching goal and obligation to the tax system and to taxpayers is to ensure that each taxpayer pays his or her fair share of tax – no more and no less. We also need to ensure that each taxpayer believes that others likewise are complying with their obligations to pay. Therefore, we must balance our desire not to interfere with legitimate tax planning with our need to curb abusive tax practices under which taxpayers take advantage of complex tax laws to obtain unintended tax benefits. As former Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy Mark Weinberger put it, if a taxpayer feels comfortable entering into a transaction, if a promoter feels comfortable selling a transaction, and if an advisor feels comfortable recommending a transaction, they all should feel comfortable identifying and describing the transaction for the IRS.

The Tax Shelter Transparency Act, S. 2498, has incorporated key elements from the Treasury Enforcement Proposals, including authority to expand the range of persons required to disclose or register questionable transactions and maintain lists of investors, authority to provide a consistent definition of questionable transaction for purposes of the disclosure, registration and investor list maintenance rules, enhanced penalties for failure to disclose, and the power to use injunctions to address repeated failures to comply with the registration and list maintenance rules. As described below, the IRS already is using the tools at its disposal to pursue information. However, these additional tools will be applied to ensure that the IRS learns about transactions as quickly as possible. I intend to use these enhanced tools to ensure that the IRS has prompt access to the information it needs to fairly and vigorously enforce the Internal Revenue Code.

B. Prompt Analysis of Questionable Transactions

Early identification is only as valuable as the IRS response to the transactions identified. Therefore, one of my goals since my confirmation has been to coordinate the efforts of the IRS, the Office of Chief Counsel and the Treasury Department in responding as quickly as possible to questionable transactions when they are identified. Historically, there has been sequential examination and internal delays within the Office of Chief Counsel. In addition, there has been inadequate factual investigation of these transactions by IRS agents and field counsel.

To address the problem of internal delays, the Office of Chief Counsel and LMSB have implemented transaction-specific task forces. The task forces are formed for specific transactions or a group of transactions, and include attorneys from the appropriate operating divisions of Chief Counsel, attorneys from the technical divisions of Chief Counsel, the Department of Treasury, and OTSA. In addition, revenue agents may be assigned to each task force. Being dedicated to the task force reduces the distraction of other obligations.

The process starts with a review of disclosed and registered transactions by the OTSA working with Chief Counsel's LMSB Division. As new transactions are identified, a preliminary determination is made as to which transactions warrant referral to a task force. The referral to a task force ensures that technical expertise will be available from the start. The task force decides whether to recommend (1) factual investigation of the transaction, (2) further inquiry of the promoter, and/or (3) issuance of public guidance. Revenue agents who assist the task force conduct any factual investigation with assistance of division counsel. If further information is needed from the promoter (such as a list of investors or tax opinions), it is requested. Treasury attorneys are asked to join the task force if it is determined that public guidance should be considered.

Use of such task forces should allow us to distinguish between sound and problematic transactions, determine the kind of guidance necessary and permit both follow-up on the transaction and prompt issuance of public guidance. Decisions on whether to issue a Notice alerting taxpayers that the IRS will challenge a transaction are made early and jointly with the Treasury Department. Through the improved disclosure and registration regimes, we should become aware of these transactions even before they are reported on a tax return and be able to address them early in their promotion. The task forces will achieve consistency through the system, coordinating the efforts of the National Office, field counsel, the revenue agents and Appeals. Furthermore, cross-checking of issues identified in the field with disclosure and registration will become easier. This means a higher likelihood that taxpayers who have invested in questionable transactions will be identified and subject to examinations.

Two examples will serve to illustrate the problems these task forces are designed to address. Within weeks of my swearing in, I became aware of a transaction that the IRS had identified as potentially abusive more than a year earlier. Indeed the transaction had been registered by promoters, and was the subject of an article in Tax Notes in December, 2000.[4] There had been no concerted institutional effort to conclude the analysis of the questionable transaction despite the universally held view that it was abusive and, thus, there was no push to issue public guidance to make the government's position known. When I became aware of the transaction I organized a small group of lawyers to analyze the transaction. This led to a notice listing the transaction within weeks, Notice 2002-14, 2002-14 I.R.B. 730. Notice 2002-14 involves the purported assumption of a loan in exchange for assets that produces a claimed basis in the assets in excess of the assets' fair market value. (The assets then are sold and a tax loss is claimed.) For the reasons set out in Notice 2002-14, the transaction does not yield the result claimed under section 1012 of the Code, the regulations thereunder, and the applicable case law interpreting section 1012.

In another case, the IRS identified through OTSA review of promoter registrations and taxpayer disclosures an abusive transaction and brought it to the attention of my office in late March. A task force was formed immediately to analyze the transaction. Within six weeks the task force had produced a revenue ruling, Rev. Rul. 2002-30, 2002-21 I.R.B. ___, stating the IRS position on the transaction along with a notice listing the transaction as abusive, Notice 2002-35, 2002-21 I.R.B.____.[5] This experience has reinforced my view that we need a process for prompt analysis of questionable

[5] In Rev. Rul. 2002-30, a taxpayer entered into a notional principal contract ("NPC") with a counterparty for a term of 18 months. Pursuant to the terms of the NPC, the taxpayer agreed to make quarterly payments to the counterparty based on three-month LIBOR multiplied by a notional principal amount of $100,000,000. In exchange, the counterparty agreed that upon the expiration of the NPC on March 31, 2004, the counterparty would pay to the taxpayer 6 percent per year multiplied by a notional principal amount of $92,000,000 (the fixed payment amount). In addition, the counterparty (or the taxpayer) will make a payment upon expiration equal to the percentage increase (or decrease) in the value of the S&P 500 stock index multiplied by a notional principal amount of $8,000,000. The Service ruled that the taxpayer and the counterparty must recognize the noncontingent component of the nonperiodic payment over the term of the NPC. Simultaneously with the issuance of Rev. Rul. 2002-30, the IRS and Treasury issued Notice 2002-35, pursuant to which taxpayers who entered into transactions substantially similar to the one described in Rev. Rul. 2002-30 were required to disclose such transactions with their tax returns and comply with certain other requirements.

transactions as they are identified so that they do not proliferate in the marketplace. As this discussion illustrates, however, I believe that the analysis of the transactions is only part of the equation; it must be paired with published guidance.

In addition, the arguments used to attack abusive transactions are critical. As part of the analysis of transactions, the IRS can, and should, consider arguments based on the substantive provisions (the Code, regulations and other published guidance) first, and then consider application of the judicial doctrines, including the sham, step-transaction, substance-over-form, and economic substance doctrines. In some cases, the alleged compliance with the technical Code requirements may not withstand rigorous scrutiny. In addition, application of the judicial doctrines may be appropriate, depending on the particular facts of each case. In cases where there may be some ambiguity in the law that is perceived to allow the purported tax benefits of the transaction, the Treasury Department and the IRS must be ready to respond quickly to shut down abusive tax avoidance transactions through published guidance, including regulations. If a transaction is not susceptible to challenge under existing statutes and judicial doctrines, it is necessary to move quickly and propose legislative changes to shut the transaction down, where appropriate.

C. Published Guidance

The published guidance program is an important tool in the tax shelter area that can be used to increase disclosure and compliance. Because our federal tax system is based on self-assessment, the IRS has a responsibility to assist taxpayers in determining what works and what does not. The current level of published guidance is unacceptable to the Commissioner and to the public.

The IRS must respond to transactions more quickly. Our delays mean more taxpayers will enter into these transactions. While abusive transactions will be challenged upon audit even where they have not yet been addressed by public guidance, informing the public that we are aware of such transactions will discourage participation in abusive transactions. Showing that we are aware of transactions currently in the market, and of who has invested in them, should reduce taxpayers' incentive to play the audit lottery. Our commitment to serving the public demands that we announce early our views on new transactions that do not work, and our views on those that do.

Some transactions that raise concerns are technically sound under current law. Our willingness to issue guidance addressing the transactions that work should encourage promoters and taxpayers to come to us with transactions that they believe are technically sound. If promoters and taxpayers know that the IRS is not simply a nay-sayer, they should be more interested in talking to us about transactions and financial instruments currently being developed. As a result, the IRS would be better informed of current transactions and would be able to recommend necessary changes to the law, whether administrative or legislative, more quickly. A good example of this kind of ruling is Rev. Rul. 2002-31, 2002-__ I.R.B. ____, in which the IRS determined that contingent convertible notes work under current law. In a companion notice, Notice 2002-36, 2002-___I.R.B. ____, the IRS also indicated that it has some questions about the proper treatment of such transactions and asked for comment regarding possible changes to the regulations that permit these transactions. This published guidance allows taxpayers to understand the IRS position on transactions and thus reduces taxpayer cost in determining whether tax positions are proper.

As importantly, public guidance tells the field what transactions do not work and what transactions work and thus serves as an important tool to focus IRS audit and enforcement resources toward transactions that are questionable and away from transactions that work under current law. When a transaction is identified, agents will know what to look for and how to analyze it. When a transaction is determined to be sound, agents will know not to devote resources to challenging it.

Issuing guidance quickly on transactions that are abusive requires us to develop our principal position and announce it early rather than attempting to refine all the possible arguments that might apply. Too often published guidance is delayed while we attempt to formulate the perfect solution to all potential problems. We should focus instead on developing advice that covers the general issues; more specific problems can be addressed in later guidance.

The Treasury Office of Tax Policy and the Office of Chief Counsel are committed to early and joint policy review to increase the level of published guidance. Joint efforts should allow us to remain on top of current transactions. Regular joint policy briefings have helped speed guidance relating to a range of issues, including the first set of revisions to the tax shelter regulations that incorporate some of the Treasury Enforcement Proposals.

Finally, and perhaps most importantly, where possible I hope to propose clear rules that comport with economic reality and are not one-sided, and I look forward to working with the Treasury Department and the Congress on efforts to simplify the tax laws. One-sided rules that do not comport with economic reality often are intended to prohibit abuses and protect the fisc; however, with creative tax planning, they can become new loopholes. A recent article referred to these provisions as "attractive nuisances" -- an apt description.[6] The most-often cited example of such a one-sided rule is the regulation exploited in the contingent installment sale note transactions, like the one at issue in ACM Partnership v. Commissioner, 73 T.C.M. (CCH) 2189, aff'd in part, rev'd in part, 157 F.3d 231 (3d Cir. 1998), cert. denied, 526 U.S. 1017 (1999). That regulation, Temp. Treas. Reg. § 15a.453-1(c)(3)(i), required ratable basis recovery for installment sales where the maximum selling price was not known but the period over which payments were to be made was fixed. (The regulation also allowed the IRS to defer, but not to accelerate, basis recovery to respond to distortions; some have referred to this rule as not pro-government enough.) Thus, in ACM, the taxpayers accelerated payment of a large portion of the selling price but included a contingent element. Basis recovery was delayed relative to the economic cost recovery in the transaction. The mismatch between economic cost recovery and the cost recovery prescribed by the regulation permitted this shelter.

[6] Lee A. Sheppard, "Tax Shelter Opponents Turn Practical," 95 Tax Notes 1111 (May 20, 2002).

Other shelters have involved similar disconnects between the tax treatment of income or deductions and the economics of the transactions. For example, fast pay preferred stock involved accelerated basis recovery treated as taxable dividend income, and lease strips involved accelerated rental income, separated from the underlying property. The tax rules underlying these transactions accelerated income recognition, which is generally considered anti-taxpayer, and were known not to be economic. However, as is often the cases with one-sided rules that deviate from economics, creative tax planners found ways to use these rules to create unintended tax benefits. [B John -- this was my point with these examples -- perhaps there are better ones.] While there may be administrative reasons for deviating from economics of transactions, I will carefully scrutinize proposed rules to ensure that such deviations are necessary and appropriate. In addition to reducing the opportunities for abuse, clear simple rules also reduce the burden on taxpayers to comply with the rules and reduce the burden on the IRS for enforcing the rules.

D. Enforcement Activities

The changes to the disclosure, registration and list maintenance rules combined with focused task forces should result in broader identification, quicker public guidance, and better compliance. Enforcement is the final piece of the puzzle. My goal here is simple – I want to interdict the promotion of abusive tax avoidance transactions at the front end – that is as the transactions are being marketed and sold to taxpayers. To achieve this, we need to use the web of information from taxpayers and promoters and aggressively pursue the information to which we are entitled under the Code.

Because early detection is central to my goal of early interdiction, I believe that the promoters should be the first source of information and the first target of IRS enforcement efforts. Promoters have the first obligation to register transactions; therefore, their registrations provide the first opportunity to learn about questionable transactions. Moreover, their lists of investors will allow the IRS to identify how widespread transactions are and devise plans for audit and resolution even before the first tax returns are under examination in the normal course. Finally, focus on the promoters will reinforce to both taxpayers and promoters the certainty of detection of questionable transactions and certainty of examination of questionable transactions. Under this approach, promoters may continue to engage in tax planning and advise their investors on ways to minimize taxes, but they also will know that these strategies will come under scrutiny which should deter the most egregious and patently abusive transactions.

The IRS is exercising its authority under the Internal Revenue Code to determine whether promoters and taxpayers are in compliance with the registration and disclosure requirements. The IRS already has requested information (through "soft letters") from over 30 promoters to determine whether they have complied with the registration and list maintenance requirements. Where the IRS has obtained information from promoters, it is in the process of reviewing that information and is contacting the investors listed. Our attempts to remain current with the market, however, are hampered by the promoters' failure to cooperate. Many promoters were asked to provide information almost two years ago, and some promoters have yet to provide us with all of the information requested. Therefore, the IRS, with the support of Chief Counsel attorneys, has begun to issue summonses for the information we have requested. In addition, to ensure that the summonses are proper and enforceable, the IRS and the Office of Chief Counsel have established a pre-issuance clearance program with the Department of Justice. Under this program, summonses to promoters are cleared with DOJ lawyers before they are served on promoters.

As of May 23, the IRS had issued 110 summonses to 6 different promoters and had a number of summonses pending. [need to update] It is my understanding that prior to this year, no summonses had been issued requesting information under sections 6111 or 6112, with the exception of one summons issued in 2001. We have, and will, issue summonses to accounting firms, investment banks and law firms who may have been involved in the promotion of questionable transactions. More summonses will follow – some imminently. We also are in discussions with promoters to avoid issuing summonses that are pending.

Summonses to promoters can be particularly effective as we analyze transactions discovered through disclosure or other means. For example, in one case, we used our summons powers to obtain a tax opinion for a task force to analyze. The tax opinion was an important part of the analysis of the tax shelter task force, ensuring that the task force understood the transaction and did not overlook critical arguments.

We are considering summons enforcement actions to require promoters to comply with summonses where we believe that we are legally entitled to information that promoters have not produced. We are working closely with the Department of Justice as part of our summons enforcement actions to ensure that the IRS gains access to all of the information to which it is legally entitled. This includes tax opinions provided as part of a promotion of a questionable transaction. I value the attorney-client privilege and believe it is fundamental to our legal system. And Congress recently enacted the accountant-client privilege in section 7525. Nonetheless, I believe that the scope of this privilege is narrower than often claimed. I recently was made aware of promoters claiming that the privilege applies to investor lists, presentation charts, and even K-1s. I believe that these claims of privilege are improper.

The attorney-client privilege, and the tax advisor privilege in section 7525, which is based on the attorney-client privilege, are intended to protect client communications to obtain legal advice. While claims of privilege for tax advice given more closely hew to the traditional understanding of attorney-client privilege, the privilege is much narrower than is frequently claimed. First, it is unclear whether tax advice contained in opinions used to promote these transactions was given in the context of an attorney client relationship (or parallel relationship in the practitioner context). Second, the privilege may have been waived. Finally, as a general rule, the privilege does not protect the name of the investor who has received the tax advice. Where promoters intend to assert privilege they should be careful to apply the privilege properly and should be prepared to substantiate their privilege claim. I have personally met with representatives of one promoter as part of our enforcement activity to discuss my intent to pursue summons enforcement actions and challenge such privilege claims. In that case, the representatives decided to produce to the IRS the requested information. We currently have under consideration other summons enforcement actions relating to privilege claims, and I plan to pursue those actions vigorously if necessary. I also have spoken personally to representatives of the AICPA and the ABA to make my position clear to them.

I also am reviewing other rules that might apply to tax practitioners when they withhold information from the IRS on grounds that such information is privileged. In particular, I am reviewing Circular 230 to determine whether there are ethical violations when tax practitioners make baseless claims of privilege. In particular, section 10.20(a) of Circular 230 provides: "No attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent, or enrolled actuary shall neglect or refuse promptly to submit records or information in any matter before the Internal Revenue Service, upon proper and lawful request by a duly authorized officer or employee of the Internal Revenue Service, or shall interfere, or attempt to interfere, with any proper and lawful effort by the Internal Revenue Service or its officers or employees to obtain any such record or information, unless he believes in good faith and on reasonable grounds that such record or information is privileged or that the request for, or effort to obtain, such record or information is of doubtful legality." It is my understanding that this office has not raised a violation of Circular 230 unless a summons enforcement action has commenced. I have asked that this practice be reconsidered. IRS requests for documents are set forth in "Information Document Requests" ("IDRs"). While informal, IDRs are requests by authorized agents for information, and unless privileged, the information must be produced. [what about overbroad or irrelevant requests?] Practitioners have an ethical duty to see that the information requested is produced to the IRS. I believe that failures of this ethical duty should be sanctioned.

Finally, we are considering the application of penalties to promoters who have failed to register transactions. We have uncovered transactions where promoters should have, but failed to, register transactions and we are considering the application of penalties in these cases. Penalties for these failures to register can be quite substantial (millions of dollars), because of the size and volume of the transactions. We believe that the risk of penalties will provide a strong incentive to promoters to comply with the registration and list maintenance rules. In addition, as noted above, we believe that injunctive relief will be an effective tool to cure repeated failures to comply with these rules.

In addition, the IRS will pursue taxpayers who engage in abusive transactions. I have said publicly that I do not believe that we should use litigation to establish new rules but instead should rely on published guidance. Nonetheless, the IRS will litigate cases when a taxpayer has manipulated the rules and regulations, including published guidance, to obtain unintended tax benefits. In addition, when justified by the facts, the IRS will challenge transactions based on the judicial doctrines, including the sham, step-transaction, substance-over-form, and economic substance doctrines.

The decision to litigate a case, however, must be a considered one. The process of designation is the means by which the Office of Chief Counsel selects cases for litigation. It does not mean that other cases will not go to court; rather it is used to target specific cases that we believe are strong enforcement vehicles and expedite those cases to court. My priority is to ensure that the right cases are designated for litigation, and that we exercise careful oversight over the positions that the government is taking in litigation. To achieve these goals, I have centralized the procedure for designating cases for litigation in my office. I will personally approve designations, and I intend to designate only those cases that are good enforcement vehicles – that is, cases where the law is clear (either there is published guidance or the application of the judicial doctrines is clear), and the facts have been fully developed by the Examination team.

Before designation, the taxpayer will be informed that the case is being considered so that the taxpayer can discuss with the IRS the merits of designation. We will not designate cases unless the IRS Industry Director, Division Counsel and I agree that designation is appropriate. In such cases, we will not issue "30 day" letters that will allow cases to go to Appeals but instead will issue statutory notices to the taxpayers. Designation will be issue-by-issue, and other issues in a case may go to Appeals. Finally, within 6 months of the statutory notice, I expect the government to be in a position to issue informal discovery requests (Branerton letters)[7], file first stipulations of documents and facts, and file proposals with the court for assignment to a judge and trial schedule. That is, I expect to designate cases that are already well developed. This is a very important element of my enforcement strategy not only for tax shelters but tax cases generally.

This is particularly important to our overall enforcement strategy for abusive tax

[7] Branerton v. Commissioner,61 T.C. 691 (1974).

avoidance transactions. It will ensure that we will litigate cases that present strong enforcement vehicles. It should accelerate the judicial resolution of IRS and taxpayer disputes, which should aid in developing resolution of cases on audit.

I also plan to pursue penalties against taxpayers where appropriate. In that regard, where a transaction is challenged and a taxpayer invokes the reasonable cause and good faith exception to the application of penalties, I plan to examine the validity of the tax opinions underlying the defense. Opinions are a critical element in the abusive tax avoidance transaction phenomenon. Their primary function often is penalty protection – that is, they are sought by taxpayers and promoters to establish reasonable belief that a tax position is correct for purposes of avoiding the substantial understatement penalty under section 6662. Yet we see opinions that ignore critical legal issues and are deficient in their factual and legal analysis. While the nature of the reasonable belief exception means that we should consider the sophistication of the taxpayer – that is, the consumer of the legal opinion – in determining whether the legal opinion can form the basis for a reasonable cause defense, I believe that we must take a closer look at these opinions to determine whether they should provide penalty protection. We owe it to the tax system to ensure that tax practitioners are upholding their obligations to their client and to the system itself by scrutinizing transactions carefully and thoroughly. Where an opinion is deficient, i.e., it omits material facts or analysis or assumes away critical issues, it may not provide penalty protection.

Finally, I am now working with the Large and Midsized Business Division and Small Business/Self Employed Division of the IRS to develop procedures for resolving cases under examination through means other than litigation. This includes developing settlement positions and procedures that take into account the range of taxpayers and transactions that are involved. This project will be critical to resolving abusive tax avoidance transactions fairly and consistently and in a manner that conserves IRS resources. I also am considering ways that the Office of Chief Counsel might better support the efforts of OTSA and the IRS in identifying and analyzing transactions and compliance efforts, including promoter enforcement activities, beyond the reallocation of resources to the task forces and summons enforcement activities.

E. Measurement of Success

Because it is so difficult to measure the size and scope of the abusive tax avoidance transaction phenomenon, it is very difficult to determine when the efforts to curb such abusive transactions will be successful. However, I believe that there are certain ways that the IRS, and the Congress, can measure the success of the efforts. First, the IRS and the Congress should consider the historical data on disclosure and registration of questionable transactions. In some respects, more disclosure of such transactions would be a measure of success. However, the Treasury Department and the IRS do not intend to place an undue burden on taxpayers and intend to adjust the disclosure and registration regimes to eliminate disclosure of transactions where there is no concern about abuse. Another appropriate measure of success will be the speed with which the IRS and the Treasury Department respond to questionable transactions. As I observed above, delay in addressing questionable transactions and the dearth of published guidance have a pernicious effect on the system. I will continue to seek ways to accelerate the issuance of published guidance and notification about questionable transactions. Third, the IRS, the Treasury Department, and Congress should be held accountable for the rules we promulgate and enact. Thus, we should consider ways to remove "attractive nuisances" from the Code and measure our success for simplifying the rules for taxpayers and for tax administration, based on ease of compliance and cost of compliance.

Judges Strike Down Internet Porn Filters

By Robert O'Harrow Jr.
Washington Post Staff Writer
Friday, May 31, 2002; 1:43 PM

Government efforts to restrict access to online pornography received another setback today when a panel of federal judges struck down a law requiring public libraries to

install Internet filters to block access to objectionable sites.

In a unanimous decision, the three judges of a special panel said the Children's Internet Protection Act is "invalid under the First Amendment" because it requires libraries to use technology that blocks access to legitimate sites on the World Wide Web, while still giving access to some porn sites.

The legislation known as CIPA, signed into law by President Clinton two years ago, required that public libraries use the electronic blocks, starting July 1, or lose millions of dollars in federal funding for computers and Internet access.

In a 195-page decision, the judges said "that it is currently impossible, given the Internet's size, rate of growth, rate of change, and architecture, and given the state of the art of automated classification systems, to develop a filter that neither underblocks nor overblocks a substantial amount of speech."

It was the third time in recent years that similar laws have been shot down for being overbroad or in violation of free speech protections.

Today's decision, which applies only to public libraries, was praised by the American Librarian Association and American Civil Liberties Union, the leaders of a host of librarians, patrons and online publishers who challenged the validity of the law last year.

"The court bans the government from turning librarians into thought police," said Ann Beeson, the litigation director for the ACLU's technology and liberty program. "The [filters] are inherently flawed and would prevent library patrons all over the country from accessing valuable sites on the Web."

A Justice Department official declined to comment, saying officials there were reviewing the decision. Any appeal would go to the Supreme Court, which has taken a skeptical view of Congress's methods of curbing the spread of online pornography.

In arguing the case, no one disputed the massive proliferation of smut on the Internet in recent years. The judges estimated there "are more than 100,000 pornographic Web sites that can be accessed for free and without providing any registration information, and tens of thousands of Web sites contain child pornography."

They said the Internet has spurred "the widespread dissemination of hardcore pornography within the easy reach not only of adults who have every right to access it (so long as it is not legally obscene or child pornography), but also of children and adolescents to whom it may be quite harmful."

But after two weeks of testimony in April, the judges agreed with the group of plaintiffs who argued the filters are a clumsy, inaccurate technology that violate free-speech rights by cutting off access to legitimate sites, such as those offering information about sexuality, sexually transmitted disease and breast cancer.

While some libraries permitted patrons to request the filters be turned off, the judges said such policies put the patrons in an awkward position of seeking permission to access sensitive material. The judges called the filters "blunt instruments."

Officials at the American Library Association, the lead plaintiff, said the decision affirms the notion that parents must protect their children by teaching them the right ways to use the Internet. Libraries will still be allowed to use filters for young children if parents choose, as many already do, but that will remain a local decision.

Emily Sheketoff, executive director of the association's District office, estimated that up to $400 million in annual funding) through the federal E-rate program and Library Services Technology Act grants) was at stake.

"The only way to protect children is to make sure they are educated so they can have a safe responsible experience," said Emily Sheketoff, executive director of the association's District office. "This technology is not protecting their children."

How about this?

The procedures for changing reimbursements for photographs changed on October 1, 2000. The procedures now in place are designed to ensure that the government receives appropriate reimbursement for photopgraphs sought for non-official purposes. Records are kept of all such requests, and appropriate reimbursement is then sought. The system is currently up to date and all appropriate entities have been billed. Because the new procedure was not fully implemented by May 2002, however, the White House Military Office had not actually collected reimbursement for certain photographs as of the time of this inquiry (totaling about $15,000). But that has been rectified, bills have been sent, and the process is working and up to date.

Brett,
Please email me the replacement paragraph as soon as possible. We are trying to get all the comments incorporated as soon as possible so that we can deliver the responses to the Hill this afternoon. Thanks for all your help. I will send you and Noel the "final" versions so that you can see your comments were incorporated.

Hi Marty, can you have WAVES check to see if we ever cleared Ken Raisler in to see me. It would have been after the first of August 2001. He is with Sullivan and Cromwell. If yes, can we confirm the time and date of the actual meeting please because I have no recollection of meeting him.
It is possible that the events of 9/11 pushed it off the schedule. You might check whether a request for a meeting was ever made as well. Thanks, as always, Pippa

MEMORANDUM FOR ALL EOP EMPLOYEES

FROM: ALBERTO R. GONZALES
COUNSEL TO THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: ENRON SUBPOENA

On May 22, 2002, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee issued the attached subpoena to the Executive Office of the President requesting documents pertaining to certain Enron-related communications occurring between January 1, 1992, and December 2, 2002. Please read the subpoena carefully.

You are directed to produce to Counsel's Office all official EOP documents in your possession (including any e-mails) responsive to the subpoena no later than May 31, 2002.

Please be advised that you are expected to perform a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all official documents in your possession for materials responsive to the subpoena.

You will have satisfied your responsibilities if you produce all of your official EOP documents relating to, referring to, or incorporating the following:

(a) Communications between Enron and any EOP employee occurring between January 1, 1992, and December 2, 2001

(Note: "Enron" means anyone you knew was working for, or communicating on behalf of, Enron Corporation or one of its businesses.); and

(b) Communications about Enron between any EOP employee and any employee of any Executive Branch department or agency occurring between January 1, 1992, and December 2, 2001

(Note: The Executive Office of the President and the Office of the Vice President are not departments or agencies.)

You are also directed to complete the attached Certification and return it by May 31. Note that you must complete the Certification whether or not you have responsive documents.

All documents and Certifications should be delivered to Hana Brilliant (6-5049) in EEOB 158.

If you have any questions, please call Associate Counsels Brett Kavanaugh (6-7984), Brad Berenson (6-2318), or Chris Bartolomucci (6-7963).

CERTIFICATION

Please check one of the following:

_____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the official EOP documents in my possession (including any e-mails I have) for materials responsive to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committees subpoena dated May 22, 2002, and have produced all such documents to the Office of the Counsel to the President.

_____ I certify that I performed a reasonable, diligent, and good faith search of all the official EOP documents in my possession (including any e-mails I have) for materials responsive to the Senate Governmental Affairs Committees subpoena dated May 22, 2002, and have no such documents.

INSTRUCTIONS

(1) The documents requested include all those that are in the custody, control or possession of the EOP, or within the right of custody, control or possession of the EOP, its officers, agents, employees, or representatives.

(2) Unless otherwise indicated, the documents requested are those dated, prepared or received during the period January 1, 1992 to December 2, 2001 or that refer to, relate to or incorporate communications that took place during that time period.

(3) You are under a continuing obligation to promptly provide additional documents responsive to this subpoena.

(4) Each document produced shall be produced in a form that renders the document susceptible of copying, shall include all attachments and shall not be redacted.

(5) Documents produced in response to this subpoena shall be produced together with copies of file labels, dividers or identifying markers with which they were associated when this subpoena was served or shall otherwise be identified and dated.

(6) It shall not be a basis for refusal to produce documents that any other person or entity also possesses non-identical or identical copies of the same document.

(7) If any of the subpoenaed information is available in machine-readable form, state the form in which it is available and provide sufficient detail to allow the information to be copied to a readable format. If the information requested is stored in a computer, indicate whether you have an existing program that will print the records in a readable form.

(8) If the subpoena cannot be complied with in full, it shall be complied with to the extent possible, with an explanation of why full compliance is not possible.

(9) In the event that a document is withheld on the basis of privilege, provide with the responses to this subpoena the following information concerning any such document: (a) the date of the document, its author, his or her occupation, title and employer, all recipients, the occupation, title and employer of each recipient, (b) the subject matter of the document, (c) the privilege claimed and a brief explanation of the basis of the claim of privilege, (d) the type of document, and (e) the relationship of the author and recipient(s) to each other.

(10) If any document responsive to this subpoena was, but no longer is, in your possession, custody, or control, identify the document (stating its date, author, subject and recipients) and explain the circumstances by which it ceased to be in your possession, custody, or control.

(11) If a date set forth in this subpoena referring to a communication, meeting or other event is inaccurate, but the actual date is known to you or is otherwise apparent from the context of the request, you should produce all documents which would be responsive as if the date were correct.

(12) For each document produced, please indicate the paragraph and, where applicable, subparagraph of Attachment A to which it is responsive.

DEFINITIONS

(1) "Enron" means Enron Corp., Enron Capital Trust I, Enron Capital Trust II, and each of their affiliates, subsidiaries, partnerships, special purpose entities, joint ventures, trusts or any other entity in which Enron Corp., Enron Capital Trust I, or Enron Capital Trust II is or was a shareholder, partner, investor, trustee, or member. The term "Enron" includes, with respect to each entity described in the previous sentence, the entity's officers, directors, employees, and representatives, including any person or entity purporting to act on their behalf or known to you to be acting on their behalf.

(2) "Executive Office of the President" or "EOP" means the Executive Office of the President and all of its units including, but not limited to, the Office of Administration, the White House Office, the Office of the Vice President, the Office of Science and Technology Policy, the Office of Management and Budget, the Office of the Chief of Staff, the United States Trade Representative, the Office of Management and Administration, the Office of White House Counsel, the Office of Communications, the Office of Cabinet Affairs, the Office of the Staff Secretary, the Office of Speechwriting, the Office of Public Liaison, the Office of Correspondence, the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy and Political Affairs, the Office of Information Programs, the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for White House Operations, the Domestic Policy Council, the Office of Federal Procurement Policy, the Office of Intergovernmental Affairs, the Office of Legislative Affairs, the Office of Media Affairs, the National Economic Council, the Office of Policy Development, the Office of Political Affairs, the Office of Strategic Initiatives, the White House Military Office, the Office of Presidential Personnel, the Office of the Press Secretary, the Office of Scheduling, the Office of Advance, the Council of Economic Advisors, the Council on Environmental Quality, the Executive Residence, the President's Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, the National Security Council, the Office of Homeland Security, the Office of National Drug Control Policy, the Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives and the Office of Policy Development. The terms "Executive Office of the President" and "EOP" include, with respect to each entity described in the previous sentence, the entity's officials, employees and representatives and any person detailed to work for the entity. The terms also include the President and Vice President of the United States.

(3) "Document" means any written, recorded, or graphic matter of any nature whatsoever, regardless of how recorded, and whether original or copy, including, but not limited to, the following: memoranda; reports; studies; reviews; analyses; presentations; working papers; records; notes; letters; notices; confirmations; telegrams; faxes, telexes, receipts; appraisals; interoffice and intraoffice communications; electronic mail (e-mail); computer or other electronic files; contracts; cables; notations or logs of any type of conversation, telephone call, meeting or other communication; bulletins; printed matter; computer printouts; teletype; invoices; transcripts; audio and video recordings, diaries; appointment books; returns; summaries; minutes; bills; accounts; estimates; projections; comparisons; messages; or correspondence. A document bearing any notation not a part of the original text is to be considered a separate document. A draft or non-identical copy is a separate document within the meaning of this term.

(4) "Communication" means any contact or attempted contact or any disclosure of information, regardless of the means utilized, whether oral, electronic, by document or otherwise, and whether face-to-face, in meeting, by telephone, mail, telex, facsimile, computer, discussions, releases, delivery, or otherwise.

(5) The terms "and" and "or" shall be construed broadly and either conjunctively or disjunctively to bring within the scope of this subpoena any information which might otherwise be construed to be outside its scope. The term "any" includes the term "all" and vice versa, and both terms shall be construed broadly to bring within the scope of this subpoena any information which might otherwise be construed to be outside its scope. The singular includes the plural number and vice versa.

Economic Outlook
Hubbard Sees 3 Percent Growth for 2002,
But Warns of Need for TPA, Insurance Relief
Glenn Hubbard, chairman of the president's Council of Economic Advisers, May 31 said the U.S. economy is unlikely to sustain the first quarter's 5.6 percent growth rate but growth around 3 percent sounds reasonable.

"I don't believe the balance of the year will look like the first quarter" but private forecasts "for 3ish percent growth for the rest of the year ... make a great deal of sense to me," the CEA chairman told the National Tax Association.

Hubbard said that, with the exception of the telecommunications sector, the capital overhang of the past two years "has largely been worked through" and so "by the middle-to-end of this year, an investment turnaround is in the cards."

Business Uncertainties Cited

But Hubbard said there are uncertainties in the economic outlook, worrisome to business people, that are policy-related. One "troubling source of uncertainty," he said, is related to the need to pass trade promotion authority, formerly known as fast-track, which is a priority for the Bush administration.
TPA has passed both the House and Senate but includes a controversial Senate amendment that could make the legislation subject to a veto if it survives in conference.

Hubbard also said the fact that terrorism insurance legislation has been delayed by debate on tort reform is another source of uncertainty for the business community. And, he said, business people are troubled by the "uncertainty of what might prevail in the corporate governance process." He cautioned against moves by some lawmakers to actually legislate accounting standards.

Hubbard again criticized those in Congress who hold to the view that budget surpluses are needed for economic growth.

"My skepeticism about running surpluses is they're dissipated quite quickly. One needs only to look back at the last 10 years of fiscal policy to understand that," he told reporters after his speech.

"You need some way that locks up surpluses. The only way I know of is something like Social Security personal accounts where you're actually dedicating money to citizens," Hubbard added.

Moody's Real-Estate Review Puts Terrorism Insurance in Spotlight

By PETER GRANT
Staff Reporter of THE WALL STREET JOURNAL

Moody's Investor Service Inc.'s review of $5 billion in real-estate securities will increase the pressure on Congress to deal with terrorism insurance when it returns from recess this week.

Citing concerns over terrorism coverage, Moody's on Friday said it was reviewing for possible downgrade 14 issues of commercial mortgage securities backed by such high-profile properties as Rockefeller Center, Citigroup Center and the Marriott Marquis hotel in Times Square. Eleven of the debt offerings were single-property and three were pools of mortgages that include at least one high-profile property. All the properties in question are in New York City's Manhattan borough except two: Columbia Center in Seattle and Sun America Center in Los Angeles.

Since Sept. 11, terrorism insurance has been much more expensive and difficult to obtain for owners of so-called trophy properties. Moody's is worried that some properties haven't been able to obtain adequate coverage, resulting in additional risk for bondholders.

"We rated them solely based on their ability to withstand economic events," said Tad Philipp, a Moody's managing director. "The question was not whether you were going to have your collateral."

A Moody's downgrade would likely erode the value of the securities by tens of millions of dollars. Many of them have been trading at discounts to comparably rated debt for weeks in anticipation of Moody's action. Officials at other rating agencies couldn't be reached for comment.

The real-estate industry and other businesses have been lobbying Congress for months to create a federal program for backing up the insurance industry in case of a catastrophic loss from terrorism. While the House passed a program late last year, legislation in the Senate has become bogged down in the debate over tort reform. Republicans want to limit the ability of terrorism victims to sue for punitive damages, but Democrats are opposed to such restrictions.

"Moody's is going to be looking very carefully at what Congress may or may not do," said Steven Wechsler, spokesman for the Coalition to Insure Against Terrorism, which represents a wide range of business groups, from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce to the National Football League. "This basically puts the spotlight on the Senate."

The Bush administration also pointed to the possible downgrades as evidence that a federal backstop program is needed. "One of the reasons residential construction is not recovering that fast is terrorism insurance," said White House spokeswoman Claire Buchan.

The latest compromise effort on Capitol Hill so far has shown little promise. Just before the recess, Republican Sens. Mitch McConnell of Kentucky and Phil Gramm of Texas proposed new language on punitive damages. But on Friday, Ranit Schmeltzer, a spokeswoman for Senate Majority Leader Tom Daschle, called the proposal "not acceptable."

Developer Douglas Durst, who owns one of the properties Moody's is reviewing, the Conde Nast Building in Times Square, said it would cost $3 million a year -- more than one-third the building's entire operating budget -- to buy another $200 million in coverage. He is fighting a court battle with his bondholders over how much insurance the building should have. "This is a problem that only the federal government can solve," Mr. Durst said.

A spokesman for Rockefeller Center said the complex has adequate insurance but declined to comment further. Spokesmen for the owners of Citigroup Center, the Marriott Marquis, Columbia Center and Sun America Center either declined comment or couldn't be reached.

Dear Senator ____:

I write to address the pending legislation proposing that certain categories of victims of international terrorism be added to the September 11th Victim Compensation Fund.

The Administration is committed to working with the Congress to ensure that victims of international terrorism receive appropriate assistance. Recognizing the many substantial concerns voiced by Americans to the structure of the September 11th program and the difficulties faced in implementing that program, the Administration believes that there is a more equitable and appropriate course for compensating other victims of international terrorism. The Administration believes that compensation for victims of international terrorism should, in large part, be modeled after the federal benefit provided to the families of public safety officers killed in the line of duty. See 42 U.S.C. 3796. Congress recently endorsed this general approach when it increased the benefit for police officers and fire fighters killed in the line of duty in the USA PATRIOT Act. The Administration's principles for compensating victims of international terrorism are as follows.

First, a victim compensation program should provide victims with lower incomes the same awards that it provides to victims with higher incomes. While wealthy plaintiffs in tort suits may receive greater awards than do victims with lower incomes, the federal government generally does provide greater benefits for the wealthy in victim compensation programs.

Second, ~~victims should receive compensation as quickly as possible.~~the claims process should be quick and streamlined, in order to help victims' families in their time of need. We should not create a lengthy administrative process that will prevent victims from quickly receiving assistance and that will force victims to relive their tragedies. The need for a prompt process for compensating victims further weighs against providing different amounts to different victims based upon their individual financial circumstances.

Third, the amount of compensation should be on par with that provided for public safety officers killed in the line of duty. See 42 U.S.C. 3796 (providing approximately $250,000, indexed for inflation, to the families of public safety officers). Like the Public Safety Officer Benefit, a program to compensate victims of international terrorism should recognize that there are other sources of compensation for victims. For example, awards under the program should not be offset by victims' insurance benefits and other collateral source compensation. Likewise, the Administration is not opposed to allowing victims to sue culpable parties, to the extent permitted under law. (However, if an individual actually receives compensation from the defendants in a lawsuit, the government should have a right of reimbursement.)

Finally, the victims of international terrorism program should preserve the President's ability to conduct foreign policy. Therefore, the Administration opposes the use of blocked assets to fund such compensation or to satisfy judgments. Using blocked assets would preclude their use to pressure regimes to improve their policies on terrorism, risk taxpayer liability for third party claims against the assets, eliminate their availability to satisfy current U.S. government claims (currently more than $2 billion), and put at risk diplomatic property. Funding for any proposal to compensate victims of international terror should instead come from the International Affairs 150 Account.

We recognize the congressional interest in this matter, as reflected in Section 626 of Public Law 107-77, and we look forward to working with the Congress on a proposal that would meet those principles.

Very truly yours,

White House provides Enron-related documents for review by Senate panel

MARCY GORDON
AP Business Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) _ Responding to subpoenas, the White House gave a Senate panel access Monday to more than 2,100 pages of documents related to contacts with Enron officials.

The White House's top lawyer and the office of Vice President Dick Cheney said it was a partial response to the twin subpoenas issued May 22 by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee. The offices of President Bush and Cheney said they were still receiving documents from employees.

No instance has been found so far of Enron officials asking anyone in the White House for help before the company's bankruptcy last December, presidential counsel Alberto Gonzales said. The documents reviewed so far also show that White House officials' actions were ``responsible and consistent with the appropriate performance of their official duties,'' he said in a letter to Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., the committee's chairman.

Houston-based Enron has been one of Bush's biggest campaign contributors.

Gonzales said the documents would not be turned over to the committee until an agreement is reached with the panel on ``procedures to safeguard the security and confidentiality of these documents.''

Rather, the documents _ 1,745 pages from Bush's office and 432 documents from Cheney's _ are being made available at the White House for inspection and review by the committee staff.

White House officials said the documents include sensitive information such as Social Security numbers, e-mail addresses of government officials, communications among government employees regarding policy and foreign relations, and confidential business information.

At the request of the panel's senior Republican, Sen. Fred Thompson of Tennessee, the committee extended by 24 hours the noon Monday deadline for turning over the documents.

``The committee is trying to work with the White House to provide all appropriate assurances that the documents it subpoenaed will be maintained in a secure manner, while still allowing the committee to conduct its important oversight work,'' Lieberman said in a statement. ``I hope the White House will be in compliance by Tuesday noon.''

So far, no documents are being withheld on grounds of executive privilege, Gonzales told Lieberman.

The panel has been seeking the information from the White House since late March as part of its Enron investigation.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, sued Cheney in February to force release of the names of figures from Enron and other oil companies who met last year with the vice president's energy task force.

Hours after the Democratic-controlled Senate committee voted on party lines to issue the subpoenas, the White House provided summaries of dozens of contacts between Enron executives and Bush administration officials, including Cheney.

The Bush administration disclosed in January that then-Enron chairman Kenneth Lay made a series of telephone calls to members of the Bush Cabinet, including Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill and Commerce Secretary Don Evans, as the company sank toward collapse last fall.

The material being sought by the Senate committee goes back to January 1992, also covering the Clinton administration.

In a May 24 memo, Gonzales told White House staff to turn over all official documents, including e-mails, related to:

_Communications between anyone working for or representing Enron and any executive office employee from Jan. 1, 1992, through Dec. 2, 2001.

_Communications regarding Enron between any executive office employee and any employee of any federal department or agency during the same period.

White House seeks limit on release of Enron papers
By Adam Entous
WASHINGTON, June 3 (Reuters) - The White House told Senate investigators on Monday they could look at 1,745 pages of documents detailing its contacts with now-bankrupt Enron Corp. ENRNQ.PK but refused to hand the material over until agreement was reached on restricting their public release.
The documents were subpoenaed by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which is chaired by Sen. Joseph Lieberman, a Connecticut Democrat and a potential 2004 election challenger to Republican President George W. Bush. Enron, which filed for bankruptcy on Dec. 2 amid revelations of losses from off-the-books partnerships, was one of Bush's biggest campaign contributors.
The subpoenas, which were sent to the offices of Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney, ordered disclosure of the information by June 3. But Lieberman has given the White House an extra day -- until Tuesday noon -- to comply.
In a letter to Lieberman on Monday, White House counsel Alberto Gonzales said 1,745 pages of documents were "available for immediate inspection" by the committee's staff in the Eisenhower Executive Office Building, which is part of the White House complex.
But Gonzales refused to hand copies of the documents to Lieberman's staff until an agreement was reached on "procedures to safeguard the security and confidentiality of these documents, which are unredacted and include many sensitive categories of information."
He said sensitive information included social security numbers, e-mail addresses, confidential business information and possibly classified national security material.
White House officials said Gonzales was seeking an agreement under which the ranking Republican on the Government Affairs Committee, Sen. Fred Thompson of Tennessee, would have an effective veto over whether any documents are disclosed publicly. Gonzales also wants Lieberman to give the White House 24-hours notice before any of the material is released.
"While our review is not yet complete, the records we have examined thus far continue to reflect that Enron communicated policy views to the EOP (Executive Office of the President) but that none of those communications was inappropriate or improper," Gonzales said in the two-page letter. "We still have identified no instance in which Enron approached any person in the EOP or the Office of the Vice President seeking help in connection with its financial difficulties prior to bankruptcy," he added.

STAFFERS GET FIRST LOOK

The White House said Democratic and Republican staffers from the Government Affairs Committee would get their first look at the documents later on Monday.

Lieberman, who extended the deadline for compliance with the subpoenas until Tuesday at the request of Thompson, said his committee was "trying to work with the White House to provide all appropriate assurances that the documents it subpoenaed will be maintained in a secure manner, while still allowing the committee to conduct its important oversight work."

In his letter, Gonzales complained that Lieberman had given the White House an "exceptionally" short period of time -- "only 12 days ... of which three were consumed by the Memorial Day weekend" -- to comply with the subpoenas.

Gonzales said the 1,745 pages of documents available on Monday was "only an initial production."

"We are working very hard to prepare additional documents for production, and we expect to make one or more additional productions to the committee in the near future," he said.

Last month, the White House disclosed numerous contacts between White House officials and former Enron Chairman Kenneth Lay, who was a major Bush campaign contributor and served on a transition committee that searched for people to fill energy-related positions in the administration.

The materials revealed that Lay recommended a total of 21 people for positions in the administration, three of whom ultimately won appointments.

Brett, could you do a meeting w/Chairman Sensenbrenner's folks tomorrow at 2pm to discuss possible themes for them to pursue on the judicial vacancy crisis? They are interested in doing a hearing on the vacancy crisis, but we need to provide them with some of our thoughts on the best themes (6th Circuit focus, May 9th focus, etc.).

Perhaps you, me and Anne ought to chat about this before the meeting in a quick call today or tomorrow as well.

Juan Williams: I just thought I'd start by asking, how do you like the job? You've been here since the start w/ the President and now you're coming up on 18 months. How do you like it?

Gonzales: It's a wonderful job. I often tell people, working for this President is probably the best job in the country. I have probably the most important client in the world, and a great staff, lawyers who are smart, tough loyal. And the issues that we work with are incredibly complex, often have enormous domestic and international consequences. And it more than satisfies my hopes and dreams I had as a young man to get a job where I could make a difference.

W: In fact, I read in your biographical notes, the President, when he appointed you to the Texas Supreme Court, said that your life is a dream come true.

G: I've been fortunate. A lot of the opportunities I owe to George W. Bush. In the past 7 years I've had 5 jobs, and he's been responsible for 4 of them. I've been fortunate.

W: And the idea that GWB is your friend, and someone that relies heavily on you, and someone that you've benefited from, does that create tension for you as his lawyer, as the lawyer here at the WH?

G: No, I don't think so. I've been asked that question before. How I can objectively provide advice, how can I say no to someone that many people believe we have a close relationship.

W: Do you believe that?

G: Well, it's kind of presumptuous for me, for anyone to say "Yeah, I'm a good friend of the President's". I mean, I think the President and I have a good relationship. We've had one for quite some time. I think he has confidence in me. I think that it's evidenced by the positions that he's appointed me to. But he's a wonderful client, he listens to his lawyer. And he's wonderful because he has a good moral compass. I think he's got good sense about what is proper, what is improper. What is ethical what is not ethical. We don't have a problem in this WH in terms of having a President who listens to his advisers, and when we say no, he should not do that, he listens to that. I think the fact that we have a close relationship actually helps us in that respect.

W: What do you lose sleep over in this position?

G: What do I lose sleep over? Well, there are a lot of issues that this office is responsible for, and rightly or wrongly people look at everything that occurs in the WH and magnify every mistake, and mistakes happen, we aren't perfect. We try to minimize those of course. And they magnify every disagreement, sometimes when there are no disagreements. There are stories that appear about disagreements in the WH, you try to minimize those. Ethics, we're responsible to see people comply with ethics, laws. Those are very complicated, and archaic in some cases. And those are the weapons of choice.

In the previous administration, if you want to go after the WH that is a good weapon to use, the ethics laws. I worry about that, b/c many people especially in this administration are from TX and to work in federal government these are all new to them. Obviously a big part of what we do is protecting the powers of the Presidency. We are in, I wouldn't call it a battle but I think we've had some disagreements, there is a little bit of tension between this WH and the Congress about the appropriate boundaries of the WH and the Congress. But it's not unique to this WH. It has occurred in every administration, I think in the early years there is always branches of govt. pulling, pushing, find out where the boundaries are going be for that WH.

J: The role that you also play as a dividing line between various agencies of government, so I was thinking about the ongoing fight now between the FBI, CIA there seems to be a lot of finger pointing back and forth. What does the President and what are you doing to try to quiet this back and forth in terms of…

G: I don't know if I agree with your characterization of finger pointing, obviously there is an effort now by various committees, particularly the intelligence committees to look to see to find out what happened on 9/11, and also there is some attempt to look what was the response or reaction by the various agencies to 9/11. We expect the committees to be forthcoming, but we're also sensitive to the fact that there are certain prerogatives that have to be protected. For example, to disclose information that is extremely sensitive for natl. security reasons that might expose or reveal a source that we need to keep conf. In order to continue to extract intelligence. From overseas. Obviously we are concerned w/ whether or not the kind of information is released or how it is released. So we try to coordinate and talk to the various agencies to get a sense of what guidelines they're using in assessing how to release information. And make sure they remain sensitive to the fact that certain kinds of information, for example if it is an internal memo to POTUS obviously we want to be kept apprise of whether or not they are going to release a memo to POTUS b/c we consider that highly sensitive and we want to be included in that decision.

W: The President doesn't have any reaction to all of these disclosures to what he should of known…

G: What the President is concerned about, like folks on the Hill, if we have problems in the way we currently operate between the various agencies that those problems have to be identified and we have to address those problems. So obviously he's very concerned about that.

W: So he is in touch with that issue, is he in touch w/ the idea of reforming the FBI?

G: I think, you know, he of course appointed, nominated Bob Mueller, and he has a great deal of confidence in Bob's abilities. That is a very tough job, assignment that he's been given. There's a culture in the FBI he's had to deal with, so he's had to make changes in a very difficult time. He has confidence that Bob M. knows that changes have to be made and that Bob is going to see that those necessary changes are implemented.

W: I want to talk about judgeships for a little bit. I know that there are a number of judgeships that you guys have tried to get through the Hill without much success. Where does that stand now?

G: Juan we still have a number of the President's nominees pending, before the Senate. We still have a number of vacancies existing around the country. Vacant federal judgeships, 10% of the district court. Benches are vacant, 20% of the circuit court benches are vacant. I think if you listen carefully to both sides, both sides can trot out sort of numbing statistics as to whether or not the Senate has done its job on confirming judges. I don't really want to focus on that. I think it is w/o question however that in a sense a branch of govt. is not operating the way should be because it doesn't have the personnel…

W: The judiciary.

G: The judiciary. That it needs to do its job. And so the President he made it very clear to me in the transition that federal judgeships would be important to him. B/c we had a number of vacancies at the very beginning of the presidency. So he has pushed me and my team to recommend to him and so he's nominated a record number of judges in the first 18 months, and he feels he's done his job and expects the Senate to do its job.

W: Do you think this is all about politics, about sort of a political base of both the Republicans and Democrats not give, not compromise on judgeships.

G: Well this is important stuff. I'm not sure this is an area where there should be a great deal of compromise on principle quite frankly because these are lifetime appointments. And decisions of judges can have significant impact on the lives of people. So this President, he believes that judges should be very respectful of policy decisions made by the Congress, that judges should believe in judicial restraint and not try to legislate from the bench, that judges understand they have a very limited role in our system of govt., a very important role but a limited role. And I think most of the Amer. people expect that of the judges, and that's why I'm surprised, why it is perplexing to me to hear some say that this President is nominating people who are out of the mainstream.

W: Earlier you said that we had one agency of govt. the judiciary that is really paralyzed by insufficient numbers, so many vacancies. So how does your concern over the judiciary's ability to function fit w/ the idea that you won't compromise with the Democrats in terms of appointing more judges, getting more judges into the system.

G: Regrettably, it may mean that we have to be patient and wait to see what happens in the Nov. elections. That may be viewed as a crass political assessment, but that is in fact true. I think virtually all of the people the President has nominated would be approved by a full Senate vote. What we need to do is, one way to get this thing moving, is to take back the Senate so we can at least get our judges onto the full Senate floor. All of the pending nominees have been rated "Well qualified" or qualified by the American Bar

Assoc., which as you know has been rated the gold standard by Sens. Leahy and Schumer, and if that's the case then why aren't they getting hearings.

W: Now on the Democrats side, I have some numbers here, the Democrats say they confirmed more judges in the first 10 months when they took control of the Senate then when the GOP did when the Republicans. Took control back in 94. So they're trying to say it is not their fault they're willing to compromise…

G: In terms of compromise I described for you earlier the kind of judges the President is looking for. I would ask, what is it the Democrats ask us to compromise. What do they want when they ask us to send up more moderate judges. Are they suggesting it is OK to put someone on the bench who sometimes do impose a personal agenda. I don't know what they're asking for when they say the President has to nominate more moderate judges. I don't know what that would look like.

W: Do you think from their perspective they're thinking there is a litmus test over here in terms of abortion, in terms of gun control or any issues?

G: I think they may believe that. I've said this repeatedly. We do not ask litmus type questions. We never ask about affirmative action, abortion, gun control, we don't ask those types of questions because quite frankly they're immaterial in my judgment. The decision on a particular issue is not important. What is important is the process a person uses in reaching a decision. So we delve into how they believe it is important for a judge to reach a decision.

W: Could it be that the Democrats. Fear that what we're really talking about is President Bush having the ability to appoint several people the US Sup Court. And they worry that if they allow more conservative judges on the lower courts that that will act as a precedent when the President supreme court nominees are announced.

G: Well, that very well could be. We're focusing on district court judges and circuit court judges, and the whole exercise of who to put on the US Sup Court is a whole different exercise. I think it is a very easy excuse to use, I'm not sure it's one I agree with. To say we need to scrutinize who the President nominates to district court judge in TX to say it's going to reflect on who the President nominates to the Supreme Court. I don't quite get that connection quite frankly

W: Earlier in the conversation we were talking about some of the things that might keep you up at night, and we talked about ethics. And you talked about a big fight going on over whether or not you would allow records or subpoenas to be granted on energy policy. I guess the ENRON subpoena that came from Lieberman's office. Do you feel as if there is a high level of secrecy which is what some outside the WH, critics might say this WH is bunkered down not letting information flow through.

G: I don't think so. I alluded to earlier that there has always been an effort, sometimes more sometimes less, in all WHs to protect the powers of the President. The point is is that there's always been give and take in administrations. About what kind of information to release and what kind of information should remain privileged for one reason or another. This President feels very strongly about leaving the office in a stronger position than he found it. And there is a legitimate reason sometimes to withhold information. From Congress. We surely understand congress has an oversight role, they have a responsibility and accountability to the way monies are spent, that are appropriated to various agencies and to this WH. But on the other hand there is a difference in oversight of the agencies and oversight of the WH. Oversight over the WH for no reason at all, just b/c they want to know what's going on here. Would be like this WH asking Sen. Lieberman to tell us who from Enron did he meet with. What telephone calls, emails exist between Enron and Enron lobbyists and his office. And we had no basis to believe that anything improper or illegal happened. So if there was evidence or allegations that the WH did anything improper or illegal than I think the arguments by the Congress to investigate that and to look into that would be much stronger, and we would be much more deferential in making information available, I think the interest of the Amer. People in knowing about that would be much stronger. But here there's been no allegation of any kind of wrong doing. The allegation has been the Enron had a lot of access to this WH, a lot of contacts w/ this WH. Well so did a lot of other companies, and non-profits, and citizens, much like they had access to members of Congress, much like they had access to previous administrations. I believe at the end of the day when these records come out people will see there were contacts between Enron and this WH, but nothing that was unusual and certainly nothing that was improper. At least, nothing based on what I know now of the records that we've looked at.

W: So when will the WH release the entirety of the record.

G: Well we are working now with Sen. Lieberman in making the documentation available to the community.

W: Have you set a date for the release?

G: Again we are working with his office to try to reach an accommodation as quickly as possible.

W: By the way, do you know are there any imminent Sup Court openings coming up?

G: Juan if I did I wouldn't tell you.

W: Gee whiz, that's not fair Judge Gonzales.

G: We're not aware of any imminent vacancy on the Supreme Court no.

W: What happens when such an announcement comes, what will you guys do what happens here?

G: Part of our responsibility is working w/ the Dept. of Justice in identifying good people to recommend to the President for nomination to the court.

W: You have any in mind now?

G: There are a lot of good people around the country that would make outstanding judges on the court.

W: But it would have to be someone that is a sitting judge?

G: No, not necessarily, not necessarily a sitting judge.

W: That would make history if you picked someone who wasn't.

G: Not necessarily there have been other people who have been nominated to the Supreme Court who were not sitting judges.

W: Not recently though.

G: Not recently, but there have been in the past.

W: And you're willing to open up that box of worms?

G: You know, we look for the best people, and that may or may not be sitting judges. Obviously someone who is a current sitting judge provides a trail, a record that makes it easier for us to look at. But it is possible there is someone out there who would make a good candidate who is not a current sitting judge. But I would view that as the exception and not the rule.

W: In fact that would open the box for critics then b/c there would be a paper trail so some Republicans. On the Hill have suggested maybe you want to make nominations of people who don't have such a long paper trail that can be picked apart by their opponents.

G: Obviously whether or not someone is confirmable is an important consideration. We also, what's a more important consideration, is to make sure the President nominates someone who will do a good job on the court, and the secondary consideration is whether or not it makes it more difficult or less difficult to have that person confirmed.

W: And I know this is going to make you uptight but I feel compelled to ask. What about you? You have a terrific life story, a lot of people admire you greatly, I think you would be a winning candidate for the Supreme Court.

G: There has been speculation about that. As I said in the beginning of this broadcast I think I have the best legal job in America working for the President as his lawyer. And I'm focused on that, we have so much else to worry about, and that's my sole focus right now.

W: Thank you so much, I really appreciate it Judge Gonzalez.

G: Thank you.

Brett: Per our conversatoin, attached is our revised protocol. As mentioned, we have used much of the new language you proposed below and believe that we have accommodated all of your security and privacy concerns. We even have added some protections you didn't ask for. You should feel free to make additional suggestions on those fronts and we will be happy to consider them.
However,
absent any further agreement to change it, we will consider this protocol

Thank you for your phone call indicating the results of this morning's meeting between the Chairman and Ranking Member. As you have suggested, we are now transmitting a proposed protocol although we continue to believe that the Committee's 1997 protocol was sensible and fair and should be employed again
here.

You will note that Section 6 in the attached proposal requires joint concurrence of the Chairman and Ranking Member before public release of documents. If you were agreeable to the remainder of the attached proposal, we would accept changing the "and" to "or" and deleting "acting jointly" so long as the notice and consultation provisions were retained.

We provided you yesterday access to the initial production of documents.
We are prepared to promptly transmit a copy of those documents to the Committee as soon as agreement is reached on a protocol. Please do not hesitate to call me at 456-7984 or 365-4120 with any questions. Thank you.

PROTOCOL
For Document Production By The Executive Office Of The President And
Office Of The Vice President
In Response To The May 22, 2002 Subpoenas
From The Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

June 4, 2002

1. DEFINITIONS

(a) "Document" or "Documents" refers to any and all documents produced by the Executive Office of the President or the Office of the Vice President in response to the subpoenas dated May 22, 2002 from the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

(b) "Committee" refers to the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

(c) "Producing Party" refers to the Executive Office of the President or the Office of the Vice President.

(d) "Investigation" refers to the investigation by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs regarding Enron Corp.

(e) "Designated staff" are staff designated by the Governmental Affairs Committee Chairman or Ranking Member as having access to the Documents. Designated staff may include only Committee staff or staff for Committee Members and will be limited to staff the Chairman or Ranking Member determines are necessary to serve the purposes of the Investigation and staff Committee Members.

2. CLASSIFIED DOCUMENTS

Documents that are classified will be handled in accordance with existing Senate procedures.

3. ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

(a) The Committee will maintain the Documents, and all copies thereof, in secure rooms (in which alarms will be installed as quickly as possible) in the Majority and Minority Committee offices at all times (except for depositions, witness interviews, other investigative purposes in furtherance of the Committee's work, or for review by Members). The specially designated secure document rooms will be subject to the following security protocols:

(i) Only Members and designated staff will have access to the Documents, and, with respect to staff, only after such staff have signed the certification pursuant to subsection 3(b) below.

(ii) The document rooms will be secured immediately and have alarms installed as quickly as possible. Only the Chief Clerk and up to 7 designated Majority staff and 7 designated Minority staff will have keys to the respective rooms.

(iii) Designated staff may copy Documents but must maintain those copies within the specially-designated secure rooms, except as provided in subsection 3(a)(v) below, and except that a copy machine that is contiguous to but outside of the specially-designated secure rooms may be used so long as the designated staff making the copies remains with the Documents being copied at all times, and all Documents and copies are returned promptly to the specially-designated document rooms.

(iv) The specially-designated secure rooms may contain computers, printers, and copiers, but will not contain fax machines.

(v) Only designated staff may transport Documents to depositions and witness interviews, or to the offices of Members for their personal review. When designated staff member removes Documents, the staff member will sign a log book and specify the date and time the Documents are being removed. After the removal of such Documents from the specially-designated document rooms, the Documents must be returned promptly to those areas.

(vi) No copies of the Documents will be made while they are removed from the specially-designated secure rooms (except as provided in subsection 3(a)(iii) above), no faxes of the Documents will be sent except as otherwise permitted by this Protocol, and no copies of Documents will be attached to deposition transcripts.

(vii) Only designated staff may remove staff work product, including computer disks, from the specially designated secure rooms. The confidentiality of any such work product must be maintained.

(b) Before being given access to the Documents, designated staff must sign a certification as set forth in the attachment hereto. Any staff member who violates the certification or any other procedures and protocols set forth herein shall be immediately subject to sanctions, including removal from employment. Such certification will be maintained by the Chief Clerk.

4. DOCUMENTS WITHHELD

In the event the Producing Party withholds responsive Documents from production, the Producing Party shall maintain a bates stamped copy set of all such Documents and shall comply with Instruction number 9 attached to the subpoenas. The Committee maintains that only Documents on which privilege is appropriately asserted may be withheld and does not hereby concede the validity of any such privilege claim.

5. PUBLIC DISCLOSURES OF DOCUMENTS

REV_00146468

(a) Documents received by the Committee will be made public only in the following circumstances:

(i) as a part of a Committee hearing;
(ii) as a part of a Committee report; or
(iii) based on a determination by the Chairman or Ranking Member that disclosure is appropriate to further the purposes of the Investigation, provided that whichever of the Chairman or Ranking Member makes such determination shall, prior to disclosing Documents, give notice of that determination to the other and to the Counsel to the President in writing twenty-four hours in advance (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays) and the other and the Counsel to the President is afforded reasonable opportunity to consult with the Chairman or the Ranking Member (whichever has made the determination) prior to any release.

(b) The Producing Party may identify for the Committee any Document or portion thereof that, in the view of the Producing Party, would inappropriately compromise any individual's personal privacy if released to the public ("personal privacy information"). The Chairman or Ranking Member shall not release any Document containing personal privacy information unless he has evaluated the assertion of personal privacy and either redacted the personal privacy information or provided notice and an opportunity to consult of the type referenced in Subsection 5(a)(iii).

(c) If any Document produced pursuant to this Protocol is at any time, in whole or in part, released by the Producing Party, or if the Committee obtains the Document through alternative means, the terms of this Protocol shall no longer apply to such Document and such Document may be treated by the Committee as a public document.

6. PROCEDURES DURING HEARINGS

Starting 10 days prior to the beginning of public hearings and thereafter so long as the hearings continue, the following procedures will be in effect:

a. Committee staff work-product may be removed by anyone who has signed the certification referenced in 3(b) above;

b. Committee staff and staff for Committee Members may be provided Documents relevant to a hearing no earlier than forty-eight (48) hours prior to the scheduled hearing. The Chairman and Ranking Member may agree to make exceptions to this procedure; and

c. All Documents may be copied and transported by designated staff to the hearing room on the days that the Committee holds public hearings.

SECURITY PROCEDURES AND OTHER PROTOCOLS
For Document Production by the Executive Office of the President
June __, 2002

1. DEFINITIONS

(a) "Document" or "Documents" refers to any and all documents produced by the Executive Office of the President to the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs during the Committee's investigation regarding Enron Corp.

(b) "Committee" refers to the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

(c) "Producing Party" refers to the Executive Office of the President.

(d) "Investigation" refers to the investigation by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs regarding Enron Corp.

2. CLASSIFIED DOCUMENTS

Documents produced to the Committee that are classified will be handled in accordance with existing Senate procedures.

3. SECURITY OF AND ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

All Documents shall be treated as highly confidential. The Committee will maintain the Documents and all copies of Documents in secure and alarmed document rooms in the Majority and Minority Committee Offices at all times except during depositions, witness interviews, or review by the members of the Committee. The specially-designated secure documents rooms shall be subject to the following security protocols:

a. Only the Majority Committee staff designated by the Chairman and Minority Committee staff designated by the Ranking Member will have access to the specially-designated secure document rooms and to Documents only after such staff members have signed confidentiality agreements (as provided for in Paragraph 4).

b. The specially-designated secure document rooms for Documents may contain computers and printers, but will not contain copiers or FAX machines.

c. Only the staff designated in Paragraph 3.a can transport Documents to depositions and witness interviews, or to the offices of the members of the Committee for their personal review. When a designated staff member removes Documents, the staff member will sign a log book and specify the date and time and Documents that are being removed. After the removal of any such Documents from the specially-designated document rooms, the Documents must be returned promptly to those areas. No copies of the Documents will be made or FAXes of the Documents sent while they are out of the specially-designated secure document rooms, and no copies of Documents will be attached to deposition transcripts.

d. Only the staff designated in Paragraph 3.a may remove committee staff work product, including computer disks, from the specially-designated secure document rooms. The confidentiality of any such work product must be maintained.

4. CONFIDENTIALITY AGREEMENTS

All documents produced to or made available for review by the Committee or its staff shall be considered to be within the confidential business of the Committee for purposes of Paragraph 5 of rule XXIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate. In addition, any staff member who has access to the Documents shall sign a confidentiality agreement, as set forth in the attachment hereto, agreeing to the procedures and protocols set forth hereto. Any staff member who violates the confidentiality agreement or any other procedures and protocols set forth herein, shall be in immediately subject to sanctions, including removal from employment.

5. DOCUMENTS WITHHELD BY A PRODUCING PARTY

In the event that the producing party withholds responsive documents from production, the producing party shall maintain a copy set of all such documents unless other procedures are agreed to with the Committee.

6. PUBLIC DISCLOSURE OF DOCUMENTS

All Documents received by the Committee may be made public only if the Documents are pertinent to the Committee's investigation and disclosures, in whole or to part, or by way of summary, are made as part of a Committee hearing or Committee report. Alternatively, disclosure of Documents, in whole or in part, or by way of summary, to the public may be made by the Chairman and Ranking Member, acting jointly, provided that the Counsel to the President is notified in writing forty-eight (48) hours in advance (excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and legal holidays) and the Counsel to the President is afforded reasonable opportunity to consult with the Chairman and the Ranking Member prior to any release. No member or staff of the Committee shall otherwise disclose, in whole or in part, or by way of summary, the Documents except in accordance with this paragraph 6. If any Document produced pursuant to this agreement also is released to the public by a producing party, the terms of this agreement shall not apply to the released Document and shall be treated by the Committee as a public Document.

REV_00146472

7. PROCEDURES DURING HEARINGS

Committee staff can be provided copies of deposition testimony transcripts and documents relevant to testimony no earlier than forty-eight (48) hours prior to the scheduled hearing appearance of a witness. The Chairman and Ranking Member may agree to make exceptions to this procedure. All documents may be copied and transported by designated staff to the hearing room on the days that the Committee holds public hearings.

REV_00146473

UNITED STATES SENATE

Here is the final protocol. Only a couple of exceedingly minor changes from the last one -- adding "a" in a couple places it was missing and making clear that consultation requirement applies to whichever Counsel is appropriate (OVP v.
EOP).

PROTOCOL
For Document Production By The Executive Office Of The President And
Office Of The Vice President
In Response To The May 22, 2002 Subpoenas
From The Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs

June 4, 2002

1. DEFINITIONS

(a) "Document" or "Documents" refers to any and all documents produced by the Executive Office of the President or the Office of the Vice President (and all copies thereof) in response to the subpoenas dated May 22, 2002 from the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

(b) "Committee" refers to the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs.

(c) "Producing Party" refers to the Executive Office of the President or the Office of the Vice President.

(d) "Investigation" refers to the investigation by the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs regarding Enron Corp.

(e) "Designated staff" are staff designated by the Governmental Affairs Committee Chairman or Ranking Member as having access to the Documents. Designated staff may include only Committee staff or staff for Committee Members and will be limited to staff the Chairman or Ranking Member determines are necessary to serve the purposes of the Investigation and to staff Committee Members.

2. CLASSIFIED DOCUMENTS

Documents that are classified will be handled in accordance with existing Senate procedures.

3. ACCESS TO DOCUMENTS

(a) The Committee will maintain the Documents, and all copies thereof, in secure rooms (in which alarms will be installed as quickly as possible) in the Majority and Minority Committee offices at all times (except for depositions, witness interviews, other investigative purposes in furtherance of the Committee's work, or for review by Members). Any removal of the Documents for "other investigative purposes in furtherance of the Committee's work" shall be approved in advance by either the Chairman or the Ranking Member. The specially designated secure document rooms will be subject to the following security protocols:

REV_00146494

(i) Only Members and designated staff will have access to the Documents, and, with respect to staff, only after such staff have signed the certification pursuant to subsection 3(b) below.

(ii) The document rooms will be secured immediately and have alarms installed as quickly as possible. Only the Chief Clerk and up to 7 designated Majority staff and 7 designated Minority staff will have keys to the respective rooms.

(iii) Designated staff may copy Documents but must maintain those copies within the specially-designated secure rooms, except as provided in subsection 3(a)(v) below, and except that a copy machine that is contiguous to but outside of the specially-designated secure rooms may be used so long as the designated staff making the copies remains with the Documents being copied at all times, and all Documents and copies are returned promptly to the specially-designated document rooms.

(iv) The specially-designated secure rooms may contain computers, printers, and copiers, but will not contain fax machines.

(v) Only designated staff may transport Documents to depositions and witness interviews, or to the offices of Members for their personal review. When a designated staff member removes Documents, the staff member will sign a log book and specify the date and time the Documents are being removed. Upon completion of the use for which the document was removed from the specially-designated document room, the document must be promptly returned to the specially-designated secured document room.

(vi) No copies of the Documents will be made while they are removed from the specially-designated secure rooms (except as provided in subsection 3(a)(iii) above), no faxes of the Documents will be sent except as otherwise permitted by this Protocol, and no copies of Documents will be attached to deposition transcripts.

(vii) Only designated staff may remove staff work product, including computer disks, from the specially designated secure rooms. The confidentiality of any such work product must be maintained.

(b) Before being given access to the Documents, designated staff must sign a certification as set forth in the attachment hereto. Any staff member who violates the certification or any other procedures and protocols set forth herein shall be immediately subject to sanctions, including removal from employment. Such certification will be maintained by the Chief Clerk.

4. DOCUMENTS WITHHELD

In the event the Producing Party withholds responsive Documents from production, the Producing Party shall maintain a bates stamped copy set of all such Documents and shall comply with Instruction number 9 attached to the subpoenas. The Committee maintains that only Documents on which privilege is appropriately asserted may be withheld and does not hereby concede the validity of any such privilege claim.

REV_00146495

5. PUBLIC DISCLOSURES OF DOCUMENTS

(a) Documents received by the Committee will be made public only in the following circumstances:

(i) as a part of a Committee hearing;
(ii) as a part of a Committee report; or
(iii) based on a determination by the Chairman or Ranking Member that disclosure is appropriate to further the purposes of the Investigation, provided that whichever of the Chairman or Ranking Member makes such determination shall, prior to disclosing Documents, give notice of that determination to the other and (for Executive Office of the President Documents) to the Counsel to the President or (for Office of the Vice President Documents) to the Counsel to the Vice President in writing twenty-four hours in advance (excluding Saturdays, Sundays and legal holidays) and that the other and the relevant Counsel is afforded reasonable opportunity to consult with the Chairman or the Ranking Member (whichever has made the determination) prior to any release.

(b) The Producing Party may identify for the Committee any Document or portion thereof that, in the view of the Producing Party, would inappropriately compromise any individual's personal privacy if released to the public ("personal privacy information"). The Chairman or Ranking Member shall not release any Document containing personal privacy information unless he has evaluated the assertion of personal privacy and either redacted the personal privacy information or provided notice and an opportunity to consult of the type referenced in Subsection 5(a)(iii).

(c) If any Document produced pursuant to this Protocol is at any time, in whole or in part, released by the Producing Party, or if the Committee obtains the Document through alternative means, the terms of this Protocol shall no longer apply to such Document and such Document may be treated by the Committee as a public document.

6. PROCEDURES DURING HEARINGS

Starting 10 days prior to the beginning of public hearings and thereafter so long as the hearings continue, the following procedures will be in effect:

a. Committee staff work-product may be removed by anyone who has signed the certification referenced in 3(b) above;

b. Committee staff and staff for Committee Members may be provided Documents relevant to a hearing no earlier than forty-eight (48) hours prior to the scheduled hearing. The Chairman and Ranking Member may agree to make exceptions to this procedure;

and

Fitch
Following Moody's rating action late last week, Fitch announced this week it has placed classes from 13 single asset CMBS transactions on negative watch, while also affirming ratings on 18 other single asset deals.
Fitch cited a concern that the lack of a federal terrorism insurance program had not acted as an enabler for a private insurance market to recover.
The classes put on watch currently have inadequate insurance or policies that will expire within the next couple of months. Fitch analyzed the ratings risk by:
1. Categorizing assets as being either high-risk or not-high-risk. In classifying assets, Fitch will consider the physical characteristics of the underlying collateral, proximity to a major transportation hub, height of the building and other often-cited risk characteristics.
2. Identifying the credit risk associated with such assessment. Fitch explained in its press release that high-risk assets have a double-A risk of a terrorist act, while not-high-risk assets have a triple-A risk of loss (see Risk Events below for explanation), and 3. Determining the level of insurance necessary to mitigate such risk. The risk can be alleviated by terrorism insurance coverage in an aggregate amount sufficient to cover principal of the at-risk class. For example, high-risk assets with a double-A risk of loss need insurance to cover both the triple- and double-A portion of debt.

The watchlist classes will remain on watch until the earlier of (i) the agency receiving notice from the related servicer that adequate insurance has been put in place, or (ii) September 30, 2002, at which time the classes on watch will be downgraded.

Boxer Rebellion
It's time for President Bush to stand up to California's senators.

Wednesday, June 5, 2002 12:01 a.m.

President Bush took office promising to restore the "power and legitimate authority of the Oval Office." To that end, the White House has taken controversial steps to claim executive privilege for Enron-related documents from his energy task force, clashed with Rep. Dan Burton, a fellow Republican, in refusing to turn over files on an old FBI scandal in Boston, and ended the American Bar Association's special role in vetting judicial nominees.

But there is one glaring exception to the White House's firm line on protecting its executive branch turf. Last year, it allowed Gerald Parsky, its chief political operative in California, to take effective control of the process of reviewing and recommending nominees for the federal district courts in the largest state. Normally, in the absence of a senator from the president's party, judicial nominees for district courts are vetted by senior House members of the president's party. Instead, Mr. Parsky and the White House crafted a bizarre power-sharing arrangement in California whereby Sens. Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein, both Democrats, would have virtual veto power over district-court nominations. The deal was to set up four commissions to select judges, one for each of the Golden State's judicial districts. Mr. Parsky and the White House selected three candidates to serve each commission; Sens. Boxer and Feinstein selected another three. Together the six members on each commission would interview prospective candidates and forward their names to the White House, which would pick from those names. Four out of the six commission members would have to agree for any name to be sent to the White House.

The commissions may have seemed a clever way to maneuver around increasingly partisan fights over judicial nominees. But they are constitutionally suspect, and they haven't delivered the political benefits the White House expected. Last month, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales expressed what the Los Angeles Daily Journal, a newspaper for lawyers, called "strong dissatisfaction" with the judicial advisory committees. "In terms of how quickly the president was able to nominate judges to the bench, California is probably last," he told the American Law Institute. "And I think it was probably because of the commission structure." Mr. Gonzales went on to recognize that the commissions are "an encroachment upon the powers of the presidency, in terms of limiting who he can look to within the state to nominate to the federal bench."

That said, Mr. Gonzales acknowledged that the commission might be here to stay: "We'll see how it works down the road." But he was blunt in saying the only reason it existed is that "You've got two Democratic senators [in California], one [Ms. Feinstein] on the Judiciary Committee."

The argument for the commissions was that they would make Sens. Boxer and Feinstein more cooperative in allowing more important nominations--especially for the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals--through. But that didn't happen. Ms. Boxer vowed to filibuster the possible nomination of Rep. Chris Cox, a respected judicial conservative. And she has blocked hearings for Carolyn Kuhl, a Los Angeles lawyer nominated for the Ninth Circuit. For her part, Ms. Feinstein voted to block Judge Charles Pickering, a nominee to another appeals court, from getting a vote by the full Senate. The Judiciary Committee killed the Pickering nomination by a party-line vote even though a majority of the Senate was prepared to confirm him.

When the commissions were created, Mr. Parsky pledged that they would be a way "to take ideology out of the process" and ensure confirmable nominees. But several legal scholars and former judges say the process is suffused with ideology. John Eastman, a professor at Chapman Law School, in Orange, Calif., says he knows of at least two people interviewed by the commissions who were asked for their views on specific issues by Democratic members, including whether they supported the Second Amendment and the Roe v. Wade decision. One candidate was even quizzed about his Catholicism, notwithstanding the Constitution's provision that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States."

In addition, the White House understood the commissions were supposed to send a minimum of three names to Washington for consideration as district judges. In reality, the commissions have sent a maximum of three names, severely curbing the choices President Bush could make. The commission interviewed more than 25 candidates for one vacancy, but Democrats rejected most of them, including a lawyer who had made the mistake of working with the Bush legal team in Florida during the 2000 election controversy.

Beyond the internal problems of the commissions there are real problems of accountability. The commissions, filled with establishment pillars of the legal community, operate in secret. The White House is never informed of how many votes each nominee received or who voted for or against him. Most candidates are never even voted on, being discarded in an informal process of which no records are kept. A president is politically accountable for the judicial selections he makes. A senator who blocks a nominee in committee or on the floor may have to answer for his actions to voters or constituency groups. But the California commissions make their decisions in the shadows.

The growing judicial vacancy crisis--the Judicial Conference of the United States has declared 35 "judicial emergencies"--has finally convinced the White House that Senate Democrats aren't interested in allowing a vote on any identifiably conservative judicial nominee. California's jury-rigged commissions aren't working, and Senate Democrats see their existence as a sign of weakness. It's time for the president to dissolve them.

Boxer Rebellion
It's time for President Bush to stand up to California's senators.

Wednesday, June 5, 2002 12:01 a.m.

President Bush took office promising to restore the "power and legitimate authority of the Oval Office." To that end, the White House has taken controversial steps to claim executive privilege for Enron-related documents from his energy task force, clashed with Rep. Dan Burton, a fellow Republican, in refusing to turn over files on an old FBI scandal in Boston, and ended the American Bar Association's special role in vetting judicial nominees.

But there is one glaring exception to the White House's firm line on protecting its executive branch turf. Last year, it allowed Gerald Parsky, its chief political operative in California, to take effective control of the process of reviewing and recommending nominees for the federal district courts in the largest state. Normally, in the absence of a senator from the president's party, judicial nominees for district courts are vetted by senior House members of the president's party. Instead, Mr. Parsky and the White House crafted a bizarre power-sharing arrangement in California whereby Sens. Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein, both Democrats, would have virtual veto power over district-court nominations. The deal was to set up four commissions to select judges, one for each of the Golden State's judicial districts. Mr. Parsky and the White House selected three candidates to serve each commission; Sens. Boxer and Feinstein selected another three. Together the six members on each commission would interview prospective candidates and forward their names to the White House, which would pick from those names. Four out of the six commission members would have to agree for any name to be sent to the White House.

The commissions may have seemed a clever way to maneuver around increasingly partisan fights over judicial nominees. But they are constitutionally suspect, and they haven't delivered the political benefits the White House expected. Last month, White House Counsel Alberto Gonzales expressed what the Los Angeles Daily Journal, a newspaper for lawyers, called "strong dissatisfaction" with the judicial advisory committees. "In terms of how quickly the president was able to nominate judges to the bench, California is probably last," he told the American Law Institute. "And I think it was probably because of the commission structure." Mr. Gonzales went on to recognize that the commissions are "an encroachment upon the powers of the presidency, in terms of limiting who he can look to within the state to nominate to the federal bench."

That said, Mr. Gonzales acknowledged that the commission might be here to stay: "We'll see how it works down the road." But he was blunt in saying the only reason it existed is that "You've got two Democratic senators [in California], one [Ms. Feinstein] on the Judiciary Committee."

The argument for the commissions was that they would make Sens. Boxer and Feinstein more cooperative in allowing more important nominations--especially for the Ninth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals--through. But that didn't happen. Ms. Boxer vowed to filibuster the possible nomination of Rep. Chris Cox, a respected judicial conservative. And she has blocked hearings for Carolyn Kuhl, a Los Angeles lawyer nominated for the Ninth Circuit. For her part, Ms. Feinstein voted to block Judge Charles Pickering, a nominee to another appeals court, from getting a vote by the full Senate. The Judiciary Committee killed the Pickering nomination by a party-line vote even though a majority of the Senate was prepared to confirm him.

When the commissions were created, Mr. Parsky pledged that they would be a way "to take ideology out of the process" and ensure confirmable nominees. Karen, I believe that we addressed the concerns relative to the inclusion of Native Hawaiians in the study in footnote 6 (in the executive summary of

report), that reads as follows:

"For the purposes of the Study, the term "Native Hawaiian" is defined as "a person having origins in the original peoples of Hawaii", see 62 Fed. Reg. 58,781 (1997). "Native Hawaiian" is not a term that refers to a federally recognized Tribe. Inclusion of Native Hawaiians in the study does not confer or imply any specific, legally enforceable duties on the United States as trustee that apply under certain circumstances when it manages tribal or individual Indian property or resources. In addition, this study does not support or create any right enforceable or cause of action by or against the United States, its agencies, officers or any person. The CDFI Fund's experience with CDFIs and prospective CDFIs in Hawaii has suggested that Native Hawaiians face many of the same issues and barriers as Native Americans and Alaska Natives in their attempts to access loans and investment capital. Accordingly, in 1999, the CDFI Fund proposed to Congress to expand the Study beyond the original Congressional mandate to include Native Hawaiians. The Senate Committee on Indian Affairs encouraged and supported the proposed expansion."

This footnote was crafted with the approval of OMB and Main Treasury, during the report's clearance process last summer/fall. Please let me know if the inclusion of this language in the proposed testimony will satisfy the concerns laid out below. Thanks.

Workers' Comp Needs a Terror Backstop

By M. R. Greenberg

Wednesday, June 5, 2002; Page A23

One tragic lesson we learned on Sept. 11 is that the working people of the United States are at great risk from a terrorist attack. At the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, thousands of working men and women had their lives taken from them while they were beginning their workday and providing for their families. We now know that large concentrations of working people are prime targets for terrorists who want to destroy American lives, our economy and our freedoms.

The first economic defense for the working family is the workers' compensation system. Under the laws of each state, a working person who suffers injury or death on the job is guaranteed a payment that becomes a critical safety net for the employee and his or her family.

Even in normal times, workers' compensation costs and claims are significant. Costs for an injured employee can exceed $1 million. A catastrophic attack directed at a densely populated facility has the potential for losses that would be financially unbearable to both employers and insurers.

Insurers and self-insured employers will pay between $2 billion and $3 billion in workers' compensation claims following Sept. 11. Unfortunately, an even more tragic event is not outside the realm of the possible. An explosion leading to the release of deadly chemicals or the detonation of a nuclear device could result in losses 10 to 40 times that amount.

Workers' compensation statutes mandate that all risks -- even those resulting from war or a terrorist attack involving biological, chemical or radiation components -- must be covered, with no exclusions permitted for employers or insurers. But since Sept. 11, the risk profile for high concentrations of workers has changed. We now know the unthinkable is possible. As difficult as it may be to think in such terms, an incident at a single complex of 10,000 employees could result in a $50 billion loss. Just do the math if 100,000 employees are involved.

No employer or insurer could absorb such a loss. Without a federal backstop, employers in big cities such as New York are faced with a serious dilemma. Should they run the risk of being unable to meet their obligations to their employees in the event of war or nuclear attack? Or should they contemplate relocation and dispersal of their employee force? The problem is not confined to major metropolitan areas. Any location around the nation employing large numbers of workers could be hard hit -- bank credit card offices in South Dakota, telecommunications call centers in Florida, industrial installations in virtually any state.

The insurance industry is not capable of insuring against the risks of war, nuclear, chemical and biological attack on any mass basis. The private sector simply does not have the financial capacity to cope with such enormous losses. This can be done only by government. It is illusory to expect that private companies and their insurers will be able to bear the costs of an enormous act of war or terrorism. But without federal intervention, these losses must, under the laws of every state, be borne by employers and their insurers.

In order for our nation to be prepared for a threat of this magnitude, Congress must enact legislation to federalize or reinsure the risks to working people of injury or death in the event of war or an act of terror. After Sept. 11, I advocated, for similar reasons, a broad-based federal terrorism insurance backstop to cover losses resulting from all forms of terrorism.

Various approaches to sharing the burden between the private market and the government have been proposed and debated in both houses, but Congress has failed to act. The obstacle to enactment has been the opposing points of view in the Senate as to whether punitive damage awards should be permitted in connection with acts of terrorism. Congress must move quickly to resolve this issue.

When it comes to workers' compensation claims and coverage, punitive damages are not at issue. Therefore, Congress should be able to act decisively now to prevent the economic catastrophe that could result from another attack at the workplace. We owe the millions of Americans who courageously returned to their jobs following Sept. 11 nothing less.

Congressional Testimony by James Schlesinger
While Serving As Assistant to the President
During the Development & Creation of the Dept. of Energy

ú Dr. James Schlesinger served as an Assistant to President Carter from January 20, 1977 to August 5, 1977. He was charged by the President with responsibility for drafting a plan to establish a Department of Energy and for preparing a national energy policy. On August 5, 1977, he became the Nation,s first Secretary of Energy, taking office one day after President Carter signed the legislation creating that department.

ú While serving as Assistant to the President, Dr. Schlesinger testified before Congress on at least five occasions. His earliest congressional testimony appears to have been in March, 1977, on the proposed &Department of Energy Organization Act.8 See Hearings Before a Subcomm. of the Comm. on Government Operations, House of Representatives, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. on H.R. 4263 (March 28, 29 and April 5, 6, 18 & 19, 1977). This testimony was delivered in anticipation of a presidential energy policy statement to be delivered on April 20, 1977, the broad outlines of which were previously known. Dr. Schlesinger stated that, &whatever the particular details of th[e President,s] plan, the structure we have proposed will encompass it.8 He then described at length the structure and functions of the proposed Energy Department (the proposal included the abolition of several existing federal agencies and the transfer of several energy-related programs to the new department). He said that &[b]y establishing this Department, we will be assured of having one Government body with sufficient scope and authority to effectively oversee the development of a national energy policy.8 He answered numerous and detailed questions from members of the subcommittee about the proposal and about energy policy generally, and provided written answers to other questions ú Dr. Schlesinger testified later on May 3, 1977, before the Senate. See Hearing Before the Comm. on Energy and Natural Resources, United States Senate, 95th Cong. 1st Sess. on The Rationale for, and the Economic Impact of, the Energy Proposals Presented by President Carter to the 95th Congress (May 3, 1977). He referred to &the willingness of the Congress and the administration to work together8 on &what is a serious and potentially disastrous national problem.8 He described the proposals in the President,s National Energy Plan and responded to detailed questions from Members. He also testified as to matters on which the Administration had not developed a position (a coal slurry pipeline), but which he personally favored.

ú Dr. Schlesinger also testified on three other occasions in May, 1977. On the first such occasion, he testified on the National Energy Act before the Ad Hoc Committee on Energy of the House of Representatives. Second, he testified on &Tax Aspects of President Carter,s Energy Program8 before the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives. (On this occasion, he described the &energy problem8 as &one of the most serious domestic problems this country will ever encounter,8 although it lacked a & clear and unequivocal signal such as Pearl Harbor8). Finally, he testified on the National Energy Act before the Subcommittee on Energy and Power of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House of Representatives. On all these occasions he answered, at considerable length, detailed questions from Members.

Moose--Larry is planning on going to New York for a RNC sponsered event. He has a friend in New York that invited him to stay at his house rather than get a hotel room (his private residence.) This friend that he would like to stay with is also having the RNC event at his house. Is that alright with you and counsel's office?

For 30 years, the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty has served to bolster the policy of mutually assured destruction (MAD) and impose crippling restrictions on the nation's missile defense programs. President Bush, recognizing the inappropriateness of MAD and the policy of vulnerability to missile attack, announced on December 13, 2001, that the United States is withdrawing from the treaty. This is a decision that will serve to bolster the national security by allowing the unfettered development and deployment of missile defenses for the protection of the American people, our allies, and troops deployed abroad. Please join us as we mark the occasion when the treaty will lapse. We hope that you will be willing to add your voice in support of this important step forward for the national interest.

Please RSVP by phone or facsimile no later than Friday, June 7, 2002.

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20220

June 10, 2002

The Honorable Trent Lott
Senate Republican Leader
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Lott:

The War on Terrorism must be fought on many fronts. From an economic perspective, we must minimize the risks and consequences associated with potential acts of terror. No measure is more important to mitigating the economic effects of terrorist events than the passage of terrorism insurance legislation.

Last November 1, the Administration publicly agreed to bipartisan legislation negotiated with Chairman Sarbanes, Chairman Dodd, Senator Gramm and Senator Enzi. While the House of Representatives quickly responded to this urgent need by passing appropriate legislation, the Senate did not act and has not passed any form of terrorism legislation in the intervening seven months.

The absence of federal legislation is having a palpable and severe effect on our economy and is costing America's workers their jobs. In the first quarter of this year, commercial real estate construction was down 20 percent. The disruption of terrorism coverage makes it more difficult to operate, acquire, or refinance property, leading to diminished bank lending for new construction projects and lower asset values for existing properties. The Bond Market Association has said that more than $7 billion worth of commercial real estate activity has been suspended or cancelled due to the lack of such insurance. Last week, Moody's Investors Service announced that 14 commercial mortgage-backed transactions could be downgraded due to a lack of such insurance.

Without such insurance, the economic impact of another terrorist attack would be much larger, including major bankruptcies, layoffs and loan defaults. While we are doing everything we can to stop another attack, we should minimize the widespread economic damage to our economy should such an event occur.

One important issue for the availability of terrorism insurance is the risk of unfair or excessive litigation against American companies following an attack. Many for-profit and charitable entities have been unable to obtain affordable and adequate insurance, in part because of the risk that they will be unfairly sued for the acts of international terrorists.

To address this risk at least two important provisions are essential. First, provisions for an exclusive federal cause of action and consolidation of all cases arising out of terrorist attacks, like those included in the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act, are necessary to provide for reasonable and expeditious litigation.

Second, the victims of terrorism should not have to pay punitive damages. Punitive damages are designed to punish criminal or near-criminal wrongdoing. Of course such sanctions are appropriate for terrorists. But American companies that are attacked by terrorists should not be subject to predatory lawsuits. The availability of punitive damages in terrorism cases would result in inequitable relief for injured parties, threaten bankruptcies for American companies and a loss of jobs for American workers.

It is also clear that the potential for massive damages imposed on companies that suffer from acts of terror would endanger our economic recovery from a terrorist attack. Indeed, the added risks and legal uncertainty hanging over the economy as a result of last September 11th are major factors inhibiting a business willingness to invest and to create jobs. It makes little economic sense to pass a terrorism insurance bill that leaves our economy exposed to such inappropriate and needless legal uncertainty.

The bipartisan public agreement reached between the Administration and Chairman Sarbanes, Chairman Dodd, Senator Gramm and Senator Enzi last fall provided these minimum safeguards. We would recommend that the President not sign any legislation that leaves the American economy and victims of terrorist acts subject to predatory lawsuits and punitive damages.

The American people and our economy have waited seven months since our public agreement on legislation. The process must move forward. Prompt action by the Senate on this vitally important legislation is needed now.

Sincerely,

Paul H. O'Neill
Secretary of the Treasury

Lawrence Lindsey
Director,
National Economic Council

Mitchell E. Daniels
Director
Office of Management and Budget

R. Glenn Hubbard
Director
Council of Economic Advisors

The NRSC is asking to post a page on their website where people can sign up and wish the President happy birthday. It will add their name to a card that they promise to send to the President. Karl is not in favor of this idea, so we will probably say no. KR says the only way he would be willing is if we can respond to the people who sign up. (send them an acknowledgement thanking them for the birthday wish). Is that permissible?

If not, then we will definitely turn down the request. thanks

FINANCE
Dodd Sees Hope For Terrorism Insurance Talks While predicting "there is much work to be done in the days and weeks ahead," Sen.
Christopher Dodd, D-Conn., said Monday he was "hopeful" that Senate Democrats could work with the Bush administration and Senate Republicans to enact a terrorism reinsurance bill.
Dodd, a lead negotiator on the issue, also praised the White House for weighing in on the debate. Monday President Bush's top economic advisers sent a letter to the Senate, outlining the White House's stance on whether U.S. businesses that may share culpability in a terrorist incident should be liable for punitive damages.
Although the White House position on that question runs counter to that of key leaders of the Senate majority, the letter "hopefully indicates their renewed commitment to addressing this critical economic issue in a timely and serious way," Dodd said.

Dodd was among a group of Democratic senators who introduced new legislation
Friday designed to serve as the chamber's floor vehicle. The bill is essentially identical to reinsurance legislation crafted late last year by Democrats that never was formally introduced.
The measure has been placed on the Senate calendar, and Democrats hope to have the new bill brought up for action before the July 4 recess, sources said.
Prior to the introduction of that bill, Dodd last week told CongressDaily he thought Democratic leadership ultimately would have to file cloture in order to move the debate forward. By Pamela Barnett

SIMPLIFY AND CONSOLIDATE INDIVIDUAL SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Current Law

Current law provides multiple tax-preferred individual savings accounts to encourage savings for retirement, education, and health expenses. The accounts have overlapping goals but are subject to different sets of rules regulating eligibility, contribution limits, tax treatment, and withdrawal restrictions. Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs), including traditional, Roth, and nondeductible IRAs, are primarily intended to encourage retirement saving, but can also be used for certain education, medical, and other non-retirement expenses. Each of the three types of IRAs is subject to a different set of rules. Coverdell Education Savings Accounts (ESAs) and Section 529 Qualified Tuition Plans (QTPs) are both intended to encourage saving for education, but each is subject to different rules. Archer Medical Savings Accounts are intended to encourage saving for medical expenses.

Individual Retirement Accounts: Under current law, individuals under age 70½ may make contributions to a traditional IRA, subject to certain limits. The contributions are generally deductible; however, the deduction is phased out for workers with incomes above certain levels who are covered by an employer-sponsored retirement plan. Account earnings are not includible in gross income until distributed. Distributions (including account earnings) are includible in gross income.

To the extent a taxpayer cannot or does not make deductible contributions to a traditional IRA, a taxpayer under age 70½ may make nondeductible contributions. In this case, distributions representing a return of basis are not includible in gross income, while distributions representing account earnings are includible in gross income. There is no income limit for nondeductible contributions to a traditional IRA.

Individuals of any age may make contributions to a Roth IRA. Allowable contributions are phased out for workers with incomes above certain levels. Account earnings accumulate tax free, and qualified distributions (including account earnings) are not includible in gross income. The earnings portion of a nonqualified Roth IRA distribution is includible in gross income.

The annual aggregate limit on contributions to all of a taxpayer's IRAs (traditional, nondeductible, and Roth) is the lesser of compensation or $3,000 for 2002 through 2005 ($3,500 for individuals age 50 and over). The contribution limit is scheduled to increase to $5,000 ($6,000 for individuals age 50 and over) by 2008.

Taxpayers with AGI of $100,000 or less and who are not married filing separately can convert a traditional IRA to a Roth IRA. In general, the conversion amount is included in gross income (but not for the purposes of the $100,000 limit).

Early distributions from IRAs are generally subject to an additional 10 percent tax. The tax is imposed on the portion of an early distribution that is includible in gross income. It applies in addition to ordinary income taxes on the distribution. The additional tax does not apply to a rollover to an employer plan or IRA, or if the distribution is made in the cases of death or disability, certain medical expenses, first-time homebuyer expenses, qualified higher-education expenses, health-insurance expenses of unemployed individuals, or as part of a series of substantially equal periodic payments. ~~[period]~~

~~Mention minimum required distribution rules in passing~~

Minimum distribution rules require that, beginning at the later of age 70½ or retirement, the entire amount of a traditional IRA be distributed over the life of the individual (or the joint lives of the individual and a designated beneficiary). These rules do not apply to Roth IRAs.

Coverdell Education Savings Accounts: Taxpayers may elect to contribute up to $2,000 per year to a Coverdell Education Savings Account (ESA) for beneficiaries under age 18. The contribution limit is phased out for taxpayers with incomes above certain levels. Contributions are not deductible, but earnings on contributions accumulate tax-free. Distributions are excludable from gross income to the extent they do not exceed qualified education expenses that are incurred during the year the distributions are made and that are not used to claim another tax benefit (such as an education tax credit or a tax-free distribution from a qualified tuition program). The earnings portion of a distribution not used to cover qualified education expenses is includible in the gross income of the beneficiary and is generally subject to an additional 10 percent tax.

Except in the case of a special needs beneficiary, when a beneficiary reaches age 30, the account balance is deemed to have been distributed for nonqualified purposes. However, prior to the beneficiary reaching age 30, tax-free (and penalty-free) rollovers of account balances may be made to an ESA benefiting another family member.

Section 529 Qualified Tuition Programs: Contributions to a QTP are not deductible from income for federal tax purposes, but earnings on contributions accumulate tax-free. Taxpayers may exclude from gross income amounts distributed from a QTP and used for qualified higher education expenses, so long as the distribution is not used for the same educational expenses for which another tax benefit (such as an education tax credit or a tax-free distribution from an ESA) is claimed. Nonqualified distributions are subject to an additional tax. A change in the designated beneficiary of an account is not treated as a distribution, and therefore is not subject to income tax, if the new beneficiary is a member of the family of the prior beneficiary. Neither contributors nor beneficiaries may direct the investment of the account.

There is no specific dollar cap on annual contributions to a QTP. In addition, there is no limit on contributions to a QTP account based on the contributor's income, contributions are allowed at any time during the beneficiary's lifetime, and the account can remain open after the beneficiary reaches age 30. However, a QTP must provide adequate safeguards to prevent contributions on behalf of a designated beneficiary in excess of amounts necessary to provide for the qualified higher education expenses of the beneficiary.

Archer Medical Savings Accounts: Self-employed individuals and individuals employed by small employers maintaining a high-deductible health plan are allowed to accumulate funds in an Archer Medical Savings Account (MSA) on a tax-preferred basis to pay for medical expenses. An individual is eligible to establish an MSA only if the employee (or the employee's spouse) is covered by a high-deductible health plan (and no other health plan). Contributions to MSAs are deductible and qualified distributions are excluded from gross income. Nonqualified distributions are subject to an additional tax.

Reasons for Change

The plethora of individual savings accounts, each subject to different rules regarding eligibility, contributions, tax treatment, and withdrawal, creates complexity and redundancy in the Code. Taxpayers must determine their eligibility for each account separately and then must decide which plan or plans are best for them given their circumstances. Furthermore, as their circumstances change over time, taxpayers must continually re-evaluate their eligibility for each plan and which best meets their needs. In addition, the current list of non-retirement exceptions within IRAs weakens the focus on retirement saving. Consolidating the plans into accounts that taxpayers could use over their entire lifetime would simplify the decision-making process and eliminate redundancies in the Code while further encouraging savings.

Proposal

The proposal would consolidate individual tax-preferred savings accounts into a Lifetime Savings Account (LSA) that could be used for any type of saving, and a Retirement Savings Account (RSA) that could be used for retirement saving.

Consolidate Archer Medical Savings Accounts, Coverdell Education Savings Accounts, and Section 529 Qualified Tuition Plans into Lifetime Savings Accounts.

Individuals could contribute up to $5,000 per year to their Lifetime Savings Accounts (LSAs), regardless of wage income. No income limits would apply to LSA contributions. Contributions would have to be in cash. Contributions would be nondeductible, but earnings would accumulate tax-free, and all distributions would be excluded from gross income, regardless of the individual's age or use of the distribution. No minimum required distribution rules would apply to LSAs.

Contribution limits would apply to all accounts held in an individual's name, rather than to contributors. Thus, contributors could make annual contributions of up to $5,000 each to the accounts of other individuals, but the aggregate of all contributions to all accounts held in a given individual's name could not exceed $5,000. Accounts held in a minor's name would become the property of the named individual when the individual attained age 18. Individuals could roll amounts from LSAs over to a member of the individual's family, as defined in section 529(e)(2), subject to the normal gift tax rules. The LSA contribution limit would be indexed for inflation.

Existing MSA, ESA and QTP accounts would be renamed LSAs, and could be combined with other LSA accounts held by the same individual. New contributions would be subject to LSA limitations. States could continue to provide QTPs (renaming them LSAs), and could continue to allow contributions to be deductible against state income taxes.

REV_00146854

LSAs would become effective in 2003.

Consolidate IRAs into Retirement Savings Accounts.

Individuals could contribute up to $5,000 per year (or wage income, if less) to their Retirement Savings Account (RSA). No income limits would apply to RSA contributions. Contributions would have to be in cash. Contributions would be nondeductible, but earnings would accumulate tax-free, and qualified distributions would be excluded from gross income. The RSA contribution limit would be indexed to inflation.

Qualified distributions from the retirement account would be distributions made after age 58 or in the event of death or disability. Nonqualified distributions would be includible in income (to the extent they exceed basis), and subject to an additional tax. Distributions would be deemed to come from basis first. No minimum required distribution rules would apply to RSAs.

Existing Roth IRAs would be renamed RSAs and be made subject to the new rules for RSAs. Existing traditional and nondeductible IRAs could be converted into an RSA by taking the conversion amount into gross income, similar to a current-law Roth conversion. However, no income limit would apply to the ability to convert. Taxpayers who convert IRAs to RSAs could spread the included conversion amount over several years. Existing traditional or Roth IRAs that are not converted to RSAs could not accept any new contributions. New traditional IRAs could be created to accommodate rollovers from employer plans, but they could not accept any new individual contributions. Individuals wishing to roll an amount directly from an employer plan to an RSA could do so by taking the rollover amount (excluding basis) into gross income (i.e., "converting" the rollover, similar to a Roth conversion).

RSAs would become effective in 2003.

Discussion:

The proposal would significantly simplify participation in various individual savings accounts by consolidating them into accounts that could be used over the course of the taxpayer's lifetime. The proposal would further simplify participation by removing income phase-outs, required distributions, and restrictions on the use of distributions from LSAs.

The proposal would simplify saving for education, medical and other expenses by consolidating ESAs, QTPs, and MSAs into one account and removing income limits. Moreover, it would expand opportunities for tax-free savings and simplify participation by eliminating the requirement that distributions from LSAs be used for certain qualified purposes. Individuals could use LSAs to save on a tax-free basis for any purpose, including retirement. The proposal would simplify IRAs by consolidating three types of IRAs into one account and removing income limits and required minimum distributions.

The proposal effectively would extend consumption-tax-type treatment, on a limited basis, to savings for any purpose. This is because, like current-law traditional and Roth IRAs, ESAs and QTPs, the proposal would effectively exempt account earnings from federal income tax.

The proposal would increase the savings incentive relative to current law by removing income limits, age limits, and required distributions, and allowing tax-free distributions from LSAs for any purpose (including retirement). Expansion of the ability to save for retirement outside of employer-sponsored plans could adversely affect participation in those plans. In addition, some individuals may value the traditional IRA's deductible contributions more than the RSA's excludable distributions, and so be less inclined to contribute. However, the overall incentive effect of the proposal on individuals would be to encourage additional savings.

The separate RSA account dedicated to retirement saving would be maintained to address concerns about excessive pre-retirement distributions from existing retirement accounts. The distinction would allow taxpayers to contribute to non-retirement goals on a tax-preferred basis without undermining retirement security by draining retirement funds for non-retirement expenses. In addition, recent research has found evidence that many individuals prefer to maintain separate "mental accounts" for different savings goals, and thus may prefer to have separate actual accounts for retirement and non-retirement purposes.

REV_00146856

BACKGROUND PAPER: SIMPLIFY AND CONSOLIDATE INDIVIDUAL SAVINGS ACCOUNTS

Revenue Effects

Assuming that EGTRRA is permanently extended, the proposal is estimated to increase revenues by about $0.1 billion over the ten-year period from 2003 to 2012 (see attachment).

Distribution /Winners and Losers

The removal of income limits clearly would benefit higher-income taxpayers more than lower-income taxpayers, especially since higher-income taxpayers tend to save more. However, the allowance of LSA withdrawals for any purpose would bring tax-free saving to many lower-income taxpayers who currently do not participate in tax-deferred accounts. Lower-income taxpayers may currently be less likely to participate in IRAs because they are reluctant to tie up scarce savings in a long-term commitment, or because they are misled or deterred by the complexity of IRA income limits or other informational barriers. The proposal would remove these barriers, and many lower-income taxpayers could use LSAs as their primary savings account. The LSA/RSA contribution limit is unlikely to be binding on lower-income taxpayers, and hence all or a large proportion of their savings would earn a tax-free return.

Effect on Marginal Tax Rates

Generally, the proposal would not have a significant effect on marginal tax rates for most taxpayers. Some taxpayers would be affected, however. For example, a taxpayer whose deductible IRA contributions currently keep them in a lower tax bracket would face higher marginal tax rates after transitioning to nondeductible LSA/RSA contributions. Also, taxpayers who converted traditional IRAs to RSAs by including the account balance in income could face higher marginal tax rates in the year of conversion, even if the income inclusion could be spread over several years. On the other hand, taxpayers whose deductible IRA contributions are partially phased out by the income limit would face lower effective marginal tax rates after transitioning to LSA/RSA contributions. Also, taxpayers currently participating in traditional IRAs who began to participate in RSAs instead could face lower marginal tax rates in retirement.

Effect on Savings

The consumption-tax treatment of LSAs and RSAs encourages taxpayers to save by equalizing the taxation of current and future consumption. Under income-tax treatment, a dollar saved for future consumption is taxed more heavily than a dollar consumed currently, introducing a tax incentive in favor of current consumption. Thus, relative to income-tax treatment, consumption-tax treatment encourages saving. The LSA/RSA proposal would expand the consumption-tax treatment currently available under IRAs by simplifying participation, removing income limits, and offering consumption-tax treatment to a limited amount of savings that can be used for any purpose. Based on these factors, the proposal would encourage further savings, relative to current law.

However, it is difficult to predict the actual magnitude of the effect on personal savings. In order to increase personal savings in an economic sense, participants must reduce their current consumption. But in some cases, participants who make LSA or RSA contributions would save at least some of those amounts even in the absence of the programs. In practice, this means they may offset other saving in response to their LSA or RSA contribution, and so current consumption would not decrease by the full amount of the contribution. As a result, not all LSA or RSA contributions would represent increased personal savings.

Nonetheless, it is clear that the proposal would bring consumption-tax treatment to a large proportion of the typical household's savings. For example, in 1998, over forty percent of households had total financial assets of less than $10,000 –1 the combined annual LSA/RSA contribution limit. Thus, under the proposal, forty percent of households could receive consumption-tax treatment on all of their savings in the first year of enactment. This proportion is 50 percent among households under the age of 45, and 70 percent among households with under $25,000 in annual income. Over time, an increasing share of households could receive consumption-tax treatment on all of their savings. For example, in 1998, 78 percent of all households had total financial assets of $100,000 or less. Thus, if the proposal had been enacted in 1988, 78 percent of all households could have received consumption-tax treatment on all of their savings by 1998.

Effect on Medical Savings

LSAs have the potential to significantly expand medical savings among working taxpayers. Currently, Archer Medical Savings Accounts (MSAs) are generally only available to self-employed individuals and small-business employees who are covered by a high-deductible health plan (and no other plan) – a small proportion of all working taxpayers. It is estimated that fewer than 150,000 individuals have MSAs. LSAs would allow all individuals to begin saving for medical expenses, regardless of income, insurance coverage, or type of employer.

Currently, some contributors to an Archer MSA are eligible to receive both a deduction for contributions and an exclusion for certain distributions – effectively better than LSA's consumption-tax treatment. The current MSA treatment is meant to mimic the treatment of employer-provided health insurance.

However, LSAs offer several advantages over MSAs. In addition to providing universal eligibility for medical savings, LSAs would be available for all types of withdrawals, whereas MSA distributions are available only for medical expenses allowable as an itemized deduction. Moreover, LSAs would be much simpler to use. MSAs are subject to extremely complicated rules regarding deduction limits, definitions of eligibility, allowable withdrawals, and limitations on the aggregate number of accounts. Thus, the benefits of the LSA proposal for medical savings are very likely to outweigh the difference in tax treatment for the few affected taxpayers.

Effect on Educational Savings

The LSA proposal would significantly simplify educational savings for many taxpayers. Unlike Coverdell Education Savings Accounts (ESAs), income and age limits would not apply to LSAs, and the LSA contribution limit is higher than the ESA limit. And unlike both ESAs and Section

REV_00146858

529 Qualified Tuition Plans (QTPs), all distributions from LSAs would be tax-free, regardless of use.

Currently, contributions to Section 529 QTPs are not explicitly limited in a given year, but rather subject to state-by-state limits meant to prevent the accumulation of balances in excess of qualified education expenses. Some taxpayers (and the states and plan sponsors) might feel constrained by the $5,000 LSA contribution limit.

However, the proposal would allow for adequate education savings. Assuming a 7% return, contributions of $5,000 per year for 17 years would result in a balance of about $165,000 by the time a child typically enters college. Assuming additional contributions and earnings throughout the college years, this would be enough to fund four years of expenses of $50,000 per year, or five years of expenses of $40,000 per year. Moreover, parents, as well as other relatives, friends, and the children themselves, could each maintain an LSA and use the savings for higher-education expenses. States could continue to provide the plans (renaming them LSAs), and could continue to allow contributions to be deductible against state income taxes.

Effect on Retirement Savings

The RSA proposal could significantly increase participation in individual-based retirement savings accounts. Unlike traditional and Roth IRAs, RSAs are not subject to income or age limits. Moreover, the RSA proposal would simplify participation by reducing the plethora of IRA choices and by repealing required minimum distributions. Separating retirement savings from non-retirement savings may help people better manage their savings and prevent non-retirement needs from undermining retirement security.

Repeal of income limits could encourage financial institutions to increase their marketing and promotional activities to encourage new retirement savings by all taxpayers, as was the case during the period of unrestricted IRA participation from 1981 to 1986. Indeed IRA participation among lower- and moderate-income taxpayers fell after income limits were imposed in 1986, even though such taxpayers were not directly affected by the limits.

The proposal significantly helps taxpayers not covered by an employer retirement plan – about half of all workers. Since both LSAs and RSAs could be used for retirement savings, individuals could effectively use LSAs and RSAs to save $10,000 per year for retirement, significantly more than is available to such taxpayers under current law. Finally, the proposal accelerates the increase in contribution limits that is gradually phased in under EGTRRA. While under EGTRRA the contribution limit does not reach $5,000 (indexed) until 2008, under the LSA/RSA proposal, the $5,000 contribution limit (indexed) is effective beginning in 2003.

Expansion of the ability to save for retirement outside of employer-sponsored plans could adversely affect participation in those plans. The ability to save $10,000 per year for retirement in LSAs and RSAs could create competition with 401(k) and other qualified plans. Small employers in particular may determine that the expanded individual saving opportunities under LSAs and RSAs justify not offering qualified plans to their employees. This could result in lower retirement savings for moderate-income and lower-income employees, who may not make the same level of contributions to LSAs and RSAs that they and their employers had made to their qualified plans. To the extent that moderate-income and lower-income employees remain covered by 401(k) plans but choose to contribute to LSAs and RSAs instead of 401(k) plans, it may be more difficult for the 401(k) plans to pass the nondiscrimination tests under current law. That raises the possibility that employers, even large employers, may object to LSAs and RSAs.

However, many employees are likely to still value 401(k) and other qualified plans, for several reasons. For example, employer plans offer additional opportunities to save on a consumption-tax basis. In addition, many employer plans offer employer contributions and the convenience of payroll deduction and economies of scale in account management. Finally, many employees may value the up-front exclusion from taxable income offered by employer plans. Thus, it is not certain to what extent there would be flight from employer plans. While some small employers may choose to drop (or, not to add) retirement plans because of the availability of RSAs and LSAs, this would be most likely in cases of a lack of demand from employees. (Surveys have indicated that many small employers do not offer retirement plans because the employees prefer compensation in the form of wages.)

Some taxpayers may value certain features of existing traditional IRAs greater than the RSA that replaces them. For example, some individuals may value the traditional IRA's deductible contributions more than the RSA's excludable distributions. This could be the case if they expected their tax rates to fall in retirement (even after taking into account their IRA retirement distributions), or if for some other reason they simply preferred receiving the tax benefit up front rather than in retirement. Such taxpayers may be less inclined to contribute to the RSA. However, such taxpayers who are covered by an employer plan could continue to receive the benefits of up-front exclusion from the employer plan.

Finally, taxpayers aged 50 and over currently enjoy higher IRA contribution limits than younger taxpayers (so-called "catch-up" contributions). When current law is phased in fully in 2008, the IRA contribution limit for taxpayers aged 50 and over will be $6,000, which is greater than the $5,000 RSA contribution limit.

The LSA/RSA proposal does not contain a catch-up provision because it is simpler to apply the same contribution limit to all taxpayers. However, relative to current law, the LSA/RSA proposal does not really offer lower contribution limits. Since LSA savings can also be used for retirement, taxpayers could effectively save $10,000 per year for retirement in their LSA/RSA accounts, significantly greater than the $6,000 IRA limit. Moreover, the current-law $6,000 IRA limit does not become law until 2008, while the LSA/RSA limits would be effective five years sooner, in 2003. Thus, even restricting the comparison to RSAs alone, there would be little difference in contribution limits by 2008 because of the indexation of the RSA limit. For example, annual indexation of the RSA limit at a rate of about three percent could result in an RSA limit of $6,000 by 2008. Finally, the effective RSA contribution limit is higher than the limit on traditional IRAs, because the RSA limit applies to after-tax dollars.

REV_00146860

Other Options Considered

Two alternatives to the LSA/RSA proposal were considered.

Under the first alternative, tax-free distributions from LSAs would be limited to those made before age 58 and used for qualified educational or medical expenses or a first home purchase, or in the event of death, disability or unemployment. Distributions from the LSA at or after age 58 would not be qualified distributions. However, at age 58 or after, taxpayers could roll up to a lifetime total of $100,000 from their LSA to their RSA. Qualified educational expenses would be those expenses defined as qualified expenses for ESAs under section 530(b)(2). Qualified medical expenses would be those expenses defined as Schedule A medical expenses under section 213 (but without regard to the 7.5% of AGI floor). This alternative would be more limited than the proposal but would still offer major simplification benefits relative to current law. This alternative was not chosen as the proposal because the benefits it achieved with regard to simplification and expanding savings choices were not as large as under the LSA/RSA proposal. However, it would likely reduce the problem of competition with employer plans discussed above.

The second alternative would repeal IRA income limits while coordinating IRA and 401(k) contribution limits. For all participants, the combined total of deductible and Roth IRA contributions and 401(k)-type contributions for the year could not exceed the limit on 401(k)-type contributions. Thus, an individual's allowable deductible or Roth IRA contributions would be reduced as 401(k) contributions approached their limit. When fully phased in, the coordinated IRA/401(k) limit under this option would be $15,000, with a maximum IRA contribution of $5,000. Thus, an individual could contribute $15,000 to a 401(k) plan and none to an IRA, or $5,000 to an IRA and up to $10,000 to a 401(k) plan.

This alternative was not chosen as the proposal because the benefits it achieved with regard to simplification and expanding savings choices were not as large as under the LSA/RSA proposal. However, it could be combined with the LSA/RSA proposal, and it would likely reduce the problem of competition with employer plans discussed above.

A Note on Rep. Gephardt's URSA Proposal

Rep. Gephardt introduced H.R. 4482, the Universal and Portable Pension Act of 2002, on April 18, 2002. The bill would create Universal Retirement Savings Accounts (URSAs), prohibit new contributions to IRAs, and expand the tax credit to individuals for retirement savings. The URSA proposal is substantially different from the LSA/RSA proposal, though they share some similar goals.

The LSA/RSA proposal would be significantly simpler and more comprehensive than URSAs. The URSA proposal essentially replaces IRAs with a new system of equal, if not greater, complexity. For example, the URSA proposal contains all of the complicating features of current IRAs, including income limits, age limits, and minimum required distributions.

REV_00146861

The URSA proposal also contains complicated and inconsistent tax treatments. While the LSA/RSA proposal would provide consumption-tax treatment consistently, the URSA tax treatment could resemble that of a traditional IRA, a Roth IRA, or something either better than or worse than these, depending on the income level of the taxpayer when contributing and the use of the distribution.

The URSA proposal also complicates non-retirement savings choices by offering "super" tax treatment for certain specific non-retirement expenses, while doing nothing to simplify existing redundant and confusing non-retirement savings account options.

Finally, the URSA proposal would impose a new mandate on employers, which would complicate their provision of retirement benefits. Imposing new mandates on employers could significantly upset the employer retirement-plan system, which has historically been voluntary. The mandate would require employers to either set up their own URSA as part of a qualified or 457 plan, or establish a system in which each affected employee could direct a portion of his or her pay to an URSA held in a separate financial institution. Either would impose new costs and burdens on employers. The mandate could discourage employers from offering a qualified retirement plan at all.

NORPAC is a pro-Israel group that is in Washington for a day of lobbying. They wanted to talk to Jay about general policy issues, mostly domestic, but probably there will be some Israel too. They won't be lobbying Jay for anything. Any thoughts you have would be appreciated. Thanks.

Attached is the McConnell amendment to terrorism insurance, plus a brief one-pager. The talking points should be self-evident, but it is important to emphasize that these are not traditional suits between a sympathetic plaintiff v. big business defendant. These are victim v. victim lawsuits where we the Ds seek to punish American defendants for the actions of the terrorists. Plus, our criminal liability exception to the punitives ban answers all the Democrats' concerns that we should not let criminal-type conduct go unpunished.

Let me know if you have questions, and also let me know if your boss wants to make a brief floor statement in support. My direct is 4-8292 or I'll be on the floor.

Purpose: To provide for procedures for civil actions, and for other purposes.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES—107th Cong., 2d Sess.

S. 2600

To ensure the continued financial capacity of insurers to provide coverage for risks from terrorism.

Referred to the Committee on _____ and ordered to be printed

Ordered to lie on the table and to be printed

AMENDMENT intended to be proposed by _____

Viz:

On page 29, strike line 1 and all that follows through page 30, line 17, and insert the following:

SEC. 10. PROCEDURES FOR CIVIL ACTIONS.

(a) FEDERAL CAUSE OF ACTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall exist a Federal cause of action for claims arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism, which shall be the exclusive cause of action and remedy for such claims, except as provided in subsection (f).

(2) PREEMPTION OF STATE ACTIONS.—All State causes of action of any kind for claims arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that are otherwise available under State law, are hereby preempted, except as provided in subsection (f).

(b) GOVERNING LAW.—The substantive law for decision in an action described in subsection (a)(1) shall be derived from the law, including applicable choice of law principles, of the State in which the act of terrorism giving rise to the action occurred, except to the extent that—

(1) the law, including choice of law principles, of another State is determined to be applicable to the action by the district court hearing the action; or

(2) otherwise applicable State law (including that determined under paragraph (1), is inconsistent with or otherwise preempted by Federal law.

(c) FEDERAL JURISDICTION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, not later than 90 days after the date of the occurrence of an act of terrorism, the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall assign a single Federal district court to conduct pretrial and trial proceedings in all pending and future civil actions for claims arising out of or resulting from that act of terrorism.

(2) SELECTION CRITERIA.—The Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall select and assign the district court under paragraph (1) based on the convenience of the parties and the just and efficient conduct of the proceedings.

(3) JURISDICTION.—The district court assigned by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall have original and exclusive jurisdiction over all actions under paragraph (1). For purposes of personal jurisdiction, the district court assigned by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation shall be deemed to sit in all judicial districts in the United States.

(4) TRANSFER OF CASES FILED IN OTHER FEDERAL COURTS.—Any civil action for claims arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that is filed in a Federal district court other than the Federal district court assigned by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation under paragraph (1) shall be transferred to the Federal district court so assigned.

(5) REMOVAL OF CASES FILED IN STATE COURTS.—Any civil action for claims arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism that is filed in a State court shall be removable to the Federal district court assigned by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation under paragraph (1).

(d) APPROVAL OF SETTLEMENTS.—Any settlement between the parties of a civil action described in this section for claims arising out of or resulting from an act of terrorism shall be subject to prior approval by the Secretary after consultation by the Secretary with the Attorney General.

(e) LIMITATION ON DAMAGES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Punitive or exemplary damages shall not be available for any losses in any action described in subsection (a)(1), including any settlement described in subsection (d), except where—

(A) punitive or exemplary damages are permitted by applicable State law; and

(B) the harm to the plaintiff was caused by a criminal act or course of conduct for which the defendant was convicted under Federal or State criminal law, including a conviction based on a guilty pea or plea of nolo contendere.

(2) PROTECTION OF TAXPAYER FUNDS.—Any amounts awarded in, or granted in settlement of, an action described in subsection (a)(1) that are attributable to punitive or exemplary damages allowable under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not count as insured losses for purposes of this Act.

(f) CLAIMS AGAINST TERRORISTS.—Nothing in this section shall in any way be construed to limit the ability of any plaintiff to seek any form of recovery from any person, government, or other entity that was a participant in, or aider and abettor of, any act of terrorism.

(g) EFFECTIVE PERIOD.—This section shall apply only to actions described in subsection (a)(1) arising out of or resulting from acts of terrorism that occur during the effective period of the Program, including any applicable extension period.

Terrorism Reinsurance Litigation Provisions

Major Concepts of proposed liability provisions for underlying bill

---

- Jurisdiction and Venue
  - Federal court jurisdiction for claims arising out of an act of terrorism.
  - Preemption of state causes of action.
  - Consolidation of cases in a federal district court designated by the Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation/removal to federal court; removal of cases filed in state court.
- Settlements – Must be approved by the Secretary of Treasury after consultation with the Attorney General.
- Punitive damages
  - No punitive damages against the United States Treasury.
  - To the extent punitive damages are permitted by applicable State law, punitive damages may be recovered against a defendant in a civil action involving an act of terrorism only if the harm to the plaintiff arose out of a criminal act or course of conduct for which the defendant was convicted under Federal or State criminal law, including a conviction based on a guilty plea or plea of nolo contendere.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT
OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20503

June 13, 2002
(Senate)

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

(THIS STATEMENT HAS BEEN COORDINATED BY OMB WITH THE CONCERNED AGENCIES.)

S. 2600 - Terrorism Risk Insurance Act of 2002

(Sen. Dodd (D) Connecticut and 4 cosponsors)

The Administration strongly supports the creation of a terrorism risk insurance program that will help provide much needed stability to our economy. The backstop insurance program that would be established by S. 2600 is an effective mechanism for ensuring the continued availability of insurance for terrorist-related acts. The program would aid the economy by ensuring that businesses and properties are able to spread risk efficiently by providing access to a well-functioning private insurance market. Increased availability of insurance would help many sectors of the economy. For example, it would facilitate the financing of new construction and avoid the risk of further ratings downgrades of securities that are collateralized by inadequately insured properties. It would also put in place a system for processing claims and establishing the scope of the Federal government's obligation in the payment of losses in the event of another attack, which would help mitigate adverse economic consequences resulting from a future attack.

However, the Administration cannot support enactment of any terrorism insurance bill that leaves the Nation's economy and victims of terrorist acts subject to predatory lawsuits and punitive damages. Any bill must, at a minimum, contain provisions for an exclusive Federal cause of action and a consolidation of all cases arising out of a terrorist event, and exclude punitive damages in such mass tort terrorism cases (except against a terrorist or aider or abettor). These reasonable litigation procedures, as included in the November 1st bipartisan agreement among Chairmen Sarbanes and Dodd and Senators Gramm and Enzi, are an essential element of any terrorism insurance bill. For many companies facing rising insurance, a significant part of the increased costs results from the risk of litigation, which introduces a significant degree of uncertainty to insurers' assessments of potential losses from a terrorist attack. Sensible litigation procedures will also ensure an orderly process that will help resolve claims more expeditiously and preserve the limited pool of defendant resources for claims by a potentially large number of injured parties, thereby benefitting plaintiffs and defendants alike.

Section 6(h) of S. 2600 relating to Comptroller General access to information would be construed in a manner consistent with constitutional provisions relating to the separation of powers. Section 10 of S. 2600 does not, and should not, affect existing U.S. law regarding the immunities of foreign sovereigns.

At the SJC markup today, Sen. Leahy made the following statements:

Noted at the beginning that there were more Dem Senators present than GOP Senators; commented on the irony that more Dem Senators there than GOP Senators to help get President's nominees moved to the floor.
Said that after today's hearing, SJC will have given hearings to 75 judicial nominees in 11 months -- an all-time record he claimed.
Said that he has a publicly-listed phone number in case anyone from the White House ever wants to talk to him about judicial confirmations.

Also, Godbey cleared by voice vote -- so no negative votes were recorded.

FYI. NAIC letters supporting legislation and expressing concerns about the Nelson amendment.

I assume we opposed Nelson. Treasury never received the text of the amendment. I have asked our legislative affairs operation to assist in tracking down possible amendments and getting us text. Matt -- I'm sure you will welcome the help!

The Honorable Tom Daschle
Majority Leader
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

The Honorable Trent Lott
Minority Leader
United States Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Leaders Daschle and Lott:

On behalf of the Nation's insurance regulators, I strongly urge the Senate to quickly pass legislation that will make terrorism insurance affordable and available to all American consumers and businesses. Since the attacks of September 11th, the state insurance commissioners and the NAIC have worked diligently to monitor the health and solvency of the insurance marketplace, instill confidence in our insurance institutions, and calm the concerns of the insurance buying public.

As we have indicated to you previously, much has transpired since September 11th to renew our confidence in the insurance markets. Regulators continue to believe that over time, the markets will be able to further adjust to the new realities of terrorism risk. To date, however, reinsurance is not readily available. Where it is available it is not always affordable.

We are seeing lingering problems in the marketplace that hold consequences for all insurance consumers. For the sake of company solvency, state regulators are providing exclusions in certain lines of commercial property and casualty insurance to mitigate insurer exposure to potentially unmanageable financial risks. The net effect of these exclusions is to shift the immediate financial burden from insurers to policyholders, large and small companies alike.

Without effective action by Congress, we foresee a continued period of market uncertainty the consequences of which will ~~impact insurance~~impact insurance consumers nationwide with workers' compensation being a prime concern. For instance, we are seeing a fundamental shift in insurance industry underwriting practices to limit risk exposure. Some insurers are non-renewing coverage for workers' compensation and other lines of commercial property/casualty insurance products essential to our nation's workforce and the smooth operation of our economy. These actions hold real consequences for the insurance buying public, even in communities untouched by terrorist attacks.

For these reasons, we continue to strongly believe federal terrorism insurance legislation is immediately needed. A narrowly tailored and time-limited federal law can bring certainty to the market and calm consumer fears. Please let us know if we can assist your work in any way.

Sincerely,

Terri Vaughan
Commissioner of Insurance, Iowa

June 13, 2002

The Honorable Chris Dodd
US Senate
Washington, DC 20510

Dear Senator Dodd:

I am writing to respond to your request regarding the amendment offered by Senator Nelson of Florida regarding terrorism insurance rates.

While the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (NAIC) has not taken a formal position on the Nelson proposal, I do believe state regulators would have the following concerns:

- To our knowledge, the Treasury Department does not have the infrastructure needed to monitor insurance rates as the amendment proposes. -Putting such a monitoring mechanism in place could be cost prohibitive particularly when the underlying federal legislation is short-term in nature;
- The provisions on refunds of premiums would be very difficult to enforce. Given the uncertainty of risk and the lack of pricing experience, the revised rates could be attributable to a host of other factors related to past or prospective loss cost (the cost of reinsurance, or poor return on investments in recent months), not the potential or historical acts of terrorism, but rather to past and prospective loss costs;
- The separate accounting could cause reporting difficulties and added expense for insurers, insurance regulators, and presumably the Treasury Department. The marginal benefits and costs associated with collecting the information could outweigh the benefits that could be derived from the information. For instance, Section (b) requires a separate account for the "premium increases" and it cannot be used for anything but to pay for terrorism losses. There is no discussion about what happens to the funds after the law sunsets.
- At this time, state regulators already have the ability to address this issue, making additional federal oversight unnecessary.

I hope this responds to your concerns.

Sincerely,

Terri Vaughan
Commissioner of Insurance, Iowa
President, NAIC

Brett, once again, if you do decide to open the Bush VP stuff tomorrow, please let Jason and/or Nancy know. We have a revised media announcement ready, in the event that you plan to make a media announcement about it. If you don't plan to do so, then we would be inclined not to either, but then could send Scott Nelson a letter informing him about this in a way that answers all of his other questions as well. HR 4070, the "Social Security Program Protection Act of 2002" (Shaw), is expected to be considered on Tuesday under suspension of the rules.

By 1:30 pm today, please provide your recommendation regarding whether or not a SAP should be sent. Thank you.

(3) in paragraph (1)(A)(iii), by striking the period at the end and inserting a comma;

(4) by inserting after paragraph (1)(A)(iii) the following:

''(iv) is fleeing to avoid prosecution, or custody or confinement after conviction, under the laws of the place from which the person flees, for a crime, or an attempt to commit a crime, which is a felony under the laws of the place from which the person flees, or which, in the case of the State of New Jersey, is a high misdemeanor under the laws of such State, or

"(v) is violating a condition of probation or parole imposed under Federal or State law.

In the case of an individual from whom such monthly benefits have been withheld pursuant to clause (iv), the Commissioner may, for good cause shown, pay such withheld benefits to the individual."; and

(5) in paragraph (3), by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 552a of title 5, United States Code, or any other provision of Federal or State law (other than section 6103 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and section 1106(c) of this Act), the Commissioner shall furnish any Federal, State, or local law enforcement officer, upon the written request of the officer, with the current address, Social Security number, and photograph (if applicable) of any beneficiary under this title, if the officer furnishes the Commissioner with the name of the beneficiary, and other identifying information as reasonably required by the Commissioner to establish the unique identity of the beneficiary, and notifies the Commissioner that—

"(i) the beneficiary—

"(I) is described in clause (iv) or (v) of paragraph (1)(A); and

"(II) has information that is necessary for the officer to conduct the officer's official duties; and

"(ii) the location or apprehension of the beneficiary is within the officer's official duties.".

(b) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Social Security shall promulgate regulations governing payment by the Commissioner, for good cause shown, of withheld benefits, pursuant to the last sentence of section 202(x)(1)(A) of the Social Security Act (as amended by subsection (a)).

SEC. 203. REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO OFFERS TO PROVIDE FOR A FEE A PRODUCT OR SERVICE AVAILABLE WITHOUT CHARGE FROM THE SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1140 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320b–10) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4)(A) No person shall offer, for a fee, to assist an individual to obtain a product or service that the person knows or should know is provided free of charge by the Social Security Administration unless, at the time the offer is made, the person provides to the individual to whom the offer is tendered a notice that—

"(i) explains that the product or service is available free of charge from the Social Security Administration, and

"(ii) complies with standards prescribed by the Commissioner of Social Security respecting content of such notice and its placement, visibility, and legibility.

"(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply to any offer—

"(i) to serve as a claimant representative in connection with a claim arising under title II, title VIII, or title XVI; or

"(ii) to prepare, or assist in the preparation of, an individual's plan for achieving self-support under title XVI."; and

(2) in the heading, by striking "PROHIBITION OF MISUSE OF SYMBOLS, EMBLEMS, OR NAMES IN REFERENCE" and inserting "PROHIBITIONS RELATING TO REFERENCES".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to offers of assistance made after the sixth month ending after the Commissioner of Social Security promulgates final regulations prescribing the standards applicable to the notice required to be provided in connection with such offer. The Commissioner shall promulgate such final regulations within one year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 204. REFUSAL TO RECOGNIZE CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS AS CLAIMANT REPRESENTATIVES.

Section 206(a)(1) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 406(a)(1)) is amended by inserting after the second sentence the following: ''Notwithstanding the preceding sentences, the Commissioner (A) may refuse to recognize as a representative, and may disqualify a representative already recognized, any attorney who has been disbarred or suspended from any court or bar to which he or she was previously admitted to practice or who has been disqualified from participating in or appearing before any Federal program or agency, and (B) may refuse to recognize, and may disqualify, as a non-attorney representative any attorney who has been disbarred or suspended from any court or bar to which he or she was previously admitted to practice. A representative who has been disqualified or suspended pursuant to this section from appearing before the Social Security Administration as a result of collecting or receiving a fee in excess of the amount authorized shall be barred from appearing before the Social Security Administration as a representative until full restitu-

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 206(d)(2)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 406(d)(2)(A)) is amended by inserting '', except that the maximum amount of the assessment may not exceed $100'' after ''subparagraph (B)''.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply with respect to fees for representation of claimants which are first required to be certified or paid under section 206 of the Social Security Act on or after the first day of the first month that begins after 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 302. EXTENSION OF ATTORNEY FEE PAYMENT SYSTEM TO TITLE XVI CLAIMS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1631(d)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1383(d)(2)) is amended—

(1) in the matter in subparagraph (A) preceding clause (i)—

(A) by striking "section 206(a)" and inserting "section 206";

(B) by striking "(other than paragraph (4) thereof)" and inserting "(other than subsections (a)(4) and (d) thereof); and

(C) by striking "paragraph (2) thereof" and inserting "such section";

(2) in subparagraph (A)(i), by striking "in subparagraphs (A)(ii)(I) and (C)(i)," and inserting "in subparagraphs (A)(ii)(I) and (D)(i) of subsection (a)(2)", and by striking "and" at the end;

(3) by striking subparagraph (A)(ii) and inserting the following:

"(ii) by substituting, in subsections (a)(2)(B) and (b)(1)(B)(i), the phrase 'section 1631(a)(7)(A) or the requirements of due process of law' for the phrase 'subsection (g) or (h) of section 223';

"(iii) by substituting, in subsection (a)(2)(C)(i), the phrase 'under title II' for the phrase 'under title XVI';

"(iv) by substituting, in subsection (b)(1)(A), the phrase 'pay the amount of such fee' for the phrase 'certify the amount of such fee for payment' and by striking, in subsection (b)(1)(A), the phrase 'or certified for payment'; and

"(v) by substituting, in subsection (b)(1)(B)(ii), the phrase 'deemed to be such amounts as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1631(g), and reduced by the amount of any reduction in benefits under this title or title II made pursuant to section 1127(a)' for the phrase 'determined before any applicable reduction under section 1127(a))'."; and

(4) by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) Subject to subparagraph (C), if the claimant is determined to be entitled to past-due benefits under this title and the person representing the claimant is an attorney, the Commissioner of Social Security shall pay out of such past-due benefits to such attorney an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(i) so much of the maximum fee as does not exceed 25 percent of such past-due benefits (as determined before any applicable reduction under section 1631(g) and reduced by the amount of any reduction in benefits under this title or title II pursuant to section 1127(a)), or

"(ii) the amount of past-due benefits available after any applicable reductions under sections 1631(g) and 1127(a).

"(C)(i) Whenever a fee for services is required to be paid to an attorney from a claimant's past-due benefits pursuant to subparagraph (B), the Commissioner shall impose on the attorney an assessment calculated in accordance with clause (ii).

"(ii)(I) The amount of an assessment under clause (i) shall be equal to the product obtained by multiplying the amount of the representative's fee that would be required to be paid by subparagraph (B) before the application of this subparagraph, by the percentage specified in subclause (II), except that the maximum amount of the assessment may not exceed $100.

"(II) The percentage specified in this subclause is such percentage rate as the Commissioner determines is necessary in order to achieve full recovery of the costs of determining and approving fees to attorneys from the past-due benefits of claimants, but not in excess of 6.3 percent.

"(iii) The Commissioner may collect the assessment imposed on an attorney under clause (i) by offset from the amount of the fee otherwise required by subparagraph (B) to be paid to the attorney from a claimant's past-due benefits.

"(iv) An attorney subject to an assessment under clause (i) may not, directly or indirectly, request or otherwise obtain reimbursement for such assessment from the claimant whose claim gave rise to the assessment.

"(v) Assessments on attorneys collected under this subparagraph shall be deposited in the Treasury in a separate fund created for this purpose.

"(vi) The assessments authorized under this subparagraph shall be collected and available for obligation only to the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations Acts. Amounts so appropriated are authorized to remain available until expended, for administrative expenses in carrying out this title and related laws.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to fees for representation of claimants which are first required to be certified or paid under section 1631(d)(2) of the Social Security Act on or after the first day of the first month that begins after 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) REPORT TO THE CONGRESS.—The Commissioner of Social Security, after consulting with representatives of affected beneficiaries and other interested persons, shall prepare a report evaluating the feasibility of extending to non-attorney representatives the fee withholding procedures that apply under titles II and XVI of the Social Security Act for the payment of attorney fees. The Commissioner shall submit the report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate no later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and the Commissioner shall include in such report any recommendations that the Commissioner considers appropriate.

Summary of Changes Reflected in Shaw Amendment in the Nature of a Substitute to H.R. 4070
Social Security Program Protection Act of 2002
April 24, 2002

Title I, Protection of Beneficiaries

Section 103, Disqualification from Service as Representative Payee upon Conviction of Offenses Resulting in Imprisonment for more than 1 year and upon Fugitive Felon Status. Adds that the Commissioner, in consultation with the Inspector General, shall submit to Congress a report evaluating the procedures and reviews for the qualification (and disqualification) of representative payees. (page 22, line 19 through page 23, line 7)

Title II, Program Protections

Section 201, Civil Monetary Penalty Authority with respect to Knowing Withholding of Material Facts. Adds a requirement that the Commissioner provide a receipt or other written acknowledgement to a beneficiary when he or she reports a change in work or earnings status. (page 36, line 22 through page 37, line 5) Adds clarifying language that a civil monetary penalty may be assessed against a person for failing to disclose to the Commissioner information that is material to a determination of the initial or continuing eligibility or amount of benefits. (page 33, lines 15-20 and page 35, lines 11-16).

Section 202, Disqualification from Eligibility for Trial Work Period upon Criminal, Civil, or Administrative Funding of Fraudulent Concealment of Work Activity. Deleted.

Title III, Attorney Fee Payment System Improvements

Section 302, Extension of attorney fee payment system to title XVI claims. Clarifies that the reimbursement of States for their "interim assistance" precedes the withholding of attorney fees from the past-due benefits. (page 45, lines 11-25) Adds that the Commissioner shall prepare and submit to Congress a report on the feasibility of extending the fee withholding process to the fees of non-attorney representatives. (page 47, line 19 through page 48, line 6)

Section 303, Effective Date of Title. Deleted. The effective date for Section 301 is moved to Section 301(b) and remains at 180 days. The effective date for Section 302 is moved to Section 302(b) and has been changed from 180 to 270 days. (page 43, lines 14-19, and page 47, lines 13-18)

Title IV, Miscellaneous and Technical Amendments

Section 416, Optional Methods for Computing Net Earnings from Self-Employment. Deleted.

In addition, technical amendments are made to several sections of the bill.

Compilation of HR 4070 Subcommittee "Chairman's Mark" Technical Edits That are Not in Green Sheet

Section 101	Page 5	Made technical amendment in (b)(3).
Section 102	Pages 11 and 14 Pages 11-12 Pages 12-13 and 14-15	Added in (6)(A) and (k)(1) a reference to other reviews that the Commissioner may conduct. Limited Title II onsite reviews to payees "located in the United States". Expanded the congressional report to include other reviews that the Commissioner may conduct.
Section 105	Page 27	Made technical correction in (c)(1) to cross referenced paragraph (9).
Section 201	Pages 33 and 35	Made conforming amendment in (C) and (3) to refer to "person" rather than "individual" to reflect existing Section 1129/1129A references.
Section 202 (was Section 203 in HR 4070 as introduced)	Page 37 Page 38/39	Replaced "(iv)" with the parallel felony-reference language from the existing Title XVI provision – Section 1611(e)(4). Added requirement that Commissioner issue regulations on the "good cause" exception to the fugitive felon bar on Title II benefits.

Section 404	Page 52	Added a (b)(2) amendment that expands Ticket advocacy payments under Section 1150(b)(2) to include action to "maintain" employment as well as "secure" and "regain" it.
Section 413 (was Section 414 in HR 4070 as introduced)	Pages 54-55	Deleted the "(C)" report from 1996 Seniors Right to Work Act, because this report was not subject to the 1995 Reports Elimination and Sunset Act, and thus does not need to be reinstated.
Section 414 (was Section 415 in HR 4070 as introduced)	Page 56	Corrected effective date.
Section 415 (was Section 416 in HR 4070 as introduced)	Page 59	Added "(c)" that is a conforming amendment.
Section 434(a)(5)	Page 61/62	Deleted "or (1)(E)" to reflect Section 412

yes, it is very important to keep in mind that there are 2 separate issues here (even though we discuss them together). The first issue is the proper program for compensating victims of terrorism (i.e., PSOB model or 9/11 model). The second issue is whether frozen assets should be available to satisfy judgments received by plaintiffs in cases against foreign states/entities.

Is the Allen amendment the same as the Harkin-Allen bill (S. 2134)? That proposal (at least as originally introduced) involved frozen assets and did not involve use of taxpayer funds to compensate victims.

This call had to be moved to Monday the 17th. The call will still be at 6:00 with the same call-in info.

Marc will be briefing the President on Tuesday, so he would like the call before he goes to the President.

Thanks,

Respectfully, I need to non-concur on this one. WHCA personnel only discharge functions which are official, whether they are telecommunications functions, or non-telecommunications functions reimbursed under P.L. 104-201, Sec. 912(b) (10 U.S.C. 111, note), which provides:

(b) Other Support.--Support services other than telecommunications support services described in subsection (a) may be provided by the Department of Defense for the President through the White House Communications Agency on a reimbursable basis.

As far as I am aware, the only cost allocation for political activities that takes place is for officials and staff who are allowed under Federal law to engage in political activities at work. A subset of these individuals are people--including the President--who need to travel on Government airplanes for any purpose, whether official or personal, for Government reasons. Since WHMO (including WHCA) staff are not engaged in political activities in conjunction with their work, there is no need to seek reimbursement from the political party of the President to prevent the appearance that the political party is being inappropriately enriched by their discharge of their duties. This also applies to the Secret Service, as well as OA staff who may be assigned to provide official support during Presidential trips. I have confirmed this position with WHMO Counsel, who coordinated with counsel for OSD.

Adam,

WHCA non-telco folks support all Presidential travel including mixed trips. All of their travel expenses for these trips are fully reimbursed from the WHO appropriation. It is our opinion that their expenses should be treated like any others incurred by WHO staff and split per the trip summary between official and political. In other words, for a trip that was deemed 50 percent official and 50 percent political, we would seek RNC reimbursement for half of the WHCA non-telco travel expenses that were incurred.

Please reply whether you concur with this opinion.

Thanks,
Eric

What a sensible man. It's remarkable than no one else joined the opinion. If an expert advisory group had come up with the ordinance, at least he would have gotten Breyer.

Of course, because CA4 is so closely divided, a case will rarely go en banc in the first place unless Luttig and Wilkinson are in agreement.

Hi Kim,

Dan Chenok has asked me to run this one by you one more time just to make sure that White House Council doesn't wish a last review. They reviewed once and it is ready for OIRA clearance as a final rule unless I hear otherwise from you. The RMO has also reviewed and ok'd. Thanks. Please call if you would like to discuss.

Jacke,

We are faxing the attached signed final rule to the OIRA Docket Library this afternoon for OMB review under EO 12866. There were no comments received on the proposed rule and the final rule is unchanged. We would appreciate an expedited review if at all possible so that we can publish the rule before the cutoff of our CFR volume July 1. (Ideally, we'd like to publish by next Friday, but that is not realistic.)

Thanks

BILLING CODE 7515-01U

NATIONAL ARCHIVES AND RECORDS ADMINISTRATION

36 CFR Part 1275

RIN 3095-AB07

Nixon Presidential Materials; Reproduction

AGENCY: National Archives and Records Administration (NARA).

ACTION: Final rule.

SUMMARY: NARA is revising the regulations for obtaining copies of the Nixon White House tape recordings, which are in NARA custody. First, NARA is now allowing the public to obtain copies of all Nixon White House tape recordings after they are officially released to the public. Previously, NARA only permitted the public to obtain selected tape recordings. Second, the ban on self-service copying of these tapes is lifted. These changes reflect modifications in the 1996 Nixon Tapes Settlement Agreement that became effective April 1, 2001. This final rule will apply to the public.

EFFECTIVE DATE: [INSERT 30 DAYS AFTER PUBLICATION IN THE FEDERAL REGISTER].

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Kim Richardson at telephone number 301-837-2902, or fax number 301-837-0319.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: The proposed rule was published in the March 15, 2002, Federal Register (67 FR 11632) for a 60-day comment period. NARA did not receive any comments. This rule is a significant regulatory action for the purposes of Executive Order 12866 and has been reviewed by the Office of Management and Budget. As required by the Regulatory Flexibility Act, I certify that this rule will not have a significant impact on a substantial number of small entities. This regulation does not have any federalism implications.

REV_00147265

List of Subjects in 36 CFR Part 1275

Archives and records.

For the reasons set forth in the preamble, NARA amends part 1275 of title 36, Code of Federal Regulations, as follows:

PART 1275 – PRESERVATION AND PROTECTION OF AND ACCESS TO THE PRESIDENTIAL HISTORICAL MATERIALS OF THE NIXON ADMINISTRATION

1. The authority citation for part 1275 is revised to read as follows:

Authority: 44 U.S.C. 2104, 2111 note.

2. Amend §1275.64 by revising paragraph (d) to read as follows:

§ 1275.64 Reproduction of tape recordings of Presidential conversations.

* * * * *

(d) The reproduction for members of the public of the reference copies of the available tape recordings described in paragraph (a) of this section will be permitted as follows: Copies of tape recordings will be made available following the public release of the tape segments contemplated in §1275.42(a). Effective as of April 20, 2001, NARA will allow members of the public to obtain copies of all tapes that have been made available to the public by that date and that subsequently become available as they are released. Such copying will be controlled by NARA or its designated contractor. The fees for the reproduction of the tape recordings under this section shall be those prescribed in the schedule set forth in part 1258 of this chapter.

* * * * *

3. Amend §1275.66 by revising paragraph (a) to read as follows:

§1275.66 Reproduction and authentication of other materials.

(a) Copying of materials, including tape recordings described in §1275.64, may be done by NARA, by a contractor designated by NARA, or by researchers using self-service copiers or copying equipment.

* * * * *

4. Amend Appendix A to Part 1275 -- Settlement Agreement, by revising the introductory paragraph to read as follows:

APPENDIX A TO PART 1275 -- SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT

Settlement Agreement filed April 12, 1996, in Stanley I. Kutler and Public Citizen v. John W. Carlin, Archivist of the United States, and William E. Griffin and John H. Taylor, Co-executors of Richard M. Nixon's Estate, Civil Action No. 92-0662-NHJ (D.D.C.) (Johnson, J.). By letter dated April 17, 2001, NARA and the Nixon estate agreed to waive paragraph 11 of this Settlement Agreement, such that the delay on public copying until January 1, 2003, of tapes not made publicly available before April 12, 1996, shall no longer apply. This change is reflected in 36 CFR 1275.64.

Phil, Brett, David, Tony and Anne -- Attached for your review, comments, edits and suggestions is an initial draft MOU designed to help in the segregation and protection of WHO records to the extent they are reviewed by employees working in the OMB office established by executive order for DHS transition planning. It is modeled on a similar MOU utilized during the Reagan Administration between the WHO and OA, which, like OMB, is susceptible to certain FOIA disclosures. I would ask that you transmit any comments you have directly to OHS Deputy Counsel Robert Delahunty at the above e-mail address.
Many thanks -- Ed

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING:
White House Documents, Records, Files and Similar Materials
Made Available to the Office of Transition Planning
For the Department of Homeland Security

This Memorandum of Understanding sets forth restrictions governing the possession, custody, access, use, ownership and control of any documents, records, files and similar materials (including information contained therein) that the White House Office (WHO) makes available to the Office of Transition Planning for the Department of Homeland Security (OTP) in connection with OTP's discharge of its missions under Executive Order [--] (June 18, 2002).

Because of the sensitivity and confidentiality of the materials that WHO makes available to OTP, WHO intends to exercise control over the materials and over copies of the materials, including materials or copies temporarily maintained in OPT files. Accordingly, the following conditions shall be observed:

I. Ownership

It is understood that WHO is and shall remain the exclusive owner of all White House materials and copies of such materials and that OTP shall not exercise any proprietary interest in White House materials or in copies thereof that is inconsistent with this exclusive ownership.

II. White House Materials to be Labeled

All White House materials made available to OTP by WHO shall be labeled "White House Material: Sensitive and Confidential."

III. Restrictions on Availability to and within OTP

White House materials shall be made available to OTP only to the extent necessary to enable it to execute its missions under Executive Order [] and for no other purposes.

White House materials shall be made available only to OTP employees who have been designated in writing by the Director of OTP. [The Director may further restrict certain unusually sensitive White House materials, or categories of White House materials, to particular designated OTP employees.] OTP employees having White House materials in their custody shall promptly return them to their point of origin in the WHO when the materials are no longer needed and in active use for authorized OTP functions.

IV. Files

In no case may any White House materials made available to OTP by the WHO, or copies of such materials, be retained in the files of OTP, other than on a temporary basis.

V. Restrictions on Availability to Third Parties

OTP shall not, without the express [written] consent of [the Director of OTP/the WHO], permit any person other than authorized OTP personnel or WHO employees to have access to, or to obtain possession, custody, or use of, any White House material, or copies of such material, or any information contained within such material.

VI. Restrictions on Copying of White House Materials

Employees of OTP may not copy White House materials [except for the internal use of OTP] without the approval and direction of [the Director of OTP/the WHO].

VII. Requests for Copies of or Access to White House Materials

In any case in which OTP receives a request for a copy of or access to White House materials, OTP shall inform the requester that the materials are under the control of the WHO and that the requester should make a written request to the WHO, attention [name/title/address], setting forth the reason for the request. If the requester has relied on the Freedom of Information Aact in making the request, OTP shall inform the requester that the materials are ~~report is~~ not ~~an~~ agency records for purposes of that Act.

Dear Sirs:

Your June 12 story "'We Should Have Known,' Goss Says of 9/11," inaccurately reported that Richard A. Clarke, currently the Assistant to the President for Cyberspace Security and formerly a senior adviser to President Clinton on terrorism, "testified for several hours" as the "first outside witness" to the joint congressional committee examining the September 11 attacks.

Mr. Clarke provided an informal briefing to members of the joint committee, but he was not a witness and did not testify to the committee. It has been the longstanding practice of the Executive Branch to decline congressional requests for testimony by members of the President's personal staff with respect to performance of their official duties. As a matter of separation of powers, Congress may not compel the President or his senior advisors to testify before it on the performance of their duties.

Sincerely,

Alberto R. Gonzales

Tort Terrorism (WSJ)
Editorial
The Wall Street Journal, June 20, 2002 Either he's a good actor or Mitch McConnell was genuinely amazed by the way the trial-lawyer lobby dictated terms to Senate Democrats on this week's terrorism insurance vote.
"I've been here 18 years and I can say with total confidence that there's no special interest that completely owns, lock stock, the Republican conference," the GOP Senator told us

yesterday. "But, by golly, I think the Democrats in the Senate are a wholly owned subsidiary of ATLA [the Association of Trial Lawyers of America]. They ought to be embarrassed."
These ruminations on the increasingly weird captivity of the Daschle Democrats by the lawsuit industry come after a party-line vote on an amendment to impose modest limits on trial lawyers after a terrorist attack. Naturally, it was defeated thanks to manic arm-twisting by Majority Leader Tom Daschle and Senator John Edwards (himself a trial lawyer with White House aspirations).
Not a single Democrat broke ranks, not even those with strong insurance-industry ties (Senators Chris Dodd and Joe Lieberman) or a record of griping publicly about their party's beholdenness to the plaintiffs' bar (Senator Tom Carper).
The bill now faces reconciliation with a House version that includes strict lawsuit curbs.
Barring a miracle (or another terrorist attack), the Democrats won't let a law be enacted or will send the President something to test his vow to veto any bill that would turn the next terrorist attack into a trial-lawyer feeding frenzy. Either way, the Senate Democrats will have lain themselves flat for their lawyer patrons in return for campaign dollars with which to fight the battle for Senate control this fall.
So far the toll has been bearable, but unseen costs are being felt in the form of projects that aren't getting done and property values depressed by the lack of insurance for "trophy" zones where insurers fear to tread. Everyone knows that, by default, the taxpayer is on the hook for another catastrophic attack. A bill would at this point merely provide certainty and specificity -- and a welcome spur to confidence.
But for doing its duty, the government shouldn't open the Treasury to predatory lawyers.
Such lawsuits wouldn't target the terrorists but their victims, property owners and insurers, who under our whacked-out system might be deemed liable for punitive damages because they placed their buildings in the path of a hijacked jet.
What passes for reasoning on the Democratic side was blathered by Senator Pat Leahy of Vermont, who said: "Without the threat of punitive damages, the corporation can decide it's more cost-effective to continue cutting corners despite the risk to American lives." You'd think on September 11 a consensus was born on who the real enemy is. But for 50 out of 50 Senate Democrats it's apparently still the private sector.
Moody's is reviewing for possible downgrade bonds that back up such high-profile Big Apple properties as Rockefeller Center, Citigroup Center and the Marriott hotel in Times Square. GMAC, supervisor of a $100 billion portfolio of commercial mortgages, has sent out letters giving property owners two weeks to come up with adequate terrorism coverage or risk being declared in default.
If this continues, the pain is going to be felt in the wallets of workers as new buildings don't get built and downtowns empty out for lack of insurance. And all because Democrats see a higher priority in keeping the lawyers happy than in meeting what all grown-ups realize is the government's residual responsibility for terrorism disasters that the insurance industry simply doesn't have and can't raise the capital to cover.

The stakes here go beyond insurance to whether our two-party system is turning into the trial lawyers vs.everybody else. Mr. Bush owes the country a speech on tort reform anyway. He ought to connect the dots to homeland defense and the importance of adjusting the economy to live with the risks of an extended war against terrorism.

I am NOT prepared to authorize a search of Vice Presidential communications based on a bunch of e-mails from folks I do not know. If someone at the Secret Service wishes to have me authorize such a search, I expect to receive a letter from the General Counsel of the Secret Service explaining (1) the need for the search, (2) the legal authority for the request, and (3) the requested parameters for the search. It is my desire to cooperate with all proper Secret Service investigations, but they must be properly requested and documented. Assigning Liability: Insurers' Missteps Helped Provoke Malpractice
`Crisis' --- Lawsuits Alone Didn't Cause
Premiums to Skyrocket; Earlier Price War a Factor --- Delivering Ms.
Kline's Baby
By Rachel Zimmerman and Christopher Oster

As medical-malpractice premiums skyrocket in about a dozen states across the country, obstetricians and doctors in other risky specialties, such as neurosurgery, are moving, quitting or retiring. Insurers and many doctors blame the problem on rising jury awards in liability lawsuits.

"The real sickness is people sue at the drop of a hat, judgments are going up and up and up, and the people getting rich out of this are the plaintiffs' attorneys," says David Golden of the National Association of Independent Insurers, a trade group. The American Medical Association says Florida, Nevada, New York, Pennsylvania and eight other states face a "crisis" because "the legal system produces multimillion-dollar jury awards on a regular basis."

But while malpractice litigation has a big effect on premiums, insurers' pricing and accounting practices have played an equally important role. Following a cycle that recurs in many parts of the business, a price war that began in the early 1990s led insurers to sell malpractice coverage to obstetrician-gynecologists at rates that proved inadequate to cover claims.

Some of these carriers had rushed into malpractice coverage because an accounting practice widely used in the industry made the area seem more profitable in the early 1990s than it really was. A decade of short-sighted price slashing led to industry losses of nearly $3 billion last year.

"I don't like to hear insurance-company executives say it's the tort [injury-law] system -- it's self-inflicted," says Donald J. Zuk, chief executive of Scpie Holdings Inc., a leading malpractice insurer in California.

What's more, the litigation statistics most insurers trumpet are incomplete. The statistics come from Jury Verdict Research, a Horsham, Pa., information service, which reports that since 1994, jury awards for medical-malpractice cases have jumped 175%, to a median of $1 million in 2000. During that seven-year period, the median award for negligence in childbirth was $2,050,000 -- the highest for all types of medical-malpractice cases, Jury Verdict Research says. (In any group of figures, half fall above the median, and half fall below.)

But Jury Verdict Research says its 2,951-case malpractice database has large gaps. It collects award information unsystematically, and it can't say how many cases it misses. It says it can't calculate the percentage change in the median for childbirth-negligence cases. More important, the database excludes trial victories by doctors and hospitals -- verdicts that are worth zero dollars. That's a lot to ignore. Doctors and hospitals win about 62% of the time, Jury Verdict Research says. A separate database on settlements is less comprehensive.

A spokesman for Jury Verdict Research, Gary Bagin, confirms these and other holes in its statistics. He says the numbers nevertheless accurately reflect trends. The company, which sells its data to all comers, has reported jury information this way since 1961. "If we changed now, people looking back historically couldn't compare apples to apples," Mr. Bagin says.

Some doctors are beginning to acknowledge that the conventional focus on jury awards deflects attention from the insurance industry's behavior. The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists for the first time is conceding that carriers' business practices have contributed to the current problem, says Alice Kirkman, a spokeswoman for the professional group. "We are admitting it's a much more complex problem than we have previously talked about," she says.

The upshot is beyond dispute: Pregnant women across the country are scrambling for medical attention. Kimberly Maugaotega of Las Vegas is 13 weeks pregnant and hasn't seen an obstetrician. When she learned she was expecting, the 33-year-old mother of two called the doctor who delivered her second child but was told he wasn't taking any new pregnant patients. Dr. Shelby Wilbourn plans to leave Nevada because of soaring medical-malpractice insurance rates there. Ms. Maugaotega says she called 28 obstetricians but couldn't find one who would take her.

Frustrated, she called the office of Nevada Gov. Kenny Guinn. A staff member gave her yet another name. She made an appointment to see that doctor today but says she is skeptical about the quality of care she will receive.

In the Las Vegas area, doctors say some 90 obstetricians have stopped accepting new patients since St. Paul Cos., formerly the country's leading provider of malpractice coverage, quit the business in December. St. Paul had insured more than half of Nevada's 240 obstetricians. Carriers still offering coverage in the state have raised rates by 100% to 400%, physicians say.

Dr. Wilbourn says his annual malpractice premium was due to jump to $108,000 next month, from $33,000. The 41-year-old solo practitioner says the increase would come straight out of his take-home pay of between $150,000 and $200,000 a year. In response, he is moving to Maine this summer.

Dr. Wilbourn mourns having "to pick up and leave the patients I cared for and the practice I built up over 12 years."
But in Maine, he has found a $200,000-a-year position with an insurance premium of only $9,800 for the first year, although the rate rises significantly after that. Premiums in Maine are relatively low because a dominant doctor-owned insurance cooperative there hasn't pushed to maximize rates, the heavily rural population isn't notably litigious and its court system employs an expert panel to screen out some suits, says Insurance Commissioner Alessandro Iuppa.

Until the 1970s, few doctors faced big-dollar suits. Malpractice coverage was a small specialty. As courts expanded liability rules, malpractice suits became more common. Dozens of doctor-owned insurance cooperatives, or "bedpan mutuals," formed in response. Most stuck to their home states.

St. Paul, a mid-sized national carrier named for its base in Minnesota, saw an opportunity. An insurer of Main Street businesses, St. Paul became the leader in the malpractice field. By 1985, it had a 20% share of the national market. Overall, the company had revenue of $8.9 billion last year, with about 10% of its premium dollars coming from malpractice coverage.

The frequency and size of doctors' malpractice claims rose steadily in the early 1980s, industry officials say. St.
Paul and its competitors raised rates sharply during the 1980s.

Expecting malpractice awards to continue rising rapidly, St. Paul increased its reserves. But the company miscalculated, says Kevin Rehnberg, a senior vice president. Claim frequency and size leveled off in the late 1980s, as more than 30 states enacted curbs on malpractice awards, Mr. Rehnberg says. The combination of this so-called tort reform and the industry's rate increases turned malpractice insurance into a very lucrative specialty.

A standard industry accounting device used by St. Paul and, on a smaller scale, by its rivals, made the field look even more attractive. Realizing that it had set aside too much money for malpractice claims, St. Paul "released" $1.1 billion in reserves between 1992 and 1997. The money flowed through its income statement and boosted its bottom line.

St. Paul stated clearly in its annual reports that excess reserves had enlarged its net income. But that part of the message didn't get through to some insurers -- especially bedpan mutuals -- dazzled by St. Paul's bottom line, according to industry officials.

In the 1990s, some bedpan mutuals began competing for business beyond their original territories. New Jersey's Medical Inter-Insurance Exchange, California's Southern California Physicians Insurance Exchange (now known as Scpie Holdings), and Pennsylvania Hospital Insurance Co., or Phico, fanned out across the country. Some publicly traded insurers also jumped into the business.

With St. Paul seeming to offer a model for big, quick profits, "no one wanted to sit still in their own backyard," says Scpie's Mr. Zuk. "The boards of directors said, `We've got to grow.'" Scpie expanded into Connecticut, Florida and Texas, among other states, starting in 1997.

As they entered new areas, smaller carriers often tried to attract customers by undercutting St. Paul. The price slashing became contagious, and premiums fell in many states. The mutuals "went in and aggravated the situation by saying, `Look at all the money St. Paul is making,'" says Tom Gose, President of MAG Mutual Insurance Co., which operates mainly in Georgia. "They came in late to the dance and undercut everyone."

The newer competitors soon discovered, however, that "the so-called profitability of the '90s was the result of those years in the mid-80s when the actuaries were predicting the terrible trends," says Donald J. Fager, president of Medical Liability Mutual Insurance Co., a bedpan mutual started in 1975 in New York. Except for two mergers in the past two years, his company mostly has held to its original single-state focus.

The competition intensified, even though some insurers "knew rates were inadequate from 1995 to 2000" to cover malpractice claims, says Bob Sanders, an actuary with Milliman USA, a Seattle consultancy serving insurance companies.

In at least one case, aggressive pricing allegedly crossed the line into fraud. Pennsylvania regulators last year filed a civil suit in state court in Harrisburg against certain executives and board members of Phico. The state alleges the defendants misled the company's board on the adequacy of Phico's premium rates and funds set aside to pay claims. On the way to becoming the nation's seventh-largest malpractice insurer, the company had suffered mounting losses on policies for medical offices and nursing homes as far away as Miami.

Pennsylvania regulators took over Phico last August. The company filed for bankruptcy-court protection from its creditors in December. A trial date hasn't been set for the state fraud suit. Phico executives and directors have denied wrongdoing.

In the late 1990s, the size of payouts for malpractice awards increased, carriers say. By 2000, many companies were losing money on malpractice coverage. Industrywide, carriers paid out $1.36 in claims and expenses for every premium dollar they collected, says Mr. Golden, the trade-group official.

The losses were exacerbated by carriers' declining investment returns. Some insurers had come to expect that big gains in the 1990s from their bond and stock portfolios would continue, industry officials say. When the bull market stalled in 2000, investment gains that had patched over inadequate premium rates disappeared.

Some bedpan mutuals went home. Scpie stopped writing coverage in any state other than California. "We lost money, and we retreated," says the company's Mr. Zuk.

New Jersey's Medical Inter-Insurance Exchange, now known as MIIX, had expanded into 24 states by the time it had a loss of $164 million in the fourth quarter of 2001. The company says it is now refusing to renew policies for 7,000 physicians outside of New Jersey. It plans to reformulate as a new company operating only in that state.

St. Paul's malpractice business sank into the red. Last December, newly hired Chief Executive Jay Fishman, a former Citigroup Inc. executive, announced the company would drop the coverage line. St. Paul reported a $980 million loss on the business for 2001.

As carriers retrench, competition has slumped and prices in some states have shot up. Lauren Kline, 6 1/2 months pregnant, changed obstetricians when her long-time Philadelphia doctor moved out of state because of rate increases. Now, her new doctor, Robert Friedman, may have to give up delivering babies at his suburban Philadelphia practice. His insurance expires at the end of the month, and he says he is having difficulty finding a carrier that will sell him a policy at any price.

Last year, Dr. Friedman says he paid $50,000 for coverage. If he gets a policy for next year, it will cost $90,000, he predicts, based on his broker's estimate. "I can't pass a single bit of that off to my patients," because managed-care companies don't allow it, he says.

Dr. Friedman says he is considering dropping the obstetrics part of his practice. Generally, delivering babies is seen as posing greater risks than most gynecological treatment. As a result, insurers offer less-expensive policies to doctors who don't do deliveries.

Mr. Golden of the insurers' association argues that whatever role industry practices may play, the current turmoil stems from lawsuits. The association says that from 1995 through 2000, total industry payouts to cover losses and legal expenses jumped 52%, to $6.9 billion. "That says there are more really huge verdicts," Mr. Golden says. Even in the majority of cases in which doctors and hospitals win -- the zero-dollar verdicts -- there are still legal expenses that insurers have to pick up, he adds.

Industry critics point to different sets of statistics. Bob Hunter, director for insurance at Consumer Federation of America, an advocacy group in Washington, prefers numbers generated by A.M. Best Co. The insurance-rating agency estimates that once all malpractice claims from 1991 through 2000 are resolved -- which will take until about 2010 -- the average payout per claim will have risen 47%, to $42,473. That projection includes legal expenses and suits in which doctors or hospitals prevail.

While the statistical debate rages, pregnant women adjust to new limits and inconveniences. Kelly Biesecker, 35, spent many extra hours on the highway this spring, driving from her home in Villanova, Pa., to Delran, N.J., so she could continue to use her obstetrician. Dr. Richard Krauss says he moved the obstetrics part of his practice from Philadelphia because malpractice rates had skyrocketed in Pennsylvania. Ms. Biesecker, who gave birth to a healthy boy on June 5, says Dr. Krauss was the doctor she trusted to guard her health and the health of her baby: "You stick with that guy no matter what the distance."

Dr. Krauss, 53, left Philadelphia last year only after his malpractice premium rose to $54,000, from $38,000, and then was cancelled by a carrier getting out of the business, he says. After getting quotes of about $80,000 on a new policy, he moved. New Jersey hasn't been a panacea, however. His policy there expires July 1, and the carrier refuses to renew it. The doctor says he hopes to go to work for a hospital that will pay for his coverage.

Senator Gramm requested a meeting with the WH/Treasury team on terrorism insurance this week. Is Larry available to do a meeting. I think we should include Peter Fisher and Pat Cave from Treasury, along with Brett Kavanaugh. He will want to talk about the per company cap primarily. The contact for Gramm is Carrie Hale at 224-2934. thanks, Matt

Here are revised drafts for your review. After I hear back from you David will clear the final version w/ the Speaker's office. We'll send them to the President tonight or tomorrow morning for release early tomorrow.

There are several papers in the queue for this week (postponement based on emerging issues is always possible though). They include: Homeland Security 9 month assessment paper; an Americorps paper, a paper on a HUD funded smart growth guidebook which could undermine homeownership; a paper recommending increased use of the veto pen; an economic portrait of the Nordic and Baltic countries and a Federal Budget chart book showing trends, by President, on spending, revenue and vetos. There will be some new web memos put up shortly on the health tax credits and trade; a better option for Medicare reform and a new web product on regulation oversight. Please join our homeland security event Tuesday at 10:00 a.m. at Heritage -- live or by web. Warmly, Ginni

I am NOT prepared to authorize a search of Vice Presidential communications based on a bunch of e-mails from folks I do not know. If someone at the Secret Service wishes to have me authorize such a search, I expect to receive a letter from the General Counsel of the Secret Service explaining (1) the need for the search, (2) the legal authority for the request, and (3) the requested parameters for the search. It is my desire to cooperate with all proper Secret Service investigations, but they must be properly requested and documented. Records searchs, particularly in connection with criminal investigations, are not matters to be handled informally.

TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE COMPARISON

Issue	Senate Bill (S. 2600)	House-Passed Bill
Loss Sharing Program	One-year Federal loss sharing program administered by the Secretary of the Treasury (Secretary), with one-year extension at the Secretary's discretion, in which government pays financial assistance to participating commercial P&C primary insurers subject to a deductible. Per Company Deductible: Each participating insurer has a deductible defined as its market share of direct written premiums multiplied by $10 billion. Once the company has paid insured losses equal to its deductible, the Government pays 80% of additional losses incurred by that company and the company pays the remaining 20 percent. Once aggregate losses have reached $10 billion, the loss sharing converts to 90/10. If aggregate losses exceed $10 billion, the Secretary determines each company's pro rata share of the government's loss-sharing payments. In-Force Reinsurance Agreements: For policies covered by reinsurance contracts in force on the date of enactment, until the reinsurance contract is renewed, amended, or	One-year Federal loss sharing program administered by Secretary of the Treasury (Secretary) in which government provides financial assistance to commercial P&C insurers based on one of two "triggering events." (1) Industry-wide trigger: In an "industry-wide triggering event," the Secretary determines that industry-wide commercial P&C losses from one or more acts of terrorism exceed $1 billion. Each insurer receives financial assistance equal to the difference between 90% of the insurer's net losses (net of reinsured losses) and $5 million. (2) Individual insurer trigger: In an "individual insurer triggering event," the Secretary determines that industry-wide losses exceed $100 million and losses for any single insurer exceed 10% of its capital surplus and 10% of its commercial P&C net premiums. Each insurer eligible to receive financial assistance under the triggering determination receives financial assistance equal to the difference between 90% of its insured losses and 10% of its net P&C premiums in force at the time of the insured losses. • If the Secretary subsequently determines that an industry-wide trigger has occurred, the 10% of premium deductible is refunded, and the deductible under the industry-wide trigger is applied. Coverage under the individual insurer trigger applies only to those commercial insurers who were providing commercial P&C coverage prior to 9/11.

Issue	Senate Bill (S. 2600)	House-Passed Bill
	reaches its 1-year anniversary date, the	No provision on In-Force Reinsurance Agreements.
Loss Sharing Program (cont'd)	Federal share of compensation is shared (1) with all reinsurers to which the participating insurer has ceded some share of the insured loss, and (2) in a manner that distributes the Federal share between the participating insurer and the reinsurers in the same proportion as if the program did not exist.
Sunset Provisions	The program sunsets on December 31, 2002. Secretary may extend to a second year based on findings of a mandated report. If extended, the loss-sharing is the same as in the first year but the per-company allocation is based on market share multiplied by $15 billion.	The program sunsets on January 1, 2003. Secretary may extend the program by not more than 2 years.
Triggering Event	Coverage commences when an individual participating insurance company's insured losses exceed its deductible.	Secretary determines that an "industry-wide" or "individual insurer" triggering event has occurred, as described above.

Coverage Requirements	Participating insurer must offer terrorism coverage in all its commercial P&C policies (in all its participating lines) and may, within 21 days, opt-in to participate with respect to its personal lines. Terrorism coverage must not differ materially from its other P&C coverage. Policyholder must file claim with participating insurer, which processes the claim and submits it to the Secretary along with (1) verification of the claim and payments made to policyholder and (2) certification of compliance with the program.	None
Cap on Coverage	$100 billion annual losses, after which Congress decides the procedures for and source of any excess payments. Industry not liable over $100 billion.	Total amount of Federal financial assistance may not exceed an aggregate amount of $100 billion. Sense of Congress that acts of terrorism resulting in insured losses greater than $100 billion would necessitate further Congressional action.
Budget Authority	Provides budget authority for the Federal Government to provide its share of compensation for insured losses under the program.	Designates the amount of new budget authority and outlays as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Such amount shall be available only to the extent that a request, that includes designation of such amount as an emergency requirement as defined in such Act, is transmitted by the President to Congress.

Recoupment of Federal Payments	No provision.	All Federal financial assistance must be repaid from assessments and surcharges imposed on all commercial P&C insurers and deposited into the general fund of the Treasury. Aggregate Assessments: Financial assistance up to the first $20 billion is repaid from a combination of an "industry obligation assessment" and, if necessary, one or more "financing assessments." • Both types of assessments are imposed on all commercial P&C insurers based on the ratio of the firm's net premiums to the industry's aggregate premiums for commercial P&C coverage. (1) Industry obligation assessment: Capped at $5 billion per event per year ($10 billion in Years 2 and 3 if extended). (2) Financing assessment: • Applies only if financial assistance exceeds the industry obligation cap. • Deferred if any assessment has been made in the previous 12 months. • Individual insurer's portion of annual assessments may not exceed 3% of its net P&C premiums during any 12 month period (amounts exceeding the cap are paid over multiple years). • Secretary may defer payments to avoid insolvency. Surcharges: Financial assistance exceeding $20 billion is repaid from surcharges. • Surcharges are based on a percentage of commercial P&C net premiums and may extend over multiple years to recoup full federal payment.

		The Secretary determines the amount and duration of the surcharge after weighing various factors including
Recoupment of Federal Payments (cont'd)		cost to taxpayers of not establishing a surcharge, economic conditions, affordability for small and medium-sized businesses, etc. • Individual insurer's portion of surcharges may not exceed 3% of its annual written premiums. General: • Secretary may defer payment of assessments and surcharges to avoid insolvency. • Secretary may impose civil penalties and/or charge interest for overdue assessments. Secretary must prescribe manner and method, including amounts, of carrying out assessments and surcharges, taking into consideration various factors including impact on small businesses, cross-subsidization, and the various exposures of different lines of commercial P&C coverage.
Persons and Entities Covered	Defines "person" to mean individuals, businesses, nonprofits, trusts or estates, and state and local governments.	"Person" not defined.

Lines Covered	Commercial P&C, including business interruption but not life or health. Excludes federal crop insurance and private mortgage insurance. P&C companies have 21 days after enactment to notify the Secretary if they want to have their personal P&C lines included in the program. "Business interruption" covers temporary relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, including ordinary wages, where: (1) there is physical damage to point that business can't open; (2) physical damage occurring to other property but preventing customers or employees from gaining physical access to business; or (3) Government shuts down area because of physical or environmental damage, thereby preventing physical access to the business premises. Business interruption does not include lost profits unless entity is a small business under Small Business Act.	Commercial P&C, including loss of income or extra expense incurred because of losses or damage to property (i.e., business interruption). Excluded from coverage are: life and health insurance, insurance for professional liability, and insurance for homeowners, tenants, private passenger nonfleet automobiles, mobile homes, and any other insurance for personal, family, or household needs.

Participating Insurers	Defined as any insurance company, including any subsidiary or affiliate, that is (1) licensed primary insurer or (2) unlicensed "eligible surplus line carrier" listed by the NAIC (3) that received direct premiums for any type of commercial P&C coverage or that, within 21 days, opts-in with respect to personal P&C lines.	Defined as any commercial P&C insurer, including affiliates, and expressly includes reinsurers and retrocessional insurers. Secretary of Treasury must ensure that Act applies to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial P&C insurance.
Program Administrator and Authority	Secretary of Treasury, who may: (1) investigate and audit claims; and (2) prescribe regulations and procedures; (3) employ persons or contract for services; (4) assess civil money penalties for violations of the Act or regulations or orders; and (5) prescribe criteria for participating insurance companies.	Secretary of Treasury, who: (1) must consult with state insurance regulators and NAIC; (2) may prescribe regulations and procedures; (3) may require insurers to report net premiums for each commercial P&C line; (4) may investigate and audit claims and require verification of premiums or losses; (5) may assess civil money penalties or interest for nonpayment of assessments and surcharges; (6) must prescribe manner and method of assessments and surcharges.
Self-Insurance Arrangements	The Secretary may, in consultation with NAIC, establish procedures allowing municipalities and other governmental or quasi-governmental entities operating through self-insurance arrangements to participate in the Program.	Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the NAIC, may apply Act to self-insurance arrangements by municipalities and other entities. This must be determined before the occurrence of a triggering event. All the provisions of the Act must be uniformly applied to these entities.

Definition of "Act of Terrorism"	Act certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with Secretary of State and Attorney General, that is • Violent or dangerous to human life, property, or infrastructure within U.S. (or outside U.S. for an air carrier or U.S. flag vessel); • is committed by an individual or group acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest; and • is intended to coerce civilian population or influence policy or affect the conduct of the U.S. Government by coercion. Excludes acts of war declared by Congress. Excludes losses under $5 million. Determinations are final and not subject to judicial review.	Act certified by the Secretary, who must consult with Attorney General and Secretary of State in determining whether (1) an occurrence was caused by an act of terrorism, and (2) an act of terrorism occurred during the covered period. A terrorist act is: • Unlawful; • causes harm in the U.S. to person, property, or entity, or in the case of a domestic U.S. air carrier or U.S. flag vessel, in or outside the U.S.; • is committed by a person or group of persons recognized by the State Department or the Secretary of the Treasury as a terrorist group or conspirator either before or after such act; and • is intended to destabilize a sovereign government or affect conduct of the U.S. government by coercion. Excludes acts of war except with respect to workers compensation coverage. Certifications not subject to judicial review. Secretary may refine the requirements for "act of terrorism" in consultation with the NAIC.
Who Certifies that Loss was Caused by Act of Terrorism?	Secretary of the Treasury	Secretary of the Treasury in consultation with Attorney General and Secretary of State.

Preemption / Coordination with State Regulators	Preempts (1) state definitions of "act of terrorism" and (2) state rules requiring pre-approval of premiums or waiting periods for adopting premiums. (States may invalidate terrorism rates as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory.) Provides that books and records of participating insurance companies shall be provided to the Secretary upon his request, notwithstanding state laws. No preemption unless specifically provided.	Preempts (1) state definitions of "act of terrorism;" (2) state rate laws to extent necessary to cover assessments and approval or other conditions to policy or rate effectiveness; and (3) any action other than filing of rates and policies with State insurance regulator to the extent that such law requires additional actions for terrorism insurance coverage. Does not limit implied preemption. Sense of Congress that NAIC and states should adopt: • Consistent federal and state definitions of acts of terrorism; • Within 6 months, appropriate guidelines for reserves subject to Secretary of the Treasury adoption of national guidelines; and • Disclosure guidelines subject to Secretary of the Treasury's adoption of national guidelines.
Legal Procedures	Creates exclusive federal cause of action for covered terrorism acts. District court determines applicable law, based on choice of law principles. Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation assigns jurisdiction for all claims to a single Federal District Court, which has original and exclusive jurisdiction. Cases filed in other federal or state courts are transferred/removed to the designated District Court. No offset provision.	Federal cause of action same as Senate bill, except based on law of state where act occurred. Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation assigns jurisdiction for all claims to one or more Federal District Courts. Offsets plaintiff's recovery by any Federal disaster relief received.

Legal Procedures (cont'd)	Amounts awarded in civil action that are attributable to punitive damages will not be included within the insured losses.	Disallows punitive damages by or against an insured (applies only to extent of insurance coverage under a triggering determination).
	No proportional liability provision.	Requires proportional liability for non-economic damages by or against an insured (applies only to extent of insurance coverage under a triggering determination).
	Provides U.S. right of subrogation for any payment made by U.S. through program.	Provides U.S. right of subrogation for claims U.S. pays.
	No statute of limitations provision	No statute of limitations provision.
	No limited damages provision.	Damages limited to insured party.
	Provisions apply only while program is effective.	Provisions apply only with respect to triggering determinations and do not in any way limit actions against terrorists or their conspirators.
	No settlement provision	No settlement provision.
	No judgment satisfaction provision.	Makes terrorist assets seized or frozen by U.S. liable to satisfy judgments for acts of terrorism. President may waive this requirement.
	No protective order provision.	Authorizes U.S. or Secretary of the Treasury to seek protective orders for classified information.
	No arbitration provision.	Preserves contractual arbitration rights.

	No attorney fees provision	The Court will decide on reasonable attorneys fees so that the fees will not exceed 20 %of total damages.
Disclosure to policyholders	At time of offer, purchase, or renewal of each policy, insurance company must disclose to the policyholder the premium charged for losses covered by the program and the Federal share of compensation under the program. For in-force contracts, disclosure required within 90 days.	Sense of Congress that states should require disclosure of the price of any P&C insurance for acts of terrorism, including costs of terrorism related assessments or surcharges. If states do not enact disclosure guidelines, the Secretary of the Treasury and the NAIC should adopt guidelines requiring the disclosure.
Ability to sue terrorist or terrorist's country	Act does not limit ability of any plaintiff to recover from any person, government, or other entity that participated in or aided and abetted any act of terrorism.	Act does not limit ability of any plaintiff to recover from any person that participated in or aided and abetted any act of terrorism.
Insurance Industry Build-Up	Sense of Congress that insurance industry should build up its capacity to provide affordable coverage for terrorism risk.	No provision.
Tax Provision	No provision.	Secretary shall issue a study within 4 months on issues relating to permitting P&C companies to establish tax-deductible reserves against future acts of terrorism.
Participating Insurer's Reports	Every 6 months participating insurance companies must report to the NAIC the premium rates charged for insured losses, including an explanation of and justification for those rates. The NAIC must forward copies of those reports to	Each insurer may be required by the Secretary to submit to the Secretary or the NAIC a statement specifying the net premium amount of coverage written under each line of commercial P&C sold by the insurer during a specified period.

	the Secretary, the Commerce Secretary, the FTC, and GAO.

Reports to Congress	Secretary must report to Congress within 9 months the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage.	Presidentially appointed commission must report to Congress on life insurance within 120 days.
	No report on railroad and trucking insurance	Secretary must report to Congress on railroad and trucking insurance for acts of terrorism within 120 days.
	Secretary must report to Congress promptly on reasons for any extension of the program.	Reporting on extensions same as Senate bill.
	No report on pooling.	Secretary of Treasury, Federal Reserve Board, and GAO must report to Congress within 6 months of enactment on (1) the advisability of establishing a reinsurance pool for acts of terrorism to replace the Act's financial assistance program, and (2) the potential effects of the Internal Revenue Code amendments and any further changes to federal law that might be appropriate to encourage pooling.
	The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the FTC shall submit joint reports to Congress and GAO summarizing and evaluating the reports received every 6 months on premium rates (see row above). These reports are due after 9 months and then 12 months later. The GAO shall evaluate these reports for Congress.	No report on premium rates.
	The Secretary shall report to Congress in 9 months on availability of insurance	No report on availability of terrorism insurance.

Terrorism Risk Insurance –
Preferred Conference Compromise Options on Key Issues

Participating Insurance Companies

- Participation would be mandatory for commercial property and casualty insurers and only available for the types of commercial property and casualty insurance described in the House bill (definitions) with the following changes: group life insurance would be included; insured loss from debt or default (i.e., credit guarantee) would not be included; insured losses covered by other government programs would be excluded (e.g., crop insurance and to the extent U.S. flag carriers are covered); and the Senate version of business interruption would be substituted.

  Senate bill requires mandatory participation for commercial lines, but permits optional participation for personal lines. House bill does not have mandatory participation. Senate version provides discretion to the Secretary to determine covered commercial lines. House version provides more certainty, which could be useful in setting up the program. If necessary, could provide the Secretary limited discretion to exclude certain lines.

- Only primary insurance companies would be allowed to participate.

  House bill permits full participation by reinsurers. Senate bill is mostly tied to primary insurers, but does have a provision that provides reinsurers with a legal claim on government loss sharing payments provided to the primary insurance company that is in proportion to losses under in-force reinsurance existing contracts. In-force reinsurance provision was necessary when there were a number of existing reinsurance contracts that were entered into prior to September 11. However, with most of those contracts now or soon to be expiring, and with some reinsurance capacity now available to reinsure per-company deductibles, such a provision is no longer necessary.

Loss Sharing Program

- One-year program (effectively 18 months as first year would run through December 31, 2003) that is extendable by the Secretary for two-year intervals based on a finding that insurance for terrorism risk is not readily available. The Secretary would also have the discretion to increase deductibles and reduce government loss sharing if the program is extended.

  House bill sunsets on January 1, 2003, and the Secretary may extend the program by not more than 2 years. Senate bill sunsets on December 31, 2002, and could be extended for an additional year.

  [Here are two options for dealing with the per company deductible. Specifying a specific deductible in legislation based on gross premiums is the best approach for the following reasons:

- It in conjunction with the above definition of covered lines provides insurers immediate certainty as to their deductible (they do not have to wait for a regulation).
- Doing a regulation specifying a deductible based on market shares might have made some sense with optional coverage, but with that gone it is no longer needed.
- The 7.5 percent approximates the $10 billion loss approach in the Senate, whether gross or net premiums are used. Specifying the deductible in legislation provides certainty and speeds up the process.
- Gross is preferable because net reflects a ceding of reinsurance premiums that presumably will not happen for terrorism risk.]

- Preferred Option: Participating insurance company deductible equal to 7.5 percent of gross premiums in year one, with an increase to 10 percent in year two of the program.

  The 7.5 percent of gross premiums approximates what the deductible would be under the Senate bill and a $10 billion loss (although under the Senate bill it could be higher or lower depending on the level of participation). It is less stringent than the deductible under the House bill's individual insurer triggering mechanism, and more stringent than deductible under the House bill's industry-wide trigger. Gross premiums would be favored because net premiums are based on an active reinsurance market that has yet to fully return. Specifying a clear percentage in legislation provides immediate certainty to insurance companies regarding their deductible. Double triggering mechanism under the House bill would be eliminated.

- Fallback Option: Participating insurance company deductible would be set to equal to the dollar amount equal to the participating insurance company's market share of net domestic property and casualty premiums as determined by the Secretary multiplied by $10 billion in year one and $15 billion in year 2.

  Follows the Senate bill with a specific link to $10 billion and $15 billion, but picks up the House bill's use of net premiums. Expected per company deductible would be approximately 7.5 percent of premiums with no personal line coverage in year one.

- Government loss sharing above the deductible would be set on a 90/10 basis.

  House bill has 90/10 loss sharing above a deductible, while the Senate bill has 90/10 loss sharing above the deductible if aggregate losses are less than $10 billion, and 80/20 if aggregate losses are greater than $10 billion. Because there is going to be some recoupment mechanism for a portion of government payments, the two-tiered loss sharing mechanism in the Senate bill would be eliminated.

Recoupment of Federal Payments

- For any government payments to insurance companies of up to $10 billion dollars during a calendar year, all commercial policyholders with covered lines would be required to pay a surcharge of up to 3 percent of premiums per year until government payments are recouped.

REV_00147446

Surcharges would be made as soon as practical at the end of the calendar year, and at annual intervals until government payments were fully recouped.

House bill requires assessments for government payments up to $20 billion and has a complicated procedure for implementing such assessments. Senate bill does not have any recoupment mechanism. Surcharges are favored over assessments because of greater transparency regarding ultimate costs to policyholders for government recoupment and a broader spreading of the costs.

- For any government payments to insurance companies of over $10 billion dollars during a calendar year, no government assessment or surcharge would be collected.

House bill authorizes surcharges on policyholders for government payments over $20 billion. Senate bill does not have any recoupment mechanism. Federal recoupment would be limited to $10 billion to avoid any adverse impact on the economy.

TERRORISM RISK INSURANCE COMPARISON

Issue	Senate Bill (S. 2600)	House-Passed Bill
Loss Sharing Program	One-year Federal loss sharing program administered by the Secretary of the Treasury (Secretary), with one-year extension at the Secretary's discretion, in which government pays financial assistance to participating commercial P&C primary insurers subject to a deductible. Per Company Deductible: Each participating insurer has a deductible defined as its market share of direct written premiums multiplied by $10 billion. Once the company has paid insured losses equal to its deductible, the Government pays 80% of additional losses incurred by that company and the company pays the remaining 20 percent. Once aggregate losses have reached $10 billion, the loss sharing converts to 90/10. If aggregate losses exceed $10 billion, the Secretary determines each company's pro rata share of the government's loss-sharing payments. In-Force Reinsurance Agreements: For policies covered by reinsurance contracts in force on the date of enactment, until the reinsurance contract is renewed, amended, or	One-year Federal loss sharing program administered by Secretary of the Treasury (Secretary) in which government provides financial assistance to commercial P&C insurers based on one of two "triggering events." (1) Industry-wide trigger: In an "industry-wide triggering event," the Secretary determines that industry-wide commercial P&C losses from one or more acts of terrorism exceed $1 billion. Each insurer receives financial assistance equal to the difference between 90% of the insurer's net losses (net of reinsured losses) and $5 million. (2) Individual insurer trigger: In an "individual insurer triggering event," the Secretary determines that industry-wide losses exceed $100 million and losses for any single insurer exceed 10% of its capital surplus and 10% of its commercial P&C net premiums. Each insurer eligible to receive financial assistance under the triggering determination receives financial assistance equal to the difference between 90% of its insured losses and 10% of its net P&C premiums in force at the time of the insured losses. • If the Secretary subsequently determines that an industry-wide trigger has occurred, the 10% of premium deductible is refunded, and the deductible under the industry-wide trigger is applied. Coverage under the individual insurer trigger applies only to those commercial insurers who were providing commercial P&C coverage prior to 9/11.

Issue	Senate Bill (S. 2600)	House-Passed Bill
	reaches its 1-year anniversary date, the	No provision on In-Force Reinsurance Agreements.
Loss Sharing Program (cont'd)	Federal share of compensation is shared (1) with all reinsurers to which the participating insurer has ceded some share of the insured loss, and (2) in a manner that distributes the Federal share between the participating insurer and the reinsurers in the same proportion as if the program did not exist.
Sunset Provisions	The program sunsets on December 31, 2002. Secretary may extend to a second year based on findings of a mandated report. If extended, the loss-sharing is the same as in the first year but the per-company allocation is based on market share multiplied by $15 billion.	The program sunsets on January 1, 2003. Secretary may extend the program by not more than 2 years.
Triggering Event	Coverage commences when an individual participating insurance company's insured losses exceed its deductible.	Secretary determines that an "industry-wide" or "individual insurer" triggering event has occurred, as described above.

Coverage Requirements	Participating insurer must offer terrorism coverage in all its commercial P&C policies (in all its participating lines) and may, within 21 days, opt-in to participate with respect to its personal lines. Terrorism coverage must not differ materially from its other P&C coverage. Policyholder must file claim with participating insurer, which processes the claim and submits it to the Secretary along with (1) verification of the claim and payments made to policyholder and (2) certification of compliance with the program.	None
Cap on Coverage	$100 billion annual losses, after which Congress decides the procedures for and source of any excess payments. Industry not liable over $100 billion.	Total amount of Federal financial assistance may not exceed an aggregate amount of $100 billion. Sense of Congress that acts of terrorism resulting in insured losses greater than $100 billion would necessitate further Congressional action.
Budget Authority	Provides budget authority for the Federal Government to provide its share of compensation for insured losses under the program.	Designates the amount of new budget authority and outlays as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 252(e) of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act. Such amount shall be available only to the extent that a request, that includes designation of such amount as an emergency requirement as defined in such Act, is transmitted by the President to Congress.

Recoupment of Federal Payments	No provision.	All Federal financial assistance must be repaid from assessments and surcharges imposed on all commercial P&C insurers and deposited into the general fund of the Treasury. Aggregate Assessments: Financial assistance up to the first $20 billion is repaid from a combination of an "industry obligation assessment" and, if necessary, one or more "financing assessments." • Both types of assessments are imposed on all commercial P&C insurers based on the ratio of the firm's net premiums to the industry's aggregate premiums for commercial P&C coverage. (1) Industry obligation assessment: Capped at $5 billion per event per year ($10 billion in Years 2 and 3 if extended). (2) Financing assessment: • Applies only if financial assistance exceeds the industry obligation cap. • Deferred if any assessment has been made in the previous 12 months. • Individual insurer's portion of annual assessments may not exceed 3% of its net P&C premiums during any 12 month period (amounts exceeding the cap are paid over multiple years). • Secretary may defer payments to avoid insolvency. Surcharges: Financial assistance exceeding $20 billion is repaid from surcharges. • Surcharges are based on a percentage of commercial P&C net premiums and may extend over multiple years to recoup full federal payment.

		The Secretary determines the amount and duration of the surcharge after weighing various factors including
Recoupment of Federal Payments (cont'd)		cost to taxpayers of not establishing a surcharge, economic conditions, affordability for small and medium-sized businesses, etc. • Individual insurer's portion of surcharges may not exceed 3% of its annual written premiums. General: • Secretary may defer payment of assessments and surcharges to avoid insolvency. • Secretary may impose civil penalties and/or charge interest for overdue assessments. Secretary must prescribe manner and method, including amounts, of carrying out assessments and surcharges, taking into consideration various factors including impact on small businesses, cross-subsidization, and the various exposures of different lines of commercial P&C coverage.
Persons and Entities Covered	Defines "person" to mean individuals, businesses, nonprofits, trusts or estates, and state and local governments.	"Person" not defined.

Lines Covered	Commercial P&C, including business interruption but not life or health. Excludes federal crop insurance and private mortgage insurance. P&C companies have 21 days after enactment to notify the Secretary if they want to have their personal P&C lines included in the program. "Business interruption" covers temporary relocation expenses and ongoing expenses, including ordinary wages, where: (1) there is physical damage to point that business can't open; (2) physical damage occurring to other property but preventing customers or employees from gaining physical access to business; or (3) Government shuts down area because of physical or environmental damage, thereby preventing physical access to the business premises. Business interruption does not include lost profits unless entity is a small business under Small Business Act.	Commercial P&C, including loss of income or extra expense incurred because of losses or damage to property (i.e., business interruption). Excluded from coverage are: life and health insurance, insurance for professional liability, and insurance for homeowners, tenants, private passenger nonfleet automobiles, mobile homes, and any other insurance for personal, family, or household needs.

Participating Insurers	Defined as any insurance company, including any subsidiary or affiliate, that is (1) licensed primary insurer or (2) unlicensed "eligible surplus line carrier" listed by the NAIC (3) that received direct premiums for any type of commercial P&C coverage or that, within 21 days, opts-in with respect to personal P&C lines.	Defined as any commercial P&C insurer, including affiliates, and expressly includes reinsurers and retrocessional insurers. Secretary of Treasury must ensure that Act applies to any offshore or non-admitted entities that provide commercial P&C insurance.
Program Administrator and Authority	Secretary of Treasury, who may: (1) investigate and audit claims; and (2) prescribe regulations and procedures; (3) employ persons or contract for services; (4) assess civil money penalties for violations of the Act or regulations or orders; and (5) prescribe criteria for participating insurance companies.	Secretary of Treasury, who: (1) must consult with state insurance regulators and NAIC; (2) may prescribe regulations and procedures; (3) may require insurers to report net premiums for each commercial P&C line; (4) may investigate and audit claims and require verification of premiums or losses; (5) may assess civil money penalties or interest for nonpayment of assessments and surcharges; (6) must prescribe manner and method of assessments and surcharges.
Self-Insurance Arrangements	The Secretary may, in consultation with NAIC, establish procedures allowing municipalities and other governmental or quasi-governmental entities operating through self-insurance arrangements to participate in the Program.	Secretary of the Treasury, in consultation with the NAIC, may apply Act to self-insurance arrangements by municipalities and other entities. This must be determined before the occurrence of a triggering event. All the provisions of the Act must be uniformly applied to these entities.

Definition of "Act of Terrorism"	Act certified by the Secretary, in concurrence with Secretary of State and Attorney General, that is • Violent or dangerous to human life, property, or infrastructure within U.S. (or outside U.S. for an air carrier or U.S. flag vessel); • is committed by an individual or group acting on behalf of any foreign person or foreign interest; and • is intended to coerce civilian population or influence policy or affect the conduct of the U.S. Government by coercion. Excludes acts of war declared by Congress. Excludes losses under $5 million. Determinations are final and not subject to judicial review.	Act certified by the Secretary, who must consult with Attorney General and Secretary of State in determining whether (1) an occurrence was caused by an act of terrorism, and (2) an act of terrorism occurred during the covered period. A terrorist act is: • Unlawful; • causes harm in the U.S. to person, property, or entity, or in the case of a domestic U.S. air carrier or U.S. flag vessel, in or outside the U.S.; • is committed by a person or group of persons recognized by the State Department or the Secretary of the Treasury as a terrorist group or conspirator either before or after such act; and • is intended to destabilize a sovereign government or affect conduct of the U.S. government by coercion. Excludes acts of war except with respect to workers compensation coverage. Certifications not subject to judicial review. Secretary may refine the requirements for "act of terrorism" in consultation with the NAIC.
Who Certifies that Loss was Caused by Act of Terrorism?	Secretary of the Treasury	Secretary of the Treasury in consultation with Attorney General and Secretary of State.

Preemption / Coordination with State Regulators	Preempts (1) state definitions of "act of terrorism" and (2) state rules requiring pre-approval of premiums or waiting periods for adopting premiums. (States may invalidate terrorism rates as excessive, inadequate, or unfairly discriminatory.) Provides that books and records of participating insurance companies shall be provided to the Secretary upon his request, notwithstanding state laws. No preemption unless specifically provided.	Preempts (1) state definitions of "act of terrorism;" (2) state rate laws to extent necessary to cover assessments and approval or other conditions to policy or rate effectiveness; and (3) any action other than filing of rates and policies with State insurance regulator to the extent that such law requires additional actions for terrorism insurance coverage. Does not limit implied preemption. Sense of Congress that NAIC and states should adopt: • Consistent federal and state definitions of acts of terrorism; • Within 6 months, appropriate guidelines for reserves subject to Secretary of the Treasury adoption of national guidelines; and • Disclosure guidelines subject to Secretary of the Treasury's adoption of national guidelines.
Legal Procedures	Creates exclusive federal cause of action for covered terrorism acts. District court determines applicable law, based on choice of law principles. Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation assigns jurisdiction for all claims to a single Federal District Court, which has original and exclusive jurisdiction. Cases filed in other federal or state courts are transferred/removed to the designated District Court. No offset provision.	Federal cause of action same as Senate bill, except based on law of state where act occurred. Judicial Panel on Multidistrict Litigation assigns jurisdiction for all claims to one or more Federal District Courts. Offsets plaintiff's recovery by any Federal disaster relief received.

Legal Procedures (cont'd)	Amounts awarded in civil action that are attributable to punitive damages will not be included within the insured losses.	Disallows punitive damages by or against an insured (applies only to extent of insurance coverage under a triggering determination).
	No proportional liability provision.	Requires proportional liability for non-economic damages by or against an insured (applies only to extent of insurance coverage under a triggering determination).
	Provides U.S. right of subrogation for any payment made by U.S. through program.	Provides U.S. right of subrogation for claims U.S. pays.
	No statute of limitations provision	No statute of limitations provision.
	No limited damages provision.	Damages limited to insured party.
	Provisions apply only while program is effective.	Provisions apply only with respect to triggering determinations and do not in any way limit actions against terrorists or their conspirators.
	No settlement provision	No settlement provision.
	No judgment satisfaction provision.	Makes terrorist assets seized or frozen by U.S. liable to satisfy judgments for acts of terrorism. President may waive this requirement.
	No protective order provision.	Authorizes U.S. or Secretary of the Treasury to seek protective orders for classified information.
	No arbitration provision.	Preserves contractual arbitration rights.

	No attorney fees provision	The Court will decide on reasonable attorneys fees so that the fees will not exceed 20 %of total damages.
Disclosure to policyholders	At time of offer, purchase, or renewal of each policy, insurance company must disclose to the policyholder the premium charged for losses covered by the program and the Federal share of compensation under the program. For in-force contracts, disclosure required within 90 days.	Sense of Congress that states should require disclosure of the price of any P&C insurance for acts of terrorism, including costs of terrorism related assessments or surcharges. If states do not enact disclosure guidelines, the Secretary of the Treasury and the NAIC should adopt guidelines requiring the disclosure.
Ability to sue terrorist or terrorist's country	Act does not limit ability of any plaintiff to recover from any person, government, or other entity that participated in or aided and abetted any act of terrorism.	Act does not limit ability of any plaintiff to recover from any person that participated in or aided and abetted any act of terrorism.
Insurance Industry Build-Up	Sense of Congress that insurance industry should build up its capacity to provide affordable coverage for terrorism risk.	No provision.
Tax Provision	No provision.	Secretary shall issue a study within 4 months on issues relating to permitting P&C companies to establish tax-deductible reserves against future acts of terrorism.
Participating Insurer's Reports	Every 6 months participating insurance companies must report to the NAIC the premium rates charged for insured losses, including an explanation of and justification for those rates. The NAIC must forward copies of those reports to	Each insurer may be required by the Secretary to submit to the Secretary or the NAIC a statement specifying the net premium amount of coverage written under each line of commercial P&C sold by the insurer during a specified period.

	the Secretary, the Commerce Secretary, the FTC, and GAO.

Reports to Congress	Secretary must report to Congress within 9 months the availability of life insurance and other lines of insurance coverage.	Presidentially appointed commission must report to Congress on life insurance within 120 days.
	No report on railroad and trucking insurance	Secretary must report to Congress on railroad and trucking insurance for acts of terrorism within 120 days.
	Secretary must report to Congress promptly on reasons for any extension of the program.	Reporting on extensions same as Senate bill.
	No report on pooling.	Secretary of Treasury, Federal Reserve Board, and GAO must report to Congress within 6 months of enactment on (1) the advisability of establishing a reinsurance pool for acts of terrorism to replace the Act's financial assistance program, and (2) the potential effects of the Internal Revenue Code amendments and any further changes to federal law that might be appropriate to encourage pooling.
	The Secretary, the Secretary of Commerce, and the FTC shall submit joint reports to Congress and GAO summarizing and evaluating the reports received every 6 months on premium rates (see row above). These reports are due after 9 months and then 12 months later. The GAO shall evaluate these reports for Congress.	No report on premium rates.
	The Secretary shall report to Congress in 9 months on availability of insurance	No report on availability of terrorism insurance.

Terrorism Risk Insurance –
Preferred Conference Compromise Options on Key Issues

Participating Insurance Companies

- Participation would be mandatory for commercial property and casualty insurers and only available for the types of commercial property and casualty insurance described in the House bill (definitions) with the following changes: group life insurance would be included; insured loss from debt or default (i.e., credit guarantee) would not be included; insured losses covered by other government programs would be excluded (e.g., crop insurance and to the extent U.S. flag carriers are covered); and the Senate version of business interruption would be substituted.

  Senate bill requires mandatory participation for commercial lines, but permits optional participation for personal lines. House bill does not have mandatory participation. Senate version provides discretion to the Secretary to determine covered commercial lines. House version provides more certainty, which could be useful in setting up the program. If necessary, could provide the Secretary limited discretion to exclude certain lines.

- Only primary insurance companies would be allowed to participate.

  House bill permits full participation by reinsurers. Senate bill is mostly tied to primary insurers, but does have a provision that provides reinsurers with a legal claim on government loss sharing payments provided to the primary insurance company that is in proportion to losses under in-force reinsurance existing contracts. In-force reinsurance provision was necessary when there were a number of existing reinsurance contracts that were entered into prior to September 11. However, with most of those contracts now or soon to be expiring, and with some reinsurance capacity now available to reinsure per-company deductibles, such a provision is no longer necessary.

Loss Sharing Program

- One-year program (effectively 18 months as first year would run through December 31, 2003) that is extendable by the Secretary for two-year intervals based on a finding that insurance for terrorism risk is not readily available. The Secretary would also have the discretion to increase deductibles and reduce government loss sharing if the program is extended.

  House bill sunsets on January 1, 2003, and the Secretary may extend the program by not more than 2 years. Senate bill sunsets on December 31, 2002, and could be extended for an additional year.

  [Here are two options for dealing with the per company deductible. Specifying a specific deductible in legislation based on gross premiums is the best approach for the following reasons:

- It in conjunction with the above definition of covered lines provides insurers immediate certainty as to their deductible (they do not have to wait for a regulation).
- Doing a regulation specifying a deductible based on market shares might have made some sense with optional coverage, but with that gone it is no longer needed.
- The 7.5 percent approximates the $10 billion loss approach in the Senate, whether gross or net premiums are used. Specifying the deductible in legislation provides certainty and speeds up the process.
- Gross is preferable because net reflects a ceding of reinsurance premiums that presumably will not happen for terrorism risk.]

- Preferred Option: Participating insurance company deductible equal to 7.5 percent of gross premiums in year one, with an increase to 10 percent in year two of the program.

  The 7.5 percent of gross premiums approximates what the deductible would be under the Senate bill and a $10 billion loss (although under the Senate bill it could be higher or lower depending on the level of participation). It is less stringent than the deductible under the House bill's individual insurer triggering mechanism, and more stringent than deductible under the House bill's industry-wide trigger. Gross premiums would be favored because net premiums are based on an active reinsurance market that has yet to fully return. Specifying a clear percentage in legislation provides immediate certainty to insurance companies regarding their deductible. Double triggering mechanism under the House bill would be eliminated.

- Fallback Option: Participating insurance company deductible would be set to equal to the dollar amount equal to the participating insurance company's market share of net domestic property and casualty premiums as determined by the Secretary multiplied by $10 billion in year one and $15 billion in year 2.

  Follows the Senate bill with a specific link to $10 billion and $15 billion, but picks up the House bill's use of net premiums. Expected per company deductible would be approximately 7.5 percent of premiums with no personal line coverage in year one.

- Government loss sharing above the deductible would be set on a 90/10 basis.

  House bill has 90/10 loss sharing above a deductible, while the Senate bill has 90/10 loss sharing above the deductible if aggregate losses are less than $10 billion, and 80/20 if aggregate losses are greater than $10 billion. Because there is going to be some recoupment mechanism for a portion of government payments, the two-tiered loss sharing mechanism in the Senate bill would be eliminated.

Recoupment of Federal Payments

- For any government payments to insurance companies of up to $10 billion dollars during a calendar year, all commercial policyholders with covered lines would be required to pay a surcharge of up to 3 percent of premiums per year until government payments are recouped.

REV_00147495

Surcharges would be made as soon as practical at the end of the calendar year, and at annual intervals until government payments were fully recouped.

House bill requires assessments for government payments up to $20 billion and has a complicated procedure for implementing such assessments. Senate bill does not have any recoupment mechanism. Surcharges are favored over assessments because of greater transparency regarding ultimate costs to policyholders for government recoupment and a broader spreading of the costs.

- For any government payments to insurance companies of over $10 billion dollars during a calendar year, no government assessment or surcharge would be collected.

House bill authorizes surcharges on policyholders for government payments over $20 billion. Senate bill does not have any recoupment mechanism. Federal recoupment would be limited to $10 billion to avoid any adverse impact on the economy.

I've tried twice but the "postmaster" has bounced it back to me both times.

Brett, let us know if it still doesn't arrive.

Thanks.

Wisely covering his behind. We still ought to try to stick the Senate Dems with responsibility for this decision through their blocking of the President's circuit judges. The public will readily understand that no Bush judge would ever have gone along with such an activist decision.

The plaintiff in this case, Dr. Michael Newdow, is the same person who sued the President claiming that Rev. Franklin Graham's Invocation at the Presidential Inauguration violated the Establishment Clause. Although the district court dismissed the Inaugural prayer case, Newdow can appeal to the Ninth Circuit.

Zelman v. Simmons-Harris
United States Supreme Court
June 27, 2002

The Supreme Court has announced a major constitutional decision upholding the State of Ohio,s Pilot Project Scholarship Program. The Pilot Scholarship Program enables Cleveland students from mostly lower-income families to attend religiously-affiliated and non-religiously-affiliated private schools with substantial assistance from State-funded scholarships. The Court rejected a challenge to the program contending that it constituted an impermissible Establishment of religion. The opinion for the 5-4 majority was written by Chief Justice Rehnquist and joined by Justices O,Connor, Scalia, Kennedy, and Thomas.

The Court,s analysis begins by noting that the Establishment Clause forbids States from &enacting laws that have the +purpose, or +effect, of advancing or inhibiting religion.8 Slip Op. at 7. Quickly recognizing the Pilot Scholarship Program,s secular purpose of &providing educational assistance to poor children in a demonstrably failing public school system,8 id. the Court moved on to assess whether the program had any impermissible &effects.8 Id.

The Court,s &effects8 analysis places the Pilot Scholarship Program squarely in context of earlier cases described by the Court as involving & government aid8 that reaches &religious schools only as a result of genuine and independent choices of private individuals.8 Slip. Op. at 7. These previous decisions, which involved tax credits for parochial schools (Mueller v. Allen), tuition reimbursements for a blind seminarian (Witters v. Washington Department of Services for the Blind) and state-provided sign-language interpretation services for deaf students (Zobrest v. Catalina Hills School District), all uniformly upheld the challenged government aid programs. Slip Op. at 7-9.

These earlier cases, the Court made clear, establishes a general guideline that &a government aid program8 is not &readily subject to challenge under the Establishment Clause8 if it is (1) &neutral with respect to religion;8 and (2) &provides assistance directly to a broad class of citizens who, in turn, direct government aid to religious schools;8 such that (3) religious schools benefit, if at all, &wholly as a result8 of the individuals, &own genuine and independent private choice.8 Slip Op. at 10.

The Court concluded that the Pilot Scholarship Program meets this test for neutrality, individualized benefits and genuine private choice. The Court reasoned that the Pilot Scholarship Program provides assistance &to a broad class of citizens defined without reference to religion8 and permits the participation of all schools within the district, religious or non-religious. Slip Op. at 11. It then found that Ohio,s program &in fact creates financial disincentives for religious schools8 by providing greater amounts of state funding for necessarily secular educational alternatives such as community (charter) schools, public magnet schools, and traditional public schools and by requiring tuition co-payments by parents of private school students, but not by parents of students educated in these necessarily secular settings. Slip Op. at 12.

The Court also concluded, using analysis favored by Justice O,Connor, that &no reasonable observer would think a neutral program of private choice, where state aid reaches religious schools solely as a result of independent decisions of private individuals, carries with it the imprimatur of government endorsement.8 Slip Op. at 13.

The Court next rejected arguments contending that dispositive constitutional significance should be attributed to the fact that 96 percent of Pilot Scholarship Program students attend religiously-affiliated schools. The Court noted the geographic variations in religious schools, market share (both in Ohio and across the nation) and concluded that to attribute constitutional significance to these figures &would lead to the absurd result that a neutral school-choice program might be permissible in some parts of Ohio, such as Columbus, where a lower percentage of private schools are religious8 but ¬ in inner-city Cleveland, where Ohio has deemed such programs most sorely needed.8 Slip Op. at 15-16. The Court then repeated its statement from an earlier case emphasizing that such focus on statistics &would scarcely provide the certainty that this field stands in need of, nor can we perceive principled standards by which such statistical evidence might be evaluated.8 Slip Op. at 17.

The Court closed its opinion by rejecting arguments that Cleveland,s program should be invalidated based on its thirty-year-old decision striking down a New York program of aid to religious schools. The Court emphasized that this older decision (Committee for Public Education and Religious Liberty v. Nyquist) was intended &unmistakably8 to provide & financial support8 for §arian institutions8 and expressly reserved judgment on programs neutrally providing &generally available8 &public assistance.8 Slip Op. at 19-20. The Court held squarely that Nyquist & does not govern neutral educational assistance programs that, like the program here, offer aid directly to a broad class of individual recipients defined without regard to religion.8 Slip Op. at 19-20.

The Court,s majority decision is supported by two concurrences. Justice O, Connor wrote separately to emphasize similarities between the Pilot Scholarship Program and other programs through which government money reaches religious institutions, as well as to refute claims in Justice Souter,s dissenting opinion that Ohio,s program fails to provide for &true private choice.8 Justice Thomas wrote eloquently, quoting Frederick Douglass and citing the Supreme Court,s decision in Brown v. Board of Education. He also emphasized constitutional reasons why States should enjoy greater freedom in matters touching on religion than the federal government.

Right after the second to last sentence ("Justice Thomas wrote eloquently, quoting Frederick Douglass and citing the Supreme Court,s decision in Brown v. Nyquist) was intended &unmistakably8 to provide &financial support8 for §arian institutions8 and expressly reserved judgment on programs neutrally providing &generally available8 &public assistance.8 Slip Op. at 19-20. The Court held squarely that Nyquist &does not govern neutral educational assistance programs that, like the program here, offer aid directly to a broad class of individual recipients defined without regard to religion.8 Slip Op. at 19-20.

The Court,s majority decision is supported by two concurrences. Justice O,Connor wrote separately to emphasize similarities between the Pilot Scholarship Program and other programs through which government money reaches religious institutions, as well as to refute claims in Justice Souter,s dissenting opinion that Ohio,s program fails to provide for &true private choice.8 Justice Thomas wrote eloquently, quoting Frederick Douglass and citing the Supreme Court,s decision in Brown v. Board of Education. He also emphasized constitutional reasons why States should enjoy greater freedom in matters touching on religion than the federal government.

Dear Scott:

I am writing to respond to certain questions you have raised about the reference to the "approximately 1500 pages" of records in my letter of November 14, 2001, to Ms. Joanne Drake.

Beginning in 2000, NARA staff reviewed all of the records at the Reagan Library that had been withheld from disclosure under the Presidential Records Act restrictions (44 U.S.C. § 2204(a)), whether in response to FOIA requests or as a result of systematic review, during the twelve years following the end of the Reagan presidency, in order to determine which records would be subject to disclosure upon the expiration of the PRA restrictions on January 20, 2001. Records initially withheld under the Presidential restriction categories, particularly those records withheld under P5, might no longer require protection upon re-review, and therefore could be proposed for opening. Conversely, records initially withheld only under P5 might, upon re-review, also warrant protection under an applicable FOIA exemption (e.g., (b)(1) or (b)(6)), or might be determined to be personal records, as defined in 44 U.S.C. § 2201(3).

In the fall of 2000, after NARA staff made an initial determination on records that could be proposed for opening, NARA engaged in informal consultations with the representatives of former President Reagan to inform them of our re-review in hopes of facilitating the first opening of Presidential records no longer covered by the PRA restrictive categories. Following those consultations, NARA agreed to re-review and further discuss with the Reagan representatives the status of what we then thought were approximately 1500 pages of records for which questions were raised as to whether FOIA exemptions might apply and/or whether they might constitute personal records. NARA determined to have these discussions and make its final decisions on these documents following the completion of the notification and review process of the remaining approximately 68,000 pages of Reagan records for which no questions were raised by the Reagan representatives.

In May and June of 2002, as the notification and review process on the "68,000" pages was largely complete, NARA met with the Reagan representatives to discuss the so-called "1500" pages, and on June 27, 2002, provided notice to the former and incumbent Presidents for the proposed opening of what turned out to be approximately 1654 pages (approximately 246 pages were withdrawn under FOIA exemptions or as personal records).

NARA will treat your FOIA request of May 7, 2002, as applying to all 1654 pages of records that are covered by the notice, and will respond once the notice process under Executive Order 13233 is completed.

In addition, NARA has provided notice for the opening of other Reagan Presidential records. On June 14, 2002, NARA opened approximately 23,653 pages of records and 43 minutes of audio tape in response to numerous pending FOIA requests (notice was provided on May 9, 2002, and no privilege was asserted); and on June 10 and June 28, 2002, NARA provided notice for the proposed opening of approximately 16,784 pages and twelve audiotapes of Reagan records. NARA will continue to provide notice on proposed openings on an ongoing basis.

I hope this is responsive to your questions.

Sincerely,

GARY M. STERN
General Counsel

To all,

Attached are draft EOP guidelines and procedures for travel in support of the President and Vice President, and the related transmittal memorandum.

These guidelines are intended to provide supplemental guidance to the Federal Travel Regulations, and other legislation pertinent to federal travel. These supplemental procedures are needed to accommodate the unique requirements and circumstances associated with Presidential and Vice Presidential travel.

The transmittal memorandum details the purpose for developing these procedures and background on the history of Presidential and Vice Presidential travel support. It will also serve as the starting point for our effort to develop and institutionalize Presidential and Vice Presidential travel which will serve the presidency and withstand the scrutiny of a public audit.

We are asking all of you who work in support of the President's and Vice President's travel to review this attachment and provide any comments in writing to the CFO's office (e-mail Kristin Savercool or myself) no later than Monday, July 8, 2002. It is really important for you to present alternative recommendations and complete rationale for all significant comments and issues.

We will incorporate your suggestions and present the final recommended package for final coordination. After final coordination, we will present the package for final approval and immediate implementation.

We look forward to working with you all to finalize these procedures, and believe that they will provide a solid basis for sound financial practices and accounting for Presidential and Vice Presidential travel.

MEMORANDUM FOR EOP CERTIFYING OFFICIALS

THROUGH: PHILLIP D. LARSEN
SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO THE PRESIDENT AND DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF ADMINISTRATION

FROM: JAMES F. DANIEL
CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER

SUBJECT: EOP SUPPLEMENTALTRAVEL PROCEDURES FOR PRESIDENTIAL AND VICE PRESIDENTIAL TRAVEL

1. Purpose. This memorandum transmits for your review, comprehensive supplemental travel guidelines relating to the procurement and payment of travel services in conjunction with Presidential and Vice Presidential travel. The three main purposes of these guidelines are: (1) to ensure quality travel services are available to support the travel requirements of the President and Vice President; (2) to interpret statutory, Federal Travel Regulation, and other policy requirements in a manner that ensures full compliance with all applicable federal laws and regulations; and (3) to ensure full disclosure of all financial activities in the official accounting system.

These guidelines also highlight governing laws, regulations and policies relating to travel in the federal government. The guidelines clarify the roles and responsibilities of the White House Office (WHO), Office of the Vice President (OVP), Chief Financial Officer's (CFO) Travel Services Branch, and the Executive Office of the President's Travel Management Center (TMC). They detail the process by which travel services are ordered and paid for, and highlight the importance of the CFO providing timely and accurate financial information. For instance, the guidelines provide timeframes for submission of trip summaries which are critically important for accurate division of travel expenses between the government and political entities, and for timely payment of vendors and travelers within Prompt Payment requirements.

2. Background. For many years, travel support for the President and Vice President has presented a tremendous challenge in the EOP that has resulted in numerous General Accounting Office (GAO) audits, Congressional inquiries, and management reorganizations. These actions have resulted in millions of dollars in government spending to manage an annual travel budget of less than $1.5 million. More significantly, the current process has required each administration to divert limited human resources from the WHO and OVP to respond to travel related issues.

Each administration has attempted to develop procedures for the WHO and the OVP travel support. These procedures, drafted largely by the administrations' legal counsels, focus on legal requirements and not on generally accepted accounting standards and principles. While, this may have served the needs then, it is not sufficient to meet our current challenges. These travel guidelines are designed to serve our EOP customers and meet our legal compliance and disclosure requirements, while favorably withstanding scrutiny from professional external auditors and accountants.

During the past several years, federal and corporate business processes have evolved significantly, bringing many changes. Changes such as the Travel and Transportation Reform Act, the Prompt Payment Act, use of government credit cards, e-ticketing and the elimination of cash advances, coupled with the requirement to manage and administer political costs in close proximity to official costs, have required the EOP to radically alter its travel support processes and procedures. In addition, the EOP's inclusion in the provisions of the Chief Financial Officers' Act requires us to expand the scope of our travel procedures beyond legal considerations to include sound auditable financial practices.

In addition to the many process changes outlined above, the EOP faces some unique reporting and disclosure challenges not shared by other government agencies. While the Office of Management and Budget only requires recording and reporting of travel related cost at a summary level, the EOP is required to track costs in much greater detail. Congress requires extensive disclosure of Presidential and Vice Presidential travel information in connection with the annual appropriations process. We are required to track the travel of the four principals, i.e., the President, the Vice President, the First Lady, and the spouse of the Vice President, independently of one another. We must track and report the dates, locations and costs for each component such as airlines, lodging, rental cars, meals, et cetera, for each individual trip. We must identify each trip as to the nature of its purpose (i.e., 100% official, mixed official/political, or 100% political) and properly allocate costs accordingly. We must also track costs for Presidential and Vice Presidential trips sponsored by other federal agencies and collect and accurately record reimbursements from these sponsoring agencies.

3. The Current Process. A review of our current travel support process in the EOP found that we are meeting the first requirement criterion, the provision of travel support services as required by WHO and OVP staff in accompaniment of the President and Vice President. However, we found serious internal weaknesses in the historical travel process with regard to both legal compliance, and meeting financial accounting standards for accurate information and timely disclosure.

First, the current travel process provides travel services without proper authorization and documentation from the appropriate agency approving official. Invoices and vouchers often are received which do not have the required authorization approved and recorded in the financial system. This process results in delayed payments to vendors, significant difficulty reconciling bills, and errors in posting to the accounting system. Resolutions under these circumstances are difficult and time consuming for the travel services staff as well as agency staff.

Second, our current process presents a significant challenge to meeting the legal requirements of the Travel and Transportation Reform Act and the Prompt Payment Act in paying travel vouchers and vendor invoices. These laws require payment of proper travel vouchers and vendor invoices within thirty (30) days of receipt.

Third, the current process is not standardized or uniform for travel financial elements such as trip summaries, travel costs, and political reimbursements. This has resulted in confusion and uncertainty as to final resolution of bills associated with a trip. The impact is even greater for mixed trips with official and political components.

4. Political Travel. We recognize that the co-mingling of political and official elements is inherent to travel in accompaniment of the President and Vice President. These guidelines define the process for allocating non-severable (airfare, lodging, rental cars, and meals) costs between government and political entities. They provide standard procedures for authorizing, paying, and collecting reimbursement cost for non-severable activities, and prohibit the treatment of severable political travel services as official in any way. The government rate will not be used nor will any official government credit card be used for severable political travel services.

Travel requirements for non-severable (mixed) travel services will be authorized and paid to vendors as official. The rationale for treating these trips as official is based on the requirement to have the traveler on an official travel authorization, the cost is non-severable, and the government authorized the travel and entered into the agreement with the vendors. Also, since the travel is performed on an official travel authorization, the government rate will apply to all travel services and the government travel credit cards will be used to make payments to travel vendors. Costs incurred will be thoroughly documented, and the political entity will be charged for its share of the costs.

Laws and regulations are mostly silent when it comes to the allocation of travel costs for trips with a mixed official and political nature. The hard-time formula, which divides costs according to a pro-rata share of the principals' time spent at either political or official functions, has been the method used by previous administrations to allocate costs between political or official functions. The formula is documented within a trip summary, and this trip summary then becomes the basis by which all non-severable costs will be allocated.

5. Political Reimbursements. These guidelines make every effort to balance the many federal statutes governing appropriations and reimbursements. While the hard-time formula meets the requirement to not use government resources for non-official activities, if not applied correctly, it could violate the government's prohibition on appropriation augmentation. A direct application of the hard-time formula would result in the political entity reimbursing the government agency appropriation for each element (airline fares, lodging, rental cars, and meal). This principle states that the government may not charge another entity for costs incurred, unless those costs represent an incremental increase to official business costs. However, in the case of air fare, there is no incremental cost to the government. The round trip airfare for an employee travelling to Chicago would be the same, without regard to duration, whether the trip is 100% official, or 60% official and 40% political. Nonetheless, in order that the political entity not benefit from the government, the political entity would be required to reimburse the government for 40% of the round-trip airfare incurred by the government. To avoid augmentation, non-incremental reimbursements for airfare should be deposited to the Treasury miscellaneous general receipts account.

Currently there are several different procedures in use for managing, processing, collecting and paying political reimbursements at the EOP. Each of the elements providing support such as the Executive Residence, the Residence of the Vice President, the White House Office, the Office of the Vice President, the Office of Administration, the White House Airlift Operations, and the White House Communications Agency are administering different procedures. The varying procedures and practices were developed for various reasons over the years such as public law, congressional inquiries, leadership preferences, news articles, legal interpretations, et cetera. We believe the ideal model to collect political reimbursements at the EOP is the one currently authorized and in use by the Executive Residence. The Residence maintains a deposit (specifically authorized by congress) from the political entity, sufficient to cover losses should they be realized. Therefore, the government can fully fund costs of a mixed or political nature and collect reimbursement from the political entity in arrears, without risk to the government.

We strongly recommend the administration petition for the Congressional approval required to make this reimbursement process standard for all EOP agencies. This method would virtually eliminate risk to the government, would significantly reduce administrative costs related to political reimbursements, and would provide a uniform process for handling reimbursements at the EOP. All of these goals are emphasized in the CFO Act and the President's Management Agenda.

6. Conclusion. These guidelines will significantly enhance our ability to meet the service requirements of the WHO and OVP, will fully comply with all applicable laws and regulation, and disclose accurate and timely financial information. We believe that these procedures will correct long-standing weaknesses inherent in the EOP travel process.

We welcome review and comment from the White House Office and Office of the Vice President travel staff, administrative staff and counsel. We look forward to working with these offices to further refine these travel procedures and develop a finished product that will significantly enhance the travel support to the President and Vice President.

DRAFT

Financial Guidelines and Procedures for Travel in Accompaniment of the President and Vice President

I. PURPOSE

This document provides guidelines and procedures for the Executive Office of the President (EOP) regarding travel in accompaniment of the President and Vice President.

II. REQUIREMENT

These procedures are written to satisfy the following three criteria:

1. To provide complete travel services to the staff accompanying the President and Vice President, including air travel, lodging, vehicle rental and meals and incidentals.
2. To provide these services in full compliance with all applicable federal laws and regulations, including the Travel and Transportation Reform Act of 1998, the Prompt Payment Act of 1983, the Federal Travel Regulations, Federal Appropriations Law, and generally accepted accounting standards and principles.
3. To provide accurate accounting information on travel obligations and expenditures and timely disclosure of this information, both to the White House Office (WHO) and Office of the Vice President (OVP) as well as disclosure in auditable financial statements. This latter criterion is critical, as the EOP is now included within the guidelines of the Chief Financial Officer's Act, and will be audited at the end of fiscal year 2003.

III. APPLICABILITY

These guidelines apply to all agencies within the EOP who participate in travel in accompaniment of the President and Vice President

V. DEFINITIONS

Certifying Official (WHO/OVP) - Agency official responsible and liable for the legality of proposed payments and for the amount of illegal or improper payments resulting from their certification.

Travel Management Center (TMC) - The contracted agent for procurement of travel related services such as airline tickets, lodging reservations, and vehicle rentals while in travel status.

CFO's Travel Services Branch - Group assigned to manage the business aspects of Presidential and Vice Presidential travel, to include financial and procurement services.

Disbursing Officer (CFO's Office) - An officer or employee of a federal department or agency, civilian or military, designated to disburse monies and render accounts in accordance with laws and regulations governing the disbursement of public funds.

Government Purchase Card - Government credit card used for the payment of non-travel related goods and services (i.e. staging, pipe and drape, banners, etc.), in support of events during Presidential travel.

Government Travel Card - Government credit card used for the payment of travel related services (lodging, airfare, vehicle rentals, etc.) in support of Presidential travel.

Hard-time Formula - Financial formula used to determine the official and political allocations for mixed trips. This formula is based on the pro-rata share of minutes spent at official and political functions on a given trip. This formula is applied to the expenses of Presidential travel and allocated appropriately to the official and political entity for payment of the expenses. (e.g., Official – 60%, Political – 40%)

Mixed Travel - Travel involving official and political duties associated with a trip in advance or in accompaniment of the President or Vice President.

Political Travel - Travel involving political duties associated with a trip in advance or in accompaniment of the President or Vice President.

Presidential and Vice Presidential Travel - Travel involving official duties associated with a trip in advance or in accompaniment of the President, Vice President, First Lady or the spouse of the Vice President, which is under an official travel authorization.

Severable Costs - Costs able to be divided into independent obligations of official and political entities.

V. RESPONSIBILITIES

Official Traveler - Participates in all aspects of official and/or mixed travel in support of the President or Vice President including air travel, lodging, vehicle rental, and vouchered expenses, having obtained an approved travel authorization from his or her agency's certifying official.

Certifying Official (WHO/OVP) - Reviews and approves all requests for travel services, including travel authorizations, lodging reservations, vehicle rental reservations, and travel vouchers, to ensure no travel services are procured for travelers who are not properly authorized. Approves and certifies for payment all invoices and vouchers resulting from authorizations.

Travel Management Center (TMC) - In adherence to the terms of its contract with the Office of Administration, provides travel services to properly authorized travelers in conjunction with official travel of the President and Vice President.

CFO's Travel Services Branch - Reviews all travel related expenditures, reconciles travel payments for each trip, and breaks out cost allocations for travel with mixed official/political purpose based on trip summaries provided by WHO/OVP.

Disbursing Officer (CFO's Office) – Ensures payments are in proper form, including all supporting documentation, before authorizing disbursement by the Department of the Treasury.

VI. POLICY

A. Travel Authorization. A travel authorization (TA) is mandatory for all travel. It must be approved and recorded for all participating individuals, in accordance with the Federal Travel Regulations (FTR), § 301-2.1.

1. All TAs will designate type of travel (i.e. 100% official, mixed or 100% political).

2. All TAs must be approved by the Agency Head or a person with delegated authority.

3. If a TA is deemed 100% political, none of the following costs can be charged to the government credit card: airfare, vehicle rental, or lodging.

B. Trip Summaries. For all Presidential and Vice Presidential trips, a standardized trip summary will be completed.

The standardized trip summary will include itinerary, hard time cost breakouts for complete swings (trips beginning when Principal departs DC area and completed when Principal returns to DC area) and will identify all accompanying personnel as 100% official, 100% political or mixed.

The hard time formula will be used to determine official and political allocation for mixed trips. This formula is based on the pro-rata share of minutes spent at official and political functions on a given trip.

Trip summaries are required to be submitted to the CFO's travel services center no later than 7 calendar days following the completion of the trip.

C. Reservation and Payment for travel related services. The following outlines the policy for making reservations and payments for travel related services.

1. 100% official and mixed trips

a. Presidential travel with a mixed agenda (political and official events) will be treated as official travel for purposes of authorization and payment.
b. Government travel cards will be used for the reservation and immediate payment of travel services, to include airfare, lodging and rental vehicles for official and mixed travel in accordance with the Travel and Transportation Reform Act of 1998.
c. Government purchase cards will be used for immediate payment of official expenses other than the categories listed above (airfare, lodging and rental vehicles).
d. Travel services (airline tickets, lodging, and vehicle rental) for travelers on official and mixed trips will be procured paid at the government rate. The official component of the travel warrants the use of the government rate for mixed trip.
e. Incremental severable costs (hotel, car rentals and vouchers) will be reimbursed to the agency appropriation that incurred the cost. Non-incremental costs (airfare) will be deposited to the Treasury general receipts fund.
f. The official portion of the travelers' travel vouchers will be paid upon receipt by official funds as required by the Travel and Transportation Act of 1998. The vouchers will be forwarded to the political party if travel is mixed. The political party will send the political reimbursement portion directly to the travelers' home addresses.
g. Travel bills (airfare, lodging, and vehicle rental) will be grouped by trip and presented monthly for review and certification by the agencies certifying officials for 100% official trips.
h. Travel bills for mixed and political trips, will be grouped by trip and presented monthly to the White House or Vice President's office to forward to the political party.

2. 100% political trips

a. Travel services (airfare, lodging and car rental) for official travelers will be arranged and paid separately from 100% political travelers. The government travel credit card may not be used for any cost, which is 100% political and severable.

b. All bills (airfare, hotels, car rental, and vouchers) will be forwarded to the Travel Services Branch. All invoices will be logged in by the Travel Services Branch and forwarded to the WHO or the OVP. They will then forward all invoices to the correct political party.

c. The use of the contracted Travel Management Center (TMC) will be available for the purchase of travel services and will be secured by a non-government credit card.

VII. PROCEDURES

A. Authorizations for Travel Accommodations

When a trip is announced, the advance office will assign a trip number. This number will be indicated on the travel authorizations, and all associated requests for travel services.

1. Airline Tickets

a. The Travel Management Center (TMC) will make all reservations for travelers on official, mixed and political trips. The TMC may make reservations and procure travel for personal and political travel.

b. All travelers must have an approved travel authorization (indicating the trip number) before tickets are purchased.

In rare instances when tickets must be issued, or reservations made without an approved written travel authorization, a verbal approval will be substituted by designated agency officials. A list of authorized certifying officials will be maintained by the TMC, and updated as necessary by the White House Office and Office of the Vice President.

c. For official and mixed trips, the government rate will be used and pre-payment will be made using the WHO or OVP corporate travel accounts.

d. For 100% political trips, payment will be made with a non-government credit card at the commercial rate.

In the event costs related to a 100% political trip are charged to the government in error, the political entity will reimburse the government for the commercial rate of the airline tickets. The difference between the commercial and government rates will be deposited in the U.S. Treasury Miscellaneous Receipts account

2. Lodging

a. When trip is announced, WHO and/or OVP advance offices will notify the White House Hotel Program Manager, and request lodging arrangements.

b. Each component office with traveling staff must provide a lodging request form to the WH Hotel Program Manager, which includes:

1. trip number
2. number of rooms requested,

2. names of travelers (if known and appropriate),
3. point of contact name and phone number for each component

Components may not make room reservations for anyone who does not have or will not have an approved travel authorization for the trip in question.

c. The WH Hotel Program Manager will coordinate with all non-WH, non-OVP traveling staff to obtain their credit card information for reservation and payment of those components lodging arrangements.
d. The WH Hotel Program Manager will issue a hotel letter reflecting all information requested above and instructing the hotel to bill each component individually, only for the rooms requested on the hotel letter.
e. Each component may change, add or delete travelers. They must contact the hotel directly to make the changes. The TAs for all approved travelers should be faxed to the hotel, prior to the use of the rooms, and hotels instructed to bill only for approved travelers. The hotel contact name and number will be listed on the hotel letter, which will be e-mailed to each component.
f. For official and mixed trips, the government contract rate will be used and pre-payment will be made using the WHO or OVP corporate travel accounts.
g. For 100% political trips, the hotel letter will provide a non-government credit card number, and contact information for pre-payment. The commercial rate should be charged, including tax.

In the event costs related to a 100% political trip are charged to the government in error, the political entity will reimburse the government for the commercial rate of the lodging costs. The difference between the commercial and government rates will be paid to the lodging provider.

3. Vehicle Rentals

a. When trip is announced, the WHO advance office, OVP advance office, or press office will complete a vehicle requisition form. Each form will include:

1. Travelers' names
2. Travelers' travel authorization numbers
3. Purpose of trip
4. Vehicle type
4. Pick up and drop off location and date
5. Name of requesting office
6. Point of contact name and phone number
7. Name and phone number of staff lead
8. Date of request
9. Trip number

b. The vehicle requisition form must be signed by a designated certifying official in the WHO, OVP, or press office.
c. Once approved, the form is submitted to the TMC. For 100% official and mixed trips the TMC will make reservations and pay the vehicle rental with the WHO, OVP, or press office corporate travel credit cards.
d. For 100% political trips, the vehicle requisition form will provide a non-government credit card number, and contact information for payment. The commercial rate should be charged, including tax.

In the event costs related to a 100% political trip are charged to the government in error, the political entity will reimburse the government for the commercial rate of the vehicle rental costs. The difference between the commercial and government rates will be paid to the rental company.

B. Vendor Payment Reconciliation and Payment to Credit Card Company

1. All official and mixed payments for airfare, hotels, and vehicle rental will be made with the White House Office or Vice President's Office official corporate travel credit accounts. These government issued credit accounts are for expenses related to official travel only.

Government credit accounts cannot be used for 100 percent political costs. Traveler must provide credit account for use by TMC when trips are 100% political.

a. At the conclusion of each trip, the TMC will reconcile each airfare, lodging, or vehicle rental bill, ensuring that proper payments have been made for authorized WHO and OVP travelers.
b. On a monthly basis, the TMC will reconcile the monthly credit account bill against the individual trip bills, breaking out and identifying all charges by TA number and trip number. The TMC will forward the reconciled bills to the CFO's travel services center for payment.
c. WHO or OVP will forward trip summaries to the CFO's travel services center no later than 7 calendar days following completion of a Presidential or Vice Presidential trip. One trip summary will be provided per Presidential or Vice Presidential swing. The trip summary will include each trip site, the number of official/political minutes at each trip site, and the percentage political/official time. The summaries will also provide an overall political/official percentage split, if warranted, based on the entire swing. This will be the basis for cost allocations for the traveling staff. The summaries must also clearly identify travelers who were designated to be 100% official or 100% political at all times.
d. Based on the trip summary, the CFO's office will allocate the political versus official costs of the reconciled trip costs. A financial tracking report will be created for each trip listing a detailed breakout of airfare, hotel, vehicle rental, voucher and site costs (see attached example).

e. On a monthly basis, the CFO's travel services center will provide the WHO and OVP the financial tracking reports for trips completed in the prior month, and the accompanying documentation, for approval and signature by the WHO/OVP certifying officials.

These financial tracking reports will report all costs for each individual trip. They will be used for approval and payment to the credit card company of airfare, lodging, and vehicle rental costs that have been paid by government credit accounts.

f. The WHO and OVP will review and approve the allocation of costs, certify the official portion for payment, and forward the political financial tracking report with accompanying back-up to the appropriate political entity for payment of the political portion.

g. When approved, the government will pay the credit card company for the official portion only of the monthly reconciled bill, based on the certified financial tracking reports.

h. The political entity will send a check to the credit card company for the amount of the political share of the trip costs. They will also provide WHO/OVP with a copy of the check as confirmation of payment.

C. Vouchers

1. When a trip is announced, WHO and OVP staffs will complete and approve travel authorization forms for all travelling staff.
2. Staff will use their personal resources to purchase meals and incidentals while on travel status.
3. Within five days after completion of the trip, travelers will submit completed travel vouchers and accompanying receipts for reimbursement of meals and incidental costs incurred on travel status to their certifying officer for approval and certification.
4. The WHO/OVP certifying officers will forward vouchers to CFO's office for processing and payment.
5. If trip is 100% political WHO/OVP will forward vouchers to political entity for payment in full.
6. If trip is 100% official, the Government will reimburse traveler in full.
7. If trip is mixed, the Government will reimburse traveler for official portion only. The CFO's travel services center will break out official and political costs based on trip summaries provided by the WHO/OVP. The travel services center will forward copies of the vouchers to the WHO/OVP certifying officials, who will then forward them to the political entity. The political entity will issue checks to the travelers, sent to their home addresses, for the political share of their vouchered costs. Following payment, the political entity will provide confirmation of the voucher payments to the WHO/OVP certifying officers.

D. Authorization and Payment of Site Expenses

1. Authorization

a. The CFO's travel services center will contact the advance staff lead to identify the type of visit (i.e., Tier I, II, or III event), to obtain an initial estimate of expenses for the event, to exchange contact numbers, and to identify the event funding sponsor.

b. The travel services center will contact the financial point of contact for the sponsoring event host(s) to establish the total host budget. A Funds Commitment letter will be prepared and faxed to the host point(s) of contact for review and signature. This letter will provide confirmation of the host's intent to support the Presidential trip and the total budget amount. If the White House is the sponsoring host, the CFO's accounting office will provide the total budget.

c. The CFO's travel services center will inform the staff and press leads of the approved budget for the official and press segments of the visit.

d. The CFO's travel services center will authorize the lead to contact vendors to arrange for services. The leads will be instructed that they are not authorized to obligate the government for services. Once suitable vendors have been identified, the trip leads will forward vendor names to the CFO's travel services center, or request that the vendor contact the CFO's travel services center directly.

e. The CFO's office will enter into a contract or agreement with the vendor and will provide billing instructions.

f. Upon receipt of the vendor information, the travel services center will contact each vendor to explain the billing procedures, provide point of contact numbers, and obtain written estimates of the goods/services to initiate the proper procurement procedures.

g. The travel services center will record the initial estimates in the CFO financial tracking report.

h. The travel services center will coordinate with the staff leads to ensure the written estimates accurately reflect the goods and services requested.

6. Payment

a. Upon conclusion of the event, final invoices are faxed to the CFO's travel services center. Each invoice will be reconciled by the travel services center and verified by the advance staff lead prior to processing for payment.

b. Upon completion of the reconciliation and verification process, the invoice will be forwarded to the WHO/OVP certifying officer for approval and certification.

c. Once the invoices have been approved for payment, the CFO's office will pay the vendor invoice with appropriate payment method (e.g., credit card, IMPAC check, U.S. Treasury Check) and update the CFO financial tracking report with final site costs.

VIII. SAMPLE FORMS AND MEMORANDA (Will be provided at briefing)

A. Draft memoranda to TMC on Issuance and Payment of Airline Tickets
B. Airfare reconciliation worksheet
C. Draft memoranda requesting lodging reservations
D. Draft hotel letter detailing travelers by component and detailed payment instructions
E. Sample hotel reconciliation worksheet
A. Draft memoranda to TMC on issuance of vehicle rental reservations and payment
G. Sample staff vehicle requisition form
H. Sample press vehicle requisition form
I. Sample vehicle rental reconciliation worksheet
J. Payment package with reconciled financial tracking summaries per trip, which will be sent monthly to WHO/OVP. Package includes:
    1. Draft memorandum to WHO/OVP transmitting trip financial tracking report/s and supporting documentation
    2. Sample trip financial tracking report, highlighting official share
    3. Draft memorandum to WHO/OVP transmitting trip financial tracking report/s and supporting documentation to political entity
    4. Sample trip financial tracking report, highlighting political share
    5. Sample trip summary
    6. Trip status listing
K. Draft transmittal memorandum requesting travel voucher certification
L. Sample travel authorization/travel voucher reconciliation form
M. Office of Presidential Advance event designation
N. Sample host letter of financial commitment for site costs
O. Sample site cost reconciliation

White House Mess Hours - July 4th Weekend

In observance of the holiday, the White House Mess will be closed on Thursday, July 4th, and also on Saturday, July 6, 2002. The Mess will be open Friday, July 5th, but will close early at 6 PM. In the event it is deemed necessary to change these arrangements, all Mess members will be notified. We apologize for any inconvenience this may cause.

Phil -- can you shoot both of us a copy of whatever the current version is of Mark's doc -- it used to be called Proposed Transition Plan and is the one with a kind of structural/org chart at p. 5 -- probably the current version is the one that was used for today's 4:45 transition meeting w/ Sec. Card, Gov. Ridge, etc.? Thanks -- E.

Subject: OTP

The following is the current plan:

In the coming weeks, we will set up a 15-36 person OTP transition operation w/in OMB. At a minimum , it will have folks dedicated to the logistics of transition (including HR, systems, management, personnel, legal.) It will be designed to conduct diligence and to produce written deliverables for the future Secretary. These deliverables should a include a step by step strategy for transferring component agencies to the new Department. OTP will be separate from whatever policy apparatus is utilized to advise the President on Homeland matters.

The rules for document sharing/use will need to be simple and clear.

All of the Interns (Benji McMurry, Eric Eisnaugle, and Damara Griffith) are now here, and are in Room 158. They are all law students, but are aware that they will be utilized for everything from filing, copying etc... to legal research,

drafting memos, and whatever else you need them to do.

Thanks,

Allison

Phil -- Thanks for jumping in, especially on a busy pre-departure day.
Please send me a copy of this afternoon's draft of the transition org chart, which I understand has been revised along the lines we (and you and Tim) discussed. Please also cc: Tim and Brett if you haven't already.
Thanks -- E.

STATEMENT OF ELIZABETH G. DURANT
SENATE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING
HEARINGS ON THE IMPORTATION OF PHARMACEUTICAL PRODUCTS
JULY 9, 2002

Mr. Chairman, members of the Committee, thank you for this opportunity to testify. I am Elizabeth Durant, Executive Director of Trade Programs at the U.S. Customs Service. Today I would like to discuss with you U.S. Customs' efforts to address the ever-increasing trend of personal and bulk importation of pharmaceutical products into the United States.

As you know, the top priority of the Customs Service following the events of September 11 is to help protect the United States from terrorist attacks. This is a formidable task given the number of passengers, vehicles, and goods that pass through our nation's borders each year. Customs is responsible for processing 470 million people, 129 million cars, and nearly 20 million trucks, railcars, and sea containers that arrive into the United States every year.

In our role as America's frontline, the Customs Service also enforces over 400 requirements for more than 40 other federal agencies at U.S. borders. These include the laws that prohibit the importation of illegal or unapproved pharmaceuticals that fall under the jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Administration, or FDA.

The challenge facing Customs today on this front is enormous. Although our main focus has shifted to anti-terrorism, we are committed to fulfilling all aspects of our mission. This includes enforcing FDA requirements on imported pharmaceuticals to help ensure the safety and well being of the American public. We are concerned about three particular ways that pharmaceuticals are imported: those that are purchased over the Internet and shipped through our international mail or express courier facilities; those carried into the United States by individuals transiting our land borders; and bulk shipments of adulterated or counterfeit pharmaceuticals.

Millions of packages come through mail and express courier facilities every year. Thousands of packages, particularly in the mail, are found to contain illegal and unapproved pharmaceuticals. We also estimate that 10 million people cross the land border annually carrying the same unapproved products. A disturbing trend is the increase in bulk shipments through the mail indicating that these products could be making their way to pharmacy shelves.

The growth of the Internet has spawned a wave of pharmaceutical purchases on-line. These purchases are commonly sent through international mail. We have Customs Inspectors stationed at fourteen international mail facilities across the United States to contend with these shipments. Customs is also located in or near twenty-nine strategically located express courier facilities throughout the country.

Detecting prohibited pharmaceuticals among the tens of millions of parcels passing through Customs each year presents a massive challenge. Our limited resources require a risk management approach, with which we utilize advance intelligence, records of past seizures, and other factors to locate packages that present the most significant threat.

A key difference between the mail and express environments is the level of automation. Customs receives virtually no advance information on mail shipments, making it impossible to target shipments for closer inspection or referral to another agency. Express couriers are required to provide advance manifests, making targeting easier. We have found, however, that many express packages containing pharmaceuticals are manifested as documents.

Customs laboratories also play a critical part in our investigations. Their expertise in analyzing everything from textiles, to foreign oil, to food products to determine point of origin and composition is world-renowned. We maintain fully equipped labs at seven locations around the country and we have three mobile labs to deploy as needed.

We are confident in the forensic capability of our labs to find discrepancies in shipments of bulk and finished pharmaceuticals. But where we do require assistance, specifically from the FDA, is in the establishment of effective national standards for the interdiction of pharmaceuticals subject to FDA laws.

The development of such standards is critical to Customs. To that end, we have been working closely with FDA to develop the needed guidelines. We began by forming a task force to examine pharmaceutical purchases shipped by U.S. mail. The task force set up a thirty-day pilot program at the Los Angeles mail facility in 2001. During the program, FDA detailed four full-time employees who observed first-hand the daunting volume of packages screened by Customs every day.

Over a period of twenty-four workdays, the FDA detained a total of 721 parcels. 677 parcels, or just over 93 percent of this amount, were denied entry and 44, or six percent, were released for delivery by the Postal Service. It is important to note that without the presence of FDA inspectors, U.S. Customs would have had to detain some 3,000 packages per week, or about 15,000 packages over an equal time span, under the existing guidelines provided to our personnel.

At that time, 102 parcels underwent detailed laboratory analysis to determine whether the pills and capsules contained the claimed active ingredient and/or contained a scheduled substance. The results of these analyses found 9 instances in which the imported pharmaceutical did not contain an active pharmaceutical ingredient, but were merely found to contain substances such as starch or sugar.

Customs also initiated a multi-faceted counterfeit pharmaceutical interdiction program called "Operation Safeguard". The first phase of Operation Safeguard was carried out between September and October of 2000 at the International Mail Branches at Dulles Airport and Oakland, California. This operation was intended to give Customs a snapshot of the types of pharmaceutical products entering the United States. That snapshot revealed that a vast percentage - - perhaps as much as eighty to ninety percent - - of the pharmaceuticals that enter the U.S. via the mail do so in a manner that violates present FDA or other requirements.

Counterfeit pharmaceuticals enter in both wholesale and retail quantities. Additional problems include expired materials, products that have not been approved by the FDA for usage, products made in facilities not under proper regulation and products not having the proper usage instructions. To offer an example, one seizure included a three thousand-tablet shipment of a counterfeit drug with an expiration date of 1980 on it.

Additionally, it was found that many parcels contained different types of pharmaceuticals that, if taken simultaneously, could cause dangerous interactions. Individuals not under the direct supervision of a physician could easily purchase these products. Thus, we cannot assume that these products would be used properly. It is important to note that after three weeks of this phase of Operation Safeguard, the quantity of illegal and defective pharmaceutical shipments slowed significantly.

During a recent phase of Operation Safeguard that took place at two International Mail Branches, ____ parcels containing questionable pharmaceuticals underwent intensive chemical analysis. The analyses of these products showed that _____ of the so-called pharmaceuticals contained no active ingredient. Additionally, during this phase of the operation it was found that large parcels of fake or gray market pharmaceuticals are being split into different mail shipments but arrive at the same address. Accordingly, there is a possibility that state side pharmaceutical distributors could be using these products as a source of supply.

In light of these results and the volume of imports, it is clear that this remains an overwhelming problem and Customs needs help from FDA to develop a more practical and workable approach. Customs would like to see clear direction, either through legislation or policy from FDA that would allow for the immediate return of all imported pharmaceuticals. The FDA has proposed to the Secretary of Health and Human Services a regulatory change that would authorize this but it has not been approved.

Travelers who attempt to import pharmaceuticals upon their return to the U.S. are also a source of concern. Again, we are seeking the guidance of the FDA on this front. Recently, Customs proposed a plan that more sharply defines the current broad discretion given to Customs inspectors to decide whether or not an importation is for a "legitimate personal medical use". That plan is currently under review by both agencies.

In addition to Operation Safeguard, our Office of Investigations is continuing to work with the FDA to combat the sale of prohibited pharmaceuticals via the Internet. Customs' Cybersmuggling Center is playing a leading role in these cases. Our efforts to date have included a successful investigation with authorities in Thailand that closed down seven on-line pharmacy sites operating in that country. As a result, we saw a marked decrease in subsequent pharmaceutical seizures from Thailand.

From an overall perspective, a spiraling volume of goods at our borders has put immense pressure on our ability to enforce the nation's laws while facilitating international trade. We have taken many steps to address anticipated challenges, including refinement of our targeting approach and development of a resource allocation model to project future staffing needs across the country. But we still face a daunting workload, which has been exacerbated by the need to secure the borders against the threat of terrorism.

I want to thank you and the members of the committee for considering the Customs Service in your review of the importation of personal and bulk pharmaceuticals. This is an issue that speaks directly to our mission. We will continue to make every effort possible to work with the Congress and our fellow inspection agencies to address the health and safety concerns of the American people.

Karl Rove's Legal Tricks, The Nation
by JOHN NICHOLS

When Texas Supreme Court Justice Priscilla Owen comes before the Senate Judiciary Committee for the hearing on her nomination to the Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit, she will face an unprecedented level of criticism from individuals and organizations familiar with her record of extreme right-wing judicial activism. The noisiest of these complaints is unlikely, however, to rival the loud critique offered by one of her fellow justices on the state court.

In 2000, when the Texas high court rejected one of many attempts by Owen to prevent a young woman from obtaining an abortion without parental consent, one of the justices who formed the majority felt it was necessary to explicitly condemn Owen's effort to thwart the clear intent of the law. To follow Owen's lead, the justice declared, "would be an unconscionable act of judicial activism."

The Texas justice who identified Owen as a radical jurist because of her willingness to rewrite laws in order to achieve results never intended by legislators, no longer serves on the state court. He has a new job--as President George W. Bush's in-house lawyer. That means that as the Senate Judiciary Committee prepares for a high-stakes hearing on Owen's nomination to a place on the second-highest rung of the federal judiciary, White House counsel Alberto Gonzales finds himself in the uncomfortable position of having to sing the praises of a woman he knows from personal experience to be a right-wing radical.

How did Gonzales, who as White House counsel heads the Bush Administration's screening committee on judicial appointments, wind up on the cheerleading squad for an appeals court nominee whose extremism he scored barely two years ago? That's easy. Gonzales is not in charge on this one. "Owen," explains Craig McDonald, director of the nonpartisan group Texans for Public Justice, "is a Karl Rove special."

Rove, the political Svengali who ran George W. Bush's presidential campaign and parlayed that experience into a taxpayer-funded job as White House senior adviser, has orchestrated Owen's rapid rise ever since he plucked her from a gig as an undistinguished hired gun for Transcontinental Gas Pipe Line and other energy firms to make her his pet judicial candidate. Back in 1994 the man whom Lone Star pols still refer to as "Bush's brain" wanted to make the state's top court politically friendly for the man he was about to make governor. Owen seemed suitably pliable, and with Rove guiding her campaign, the political unknown who in sixteen years as a corporate lawyer was the sole counsel on only four cases that were tried to a verdict was suddenly a Texas Supreme Court justice. Now Rove is determined to place his prot?g?e on one of the most influential appeals court benches in the land. This confirmation crusade is not about Owen, who has never been anything more than a political pawn for the nation's premier GOP operative. It's not even about Rove's desire to exact revenge for the Senate Judiciary Committee's rejection of Mississippi Judge Charles Pickering's nomination to serve on the Fifth Circuit. Rather, Rove is working to win the fight to confirm Owen in order to send a powerful signal to movement conservatives about this Administration's determination to pack the courts with judicial activists who are willing to challenge antidiscrimination laws, upset basic protections for workers and consumers, and, above all, build a judicial infrastructure that will eventually overturn abortion rights. "Clearly," says McDonald, "Rove picked her as a favor to the right wing because she is the darling of the right wing."

Satisfying the far right--especially the fundamentalist right, for whom banning abortion remains priority number one--is Rove's special mission. Speaking in March to what he thought was a closed-door meeting of the Family Research Council, now the most influential Christian conservative activist group in the land, Rove preached about how the Administration and Republicans in Congress are "creating a culture of life" with legislation such as the House-passed Born-Alive Infants Protection Act. But, Rove said, the fundamental fight is for control of the courts. "We need to find ways to win the war," he told 300 of the nation's most determined abortion foes. "This is a gigantic war with a whole series of battles that need to be fought."

The next battle is likely to be carried out on behalf of Owen, who "exemplifies the most extreme hostility to reproductive rights of any of the nominees that President Bush has named," according to Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League. Placing Owen on an appeals court that is already one of the most conservative in the land, Michelman argues, could have a devastating impact on the right to choose in Southern states, where that right is already under assault. Antiabortion activists effectively share Michelman's views: In an action alert urging members to make calls on Owen's behalf to Pennsylvania Republican Senator Arlen Specter, a supporter of abortion rights who sits on the Judiciary Committee, the Pennsylvania Pro-Life Federation said of her: "At least one of [Bush's] appointments has already faced the abortion issue as a judge and ruled for the pro-life side."

For the Bush team, which always worries about its right flank, the coming fight over Owen's nomination offers an opportunity to energize right-wing troops for the US Supreme Court nomination wars--where the Administration will seek to upset the Court's prochoice majority--which are as close as Chief Justice William Rehnquist's next visit to his back doctor; for the 2002 Senate races that will determine the partisan balance in Washington; and for the 2004 re-election campaign, which is the continual obsession of the Bush team. Essential to all of Rove's calculations is a plan to energize the religious right. Within Republican circles, Rove quietly expresses frustration with the fact that 4 million Americans who identify themselves as Christian fundamentalists, evangelicals or Pentecostals did not vote in 2000. "We may have failed to motivate them," grumbles Rove. He has heard the message of conservative activists like Gary Bauer and Focus on the Family's James Dobson, who say that the battle to shape federal courts willing to overturn the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision legalizing abortion is what their constituents care about.

Ever since Bush's election, religious right activists have been busy developing their capacity to wage judicial confirmation fights, preparing for what Dobson refers to as the "critical moment" when a Supreme Court opening occurs. Asserting that the battles over nominations are bringing on a "watershed moment in American History," the Christian Coalition is stepping up activism on judicial selection issues. The Free Congress Foundation is developing files on Senate Democrats with an eye toward using their own statements about GOP delays in filling judicial vacancies during the Clinton years against them. Concerned Women for America, a 500,000-member social policy powerhouse, recently made Tom Jipping--the right's ablest analyst of confirmation fights--its "senior fellow in legal studies." And Jipping's spin is now regularly echoed, often down to the exact phrasing, on the Wall Street Journal editorial page, in the pages of conservative publications such as National Review and Human Events, and on radio personality Rush Limbaugh's nationally syndicated program.

Conscious of the religious right's intense interest in the shape of the federal judiciary, Rove has for some time been willing to clear his calendar--easily one of the most packed in Washington--in order to attend meetings of the White House judicial selection task force. His presence is just one indication of the Bush Administration's willingness to politicize the judicial selection process to a greater extent than any previous administration. Dispensing with long-established bipartisan approaches, the White House ended the practice of having the American Bar Association screen potential nominees, began withholding documents from the Senate Judiciary Committee and transformed the White House into a command center for plotting to turn nomination fights into political dynamite. At GOP fundraising events, President Bush now repeats the mantra, "We've got to get good, conservative judges appointed to the bench and approved by the United States Senate."

To that end, Rove has begun holding regular nomination and confirmation strategy sessions with key senators, GOP operatives from around the country and conservative interest groups. Party activists and campaign contributors have been asked to join the White House in ramping up efforts to defeat Democratic senators who oppose Bush's judicial nominees. After Rove and Vice President Dick Cheney went to Capitol Hill for a closed-door meeting with Senate Republicans, a key Judiciary Committee member, Jeff Sessions, said, "The White House, I'm convinced, is confident and bullish and determined to push this issue, as we are in the Senate."

On Capitol Hill, Rove is working not just with senators but also with members of the House of Representatives. He helped coordinate a May press conference at which two dozen Republican senators--including supposed moderates such as Maine's Susan Collins, who showed up wearing a "Remember Pickering" sticker--took turns accusing Democrats of politicizing the confirmation process. Rove has also forged an alliance with US Representative Thomas Davis of Virginia, the chair of the National Republican Congressional Committee, to get GOP members of the House to build home-state pressure on Judiciary Committee Democrats and to use the concerns about confirmation fights to gin up grassroots activism on behalf of Republican candidates. While polls show Americans in general rate judicial confirmation fights low on their list of concerns, GOP pollster Whit Ayres says, "It's potentially a very significant campaign issue, particularly in generating intensity among Republican voters." That may be even more true now that a June decision by the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals to prohibit required recitation of the Pledge of Allegiance--because of the "one nation under God" line--is being spun by GOP pols as a new reason to "take back the courts."

Rove's most serious work is with the conservative faithful, who he believes can be a counterweight to the coalition of progressive groups that scored a surprising win in their push to prevent the confirmation of Pickering, an old-school Southern conservative. On the very day that the Judiciary Committee rejected Pickering for a place on the court of last resort for most federal cases coming out of Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, Rove mourned Pickering's defeat as a "judicial lynching" before a Family Research Council gathering and promised revenge. And what sweeter revenge could there be than placing Owen--who is even more conservative than Pickering and, at age 47, able to make much more of a lifetime appointment than the 65-year-old Mississippian--on the Fifth Circuit bench?

On one of the nation's most conservative state courts, Owen is part of a militant minority that argues that the court has not veered far enough right. She has written or joined eighty-seven dissents from court decisions she deemed insufficiently activist in scope and character. Her judicial advocacy has taken many forms--from active support for curtailing access to public records, to backing moves to undermine the role and authority of civil juries, to her persistent efforts to ease restrictions on business. On a court with an exceptionally well documented pro-business bias--a poll conducted by the court itself found that 83 percent of the Texas public, 79 percent of Texas lawyers and 48 percent of Texas judges believe campaign contributions play a significant role in determining the court's stance on issues of interest to donors--Owen has distinguished herself as a slavish defender of corporations. "Mention her name and people say, 'Oh, Judge Enron,'" notes Nan Aron, who heads the Washington-based Alliance for Justice. "If you were looking for a judge whose record illustrates the hold that Enron established over state courts, she would be a leading contender."

The recipient of $8,600 in campaign contributions from Enron's political action committee and key executives, including a $1,000 check from Enron CEO Ken Lay, Owen wrote a 1996 Texas Supreme Court decision that allowed Enron to avoid paying $224,989 in school taxes. It may be unfair to suggest that Owen gave Enron special treatment, however, since she sided with her corporate donors in more than 80 percent of the cases in which she participated--a notably higher ratio than the court as a whole. Owen is a "business can do no wrong" judge--even if that means twisting the law in absurd directions. When the court majority, in a relatively rare affront to a land developer, overturned a state law written specifically to exempt a single developer--who happened to be an Owen political contributor--from Austin's water quality standards, she objected so vociferously that the majority opinion concluded: "Most of Justice Owen's dissent is nothing more than inflammatory rhetoric and thus merits no response."

Perhaps the most troubling characteristic of Owen's pro-business record is the determination with which she has led fights to erect barriers that prevent injured consumers from recovering damages from corporations, that restrict the ability of civil juries to side with plaintiffs who sue corporations and that undermine antidiscrimination protections--particularly for women. Owen dissented from a ruling that upheld a jury verdict awarding a woman $160,000 in damages from a vacuum-cleaner sales company after she was raped by one of the firm's door-to-door salesmen; Owen argued that it was unreasonable to have expected the corporation to do the background check that would have revealed the man's previous arrest for indecency with a child.

After Owen was nominated for the Fifth Circuit bench, groups including the Texas AFL-CIO, the Texas Civil Rights Project, the Women's Health and Family Planning Association of Texas and the National Council of Jewish Women sent a letter to President Bush that stated in part: "Justice Owen's activism betrays a judicial philosophy at odds with your own stated goal of nominating judges who will interpret rather than write the law." In a letter to Senate Judiciary Committee chair Patrick Leahy, a prominent Houston attorney who is board certified in civil appellate law wrote: "Justice Owen is the type of judge who can ignore facts--when it helps corporations to do so--yet rail against the failure of her fellow Texas Supreme Court justices to pay more attention to the facts when she wants the court to stop a minor from getting an abortion."

Again and again, the conversation about Owen circles back to abortion. It is on this issue, above all others, that she has distanced herself even from fellow conservatives. In every decision she has written on this issue, she has argued against a woman's right to choose. In a dozen "Jane Doe" cases in which the court was asked to allow a pregnant teenager to bypass the state's parental notification requirements and receive an abortion, Owen voted every time to deny the bypass. When lawyers for a college-bound teenager who was in her fifteenth week of pregnancy--and who had already endured more than a month of legal delays--asked that the high court expedite action on the high school senior's request for permission to bypass the parental notification requirement, the court majority quickly granted the bypass. Owen wrote a dissent that asked: "Why then the rush to judgment?"

"We're going to hear people complaining that Justice Owen is being attacked unfairly by individuals and groups that raise questions about her approach to abortion issues," says Sarah Wheat of the Texas Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League. "But Justice Owen is the one who has made abortion an issue." Noting the nominee's activist record, Wheat adds, "Senators have a responsibility to determine whether federal court nominees can be trusted to uphold the law."

When the Judiciary Committee holds its hearing on Owen, perhaps as early as this month, some Democratic senators are certain to raise concerns. But committee members are already feeling intense pressure from Bush supporters. The Vermont Republican Party is attacking Leahy for creating a "judicial crisis" with his failure to advance the Owen nomination, while the Traditional Values Coalition is attacking him nationally as "an out-of-control chairman leading an out-of-control committee in a time of war." Some Judiciary Committee members, such as New York Democrat Chuck Schumer--who has complained about the Administration's attempt to "stack the nation's bench with right-wing ideologues"--have sent clear signals that they are willing to reject nominees who are not "mainstream" jurists. But there are no guarantees that the committee's Democratic majority will follow Schumer's standard. Some prochoice Democrats, such as Wisconsin Democrat Russ Feingold and North Carolina's John Edwards, have expressed reservations about rejecting nominees on ideological grounds.

Veteran observers of nomination fights say that the Judiciary Committee vote on Owen's nomination could set the parameters not just for future appeals court nominations and confirmations but for the Supreme Court nomination clashes. With the rejection of Pickering, Democrats on the committee signaled that they were willing to block the nomination of a judge with a troubling record of racial insensitivity. Now the question is whether the committee will take into account other forms of extremism--on issues such as workplace discrimination, corporate responsibility and, above all, the right to choose.

Texan Craig McDonald sees it as a worthy battle. "You hear talk about whether this judicial nomination or that judicial nomination deserves to be more controversial," he says. "I would just say that as far as those of us who have watched Priscilla Owen and Karl Rove and George W. Bush for a lot of years are concerned, this is the one that deserves to be controversial."
McDonald adds that "the Owen nomination is not a Texas fight or a Fifth Circuit fight. This is really a struggle to determine whether a political operative, Karl Rove, and his crew are going to determine the makeup of our federal courts."

DPC has scheduled a meeting for Wednesday (July 10) at 3:15 pm in Margaret Spellings' office in the West Wing to discuss issues that could arise out of recent Supreme Court decisions interpreting the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA). Attached below is a list of cases since 1998 with commentary prepared by the National Council on Disability. The other document (ADA Cases) is two very recent cases Troy in DPC added to the list. If you have any questions or a scheduling conflict, please let me know. Thank you.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS INTERPRETING THE AMERICANS WITH DISABILITIES ACT

CASE	DATE RENDERED	QUESTION PRESENTED	HOLDING	IMPLICATION OF DECISION
Pennsylvania Department of Corrections v. Yeskey, 524 U.S. 206 (1998)	June 15, 1998	Whether Title II of the ADA covers state prisons and prisoners.	Title II of the ADA unambiguously extends to state prison inmates.	Demonstrates that the ADA covers some categories of enterprises not expressly mentioned in the Act. Demonstrates breadth and broad coverage of the ADA.
Bragdon v. Abbott, 524 U.S. 624 (1998)	June 25, 1998	1) Whether asymptomatic HIV is a disability under the ADA. 2) When deciding whether a private health care provider must perform invasive procedures on an infectious patient in his office, should courts defer to the provider's professional judgment, as long as it is reasonable in light of then current medical knowledge?	1) Asymptomatic HIV infection is a physical impairment under the ADA. 2) Reproduction is a major life activity under the ADA, which HIV infection substantially limits within the meaning of the ADA. 3) The existence of a significant health risk from treatment or accommodation of person who is disabled must be determined from the standpoint of the person refusing treatment or accommodation, but the risk assessment must be based on medical or other objective evidence, and not simply on that person's good-faith belief that a significant risk exists.	The list of major life activities in the ADA regulations is not exhaustive. This ruling should be very helpful to most persons with HIV trying to establish they have a disability under the ADA. Major life activities under the ADA are not limited to activities that have a public, economic, or daily character.
Wright v. Universal Maritime Service Corp., 525 U.S. 70 (1998)	November 16, 1998	Whether a general arbitration clause in a collective bargaining agreement requires an employee to use the arbitration procedure to address an alleged violation of the ADA.	There is "a presumption of arbitratability" in collective bargaining agreements, but the presumption extends only to interpreting or applying the terms of the collective bargaining agreement. Any union-negotiated waiver of employees' statutory right to a judicial forum for claims of employment discrimination, if valid at all, must be "clear and unmistakable."	The Court did not reach the question whether a waiver would be enforceable if it was, in fact, clear and unmistakable.

CASE	DATE RENDERED	QUESTION PRESENTED	HOLDING	IMPLICATION OF DECISION
Cleveland v. Policy Management Systems Corp., 526 U.S. 795 (1999)	May 24, 1999	The extent to which application for and receipt of disability benefits precludes a person with a disability from bringing an ADA claim.	The Court identified five rationales for claimants making legitimate representations of total disability while pursuing ADA claims. A negative judicial presumption of direct conflict between the two claims should not be applied.	Interrupted a large body of lower court decisions that had prevented individuals who had filed for or were awarded Social Security disability benefits from pursuing ADA employment discrimination claims.
Sutton v. United Airlines, 527 U.S. 471 (1999)	June 22, 1999	Whether corrective and mitigating measures should be considered in determining whether an individual is disabled under the ADA.	Determinations of disability under the ADA must take corrective (mitigating) measures into account.	If a disability is corrected by medication or an assistive device, ADA protections are not available unless the condition still substantially limits or the person is regarded as still substantially limited in a major life activity. If regarded as substantially limited in the major life activity of working, plaintiff must show that employer believed the limitation affected a range of jobs in various classes or a class of jobs, not just a single, particular job. Has the illogical result of permitting employers to terminate a person from a job because of a physical or mental condition and then to argue the condition is not serious enough to constitute a disability.
Murphy v. United Parcel Service, 527 U.S. 516 (1999)	June 22, 1999	1) Whether conditions that are improved with medication should be considered in the medicated or non-medicated state for purposes of determining disability. 2) What does the "regarded as" prong mean under the ADA.	1) Medication is considered a mitigating measure for purposes of determining whether someone has a disability. 2) The inability to perform a single, particular job does not constitute a substantial limitation in the major life activity of working. 3) Likewise, being regarded as unable to perform a single, particular job does not constitute discrimination under the ADA "third prong."	Same principles as Sutton.

CASE	DATE RENDERED	QUESTION PRESENTED	HOLDING	IMPLICATION OF DECISION
Albertson's, Inc. v. Kirkingburg, 527 U.S. 555 (1999)	June 22, 1999	1) Whether having monocular vision constitutes per se disability under the ADA. 2) Whether an employer who requires as a job qualification that an employee meet an otherwise applicable federal safety regulation must justify enforcing the regulation solely because its standard may be waived in an individual case.	1) A showing of significant restriction is required in order to establish substantial limitation. Mitigating measures can include the body's own systems (sometimes subconscious), not just medication and devices. An individual must offer evidence that in their own personal situation, the extent of the limitation is substantial (case by case basis). 2) An employer does not need to justify enforcing a waivable regulation.	Per se disability status could be appropriate in some circumstances. People with monocular vision would not have an "onerous burden" in showing they have a disability. However, a mere difference in an individual's manner of performing an activity does not necessarily constitute a substantial limitation.
Olmstead v. L.C., 527 U.S. 581 (1999)	June 22, 1999	Whether the ADA requires a state to place persons with mental disabilities in community settings rather than in institutions when the state's treatment professionals have determined that community placement is appropriate, and what standard is to be applied in assessing a state's assertion of a fundamental alteration defense to the obligation to afford such community placement.	Undue institutionalization qualifies as discrimination by reason of disability. States are required to place persons with mental disabilities in community settings rather than in institutions when the State's treatment professionals have determined that community placement is appropriate, the transfer from institutional care to a less restrictive setting is not opposed by the individual, and the placement can be reasonably accommodated, taking into account the resources available to the State and the needs of others with mental disabilities. States can resist program modifications that would fundamentally alter the nature of the services or programs.	This decision has become the new impetus for a national effort to increase community-based alternatives and eliminate unjustified institutional placements. The Court indicated that the fundamental alteration defense may be upheld when 1) the cost of community-based care is equitable in view of resources available for the range of services a State provides to others with disabilities; and 2) the State's waiting list for transferring people out of institutions moves at a reasonable pace.

Board of Trustees of the University of Alabama v. Garrett, 531 U.S. 356 (2001)	February 21, 2001	Whether the 11th Amendment bars employees of a state from recovering monetary damages from the state for violations of Title I of the ADA.	Suits by employees of a state to recover money damages from the state for violations of Title I of the ADA are barred by the 11th Amendment.	It is possible that analytical standards applied here will be applied also to bar private suits for monetary damages against states under Title II. However, in footnote 9 of the opinion, the Court indicated that Title I of the ADA is still applicable to the states, and can be enforced by the United States in actions for money damages.
PGA Tour, Inc. v. Martin, 532 U.S. 661 (2001)	May 29, 2001	Whether Title III of the ADA protects qualified entrants with disabilities participating in professional golf tournaments, and whether allowing a golfer with a disability to use a golf cart when all other competitors must walk would "fundamentally alter the nature" of the tournaments.	The concept of public accommodations should be construed liberally to afford people with disabilities equal access to a wide variety of establishments available to people without disabilities. Title III specifically identifies golf courses as a type of public accommodation. PGA Tour's golf tours and their qualifying rounds are covered by Title III of the ADA. The walking rule in golf is not an essential attribute of the game and waiving it will not, therefore, fundamentally alter the nature of the game.	Significant in guiding the application of the reasonable modification requirement in future cases. Professional sports and participants in them are covered by the ADA.

CASE	DATE RENDERED	QUESTION PRESENTED	HOLDING	IMPLICATION OF DECISION
Buckhannon Board and Care Home, Inc. v. W.Va. Dep't of Health and Human Resources, 532 U.S. 598 (2001)	May 29, 2001	Whether federal statutes that allow courts to award attorney's fees and costs to the "prevailing party" authorize awards of fees to parties whose lawsuits brought about voluntary changes in the defendants' conduct but did not result in judgments on the merits or court ordered consent decrees.	A judgment, consent decree, or settlement in a party's favor is required before attorney's fees will be awarded.	Significant turnaround from prevailing view and practices. Defendants will be able to moot an action before a judgment in an effort to avoid an award of attorney's fees, and plaintiffs with meritorious but expensive cases will be deterred from bringing suit.
Toyota Motor Manufacturing, Kentucky, Inc. v. Williams, 122 S.Ct. 681 (2002)	January 8, 2002	What is the proper standard for determining whether an individual is substantially limited in performing manual tasks.	The proper standard for demonstrating "a substantial limitation in the major life activity of performing manual tasks" is whether or not the impairment prevents or restricts performing manual tasks that are "of central importance to most people's daily lives" and has "permanent or long-term" impact. Being limited in performing a "class of manual activities," (i.e., activities affecting the ability to perform specific manual tasks at work) is an insufficient standard for meeting the definition of a qualified individual with a disability under ADA.	Suggests that Congress intended to create a demanding standard for meeting the definition of "disabled" and suggests that people must be visibly and functionally unable to perform in certain specific, socially expected ways before they are entitled to the protection of the ADA.
EEOC v. Waffle House, Inc., 122 S.Ct. 754 (2002)	January 15, 2002	Whether an agreement between an employer and an employee to arbitrate employment-related disputes bars the EEOC from pursuing victim-specific judicial relief under the ADA.	An arbitration agreement does not bar EEOC from pursuing victim-specific judicial relief on behalf of an employee.	Limits an employer's ability to keep disputes out of courts and partially reverses last year's ruling in which the Court said that an employee's signature on an employment contract containing an arbitration agreement waives an employee's right to go to court on their own behalf. Affirms EEOC's ability to assist people with disabilities in asserting their civil rights protections in the workplace.

One Nation Under God
By NEWT GINGRICH

July 3, 2002
COMMENTARY

In the fight to save the Pledge of Allegiance from judicial extremism, let's put the 99 Senators and the publicly pledging House members to the test. Let them vote to remove the two ninth circuit court judges and settle the issue of "one nation under God" once and for all.

It is time for the Congress to follow the advice of Alexander Hamilton and educate the judiciary by removing judges who are assaulting American society. Hamilton writes in Federalist 81 "the important constitutional check which the power of instituting impeachments in one part of the legislative body, and of determining upon them in the other, would give to that body upon the members of the judicial department. This is alone a complete security. There can never be danger that the judges, by a series of deliberate usurpations on the authority of the legislature, would hazard the united resentment of the body intrusted with it, while this body was possessed of the means of punishing their presumption by degrading them from their stations. "[The Federalist papers).

Make no mistake, the decision that having children say the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional because of the phrase "under God" was one more step in a direct assault on American civic culture.

For forty years there has been an ongoing assault by a judicial elite against God being recognized in civil society. From school prayer to religious symbols (including the ten commandments) to now the Pledge of Allegiance elitist lawyers have used the power of the judiciary to reinterpret American civil society.

The plaintiff, Andrew Newdow, has made clear that he is an atheist committed to driving God out of public life. He asserts that he was motivated by reading, "In God we Trust" on a dollar bill while waiting in line in the grocery store. This is merely the first success in an assault against the last remnants of God's recognition in our civil society.

The dissenting Judge, Ferdinand Fernandez, asserted "My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. ' God Bless America' and 'America the Beautiful will be gone for sure, and while use of the first and second stanzas of the Star Spangled Banner will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the third. And currency beware."

Judge Fernandez is right and the time to ACT is now. Ninety-nine senators voting for a resolution is symbolic, so too was the rush to the Capital steps by Members of the House recite the Pledge of Allegiance but this fight runs too deep to be won by symbolic gestures. Congress must follow up its gestures with meaningful action and they possess the power to act.

Under the Constitution the legislative branch can remove the two judges who voted the unconstitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance. The Congress can assert that the country was founded with a Declaration of Independence, which proclaims, "we are endowed by our Creator." The Congress can note that recognition of a Supreme Being has been central to our existence and from Washington's Farewell Address to Lincoln's second inaugural, the leaders of this nation have asserted again and again that a belief in God and an effort to understand and obey God is at the heart of the American civic experience.

Given that understanding of America it is clear that any judge who would drive recognition of God from the public arena so profoundly misunderstands the nature of America that they should not be allowed to stay on the bench. Therefore, these two judges should be removed preferably before the August recess.

Protectors and defenders of the judicial elite will complain that this power to impeach is inappropriate. They will assert that impeachment for anything but criminal behavior is wrong. They will be defending the rights of lawyers to rewrite the Constitution and destroy American civil society while the rest of the society must be defenseless.

This narrow interpretation of impeachment is explicitly wrong. After all, lawyers are not the only people who define America. Every American and the elected representatives of every American have a right to join in that process of definition.

Newt Gingrich, a former speaker of the House of Representatives, is a senior fellow at the American Enterprise Institute.

never be danger that the judges, by a series of deliberate usurpations on the authority of the legislature, would hazard the united resentment of the body intrusted with it, while this body was possessed of the means of punishing their presumption by degrading them from their stations. "[The Federalist papers).

Make no mistake, the decision that having children say the Pledge of Allegiance was unconstitutional because of the phrase "under God" was one more step in a direct assault on American civic culture.

For forty years there has been an ongoing assault by a judicial elite against
God being recognized in civil society. From school prayer to religious symbols
(including the ten commandments) to now the Pledge of Allegiance elitist lawyers have used the power of the judiciary to reinterpret American civil society.

The plaintiff, Andrew Newdow, has made clear that he is an atheist committed to driving God out of public life. He asserts that he was motivated by reading,
"In God we Trust" on a dollar bill while waiting in line in the grocery store.
This is merely the first success in an assault against the last remnants

of
God's recognition in our civil society.

The dissenting Judge, Ferdinand Fernandez, asserted "My reading of the stelliscript suggests that upon Newdow's theory of our Constitution, accepted by my colleagues today, we will soon find ourselves prohibited from using our album of patriotic songs in many public settings. ' God Bless America' and 'America
the Beautiful will be gone for sure, and while use of the first and second stanzas of the Star Spangled Banner will still be permissible, we will be precluded from straying into the third. And currency beware."

Judge Fernandez is right and the time to ACT is now. Ninety-nine senators voting for a resolution is symbolic, so too was the rush to the Capital steps by Members of the House recite the Pledge of Allegiance but this fight runs too deep to be won by symbolic gestures. Congress must follow up its gestures with meaningful action and they possess the power to act.

Under the Constitution the legislative branch can remove the two judges who voted the unconstitutionality of the Pledge of Allegiance. The Congress can assert that the country was founded with a Declaration of Independence, which proclaims, "we are endowed by our Creator." The Congress can note that recognition of a Supreme Being has been central to our existence and from Washington's Farewell Address to Lincoln's second inaugural, the leaders of this nation have asserted again and again that a belief in God and an effort to understand and obey God is at the heart of the American civic experience.

Given that understanding of America it is clear that any judge who would drive recognition of God from the public arena so profoundly misunderstands the nature of America that they should not be allowed to stay on the bench.
Therefore,
these two judges should be removed preferably before the August recess.

Protectors and defenders of the judicial elite will complain that this power to impeach is inappropriate. They will assert that impeachment for anything but criminal behavior is wrong. They will be defending the rights of lawyers to rewrite the Constitution and destroy American civil society while the rest of the society must be defenseless.

This narrow interpretation of impeachment is explicitly wrong. After all, lawyers are not the only people who define America. Every American and
the elected representatives of every American have a right to join in that process of definition.

One Nation Under God

COMMENTARY

In the fight to save the Pledge of Allegiance from judicial extremism, let's put the 99 Senators and the publicly pledging House members to the test. Let them vote to remove the two ninth circuit court judges and settle the issue of "one nation under God" once and for all.

It is time for the Congress to follow the advice of Alexander Hamilton and educate the judiciary by removing judges who are assaulting American society. Hamilton writes in Federalist 81 "the important constitutional check which the power of instituting impeachments in one part of the legislative body, and of determining upon them in the other, would give to that body upon the members of the judicial department. This is alone a complete security. There can never be danger that the judges, by a series of deliberate usurpations on the authority of the legislature, would hazard the united resentment of the body intrusted with it, while this body was possessed of the means of punishing their presumption by degrading them from their stations. Hatch's staff just informed us that Schumer is planning on modifying his amendment to include:
Adding the 5 groups ('93 WTC, Anthrax, USS Cole, OK City, and Embassy bombings) to the 9-11 fund, AND include the "Hatch alternative to apply retrospectively and prospectively.
We assume they will draft it so that a person could not recover from both....
I think this is probably good... because it put the "alternative" out there for us (Hatch was wavering as to whether he would offer....).
Although we will need to determine how we feel about the alternative being retrospective.....
Regardless, we still won't like what they reprot out b/c we disagree with the 5 groups being lumped together and put in the 9-11 fund.

Would Sessions, Grassley, and McConnell be ok with proposing that the 250K PSOB-like program apply both retrospectively and prospectively, consistent with the Administration's position, and therefore that no additional groups be added to 9/11 fund? If so, how many Republicans on Committee would agree?

The markup has been moved back one day from tomorrow to Thursday. Hatch's office says that Sessions, McConnell, and Grassley have serious concerns about putting Hatch's approach in place prospectively b/c it would establish the principle that victims should receive compensation from the federal government. Thus, those three are leaning toward the view that it is better to let a few groups get added to the 9/11 Fund and not put anything in place prospectively. Thus, Hatch's office is not sure whether they will proceed w/ their proposal. Rebecca will call once she talks w/ Macon re this.

Am I reading the Health Act correctly to provide that the caps on damages
Do
Not apply if a state has or does set any statutory limit on the amount of compensatory or punitive damages or the total amount of damages, whether greater or lesser than the amounts set forth in the Act? Section 11(c). That gives the states quite a way to get around it.

Subject: Possible Suspension Bill

From preliminary reports, H.R. 3892 - Judicial Improvements Act of 2002 (JUD - Coble) - is likely going to be voted on in the House under suspension of the rules this coming Monday, July 15th.

Please advise if you think a SAP should be issued on this bill. (If so, who should draft.)

H.R. 3892 would establish a new chapter in the federal judicial code regarding complaints against judges and disciplinary procedures. The bill was reported amended on May 14th by the House Judiciary Committee and placed on the calendar. (Report #107-459).

Here is the bill text, FYI:

A BILL
To amend title 28, United States Code, to make certain modifications in the judicial discipline procedures, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the `Judicial Improvements Act of 2002'.

SEC. 2. JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE PROCEDURES.

(a) IN GENERAL- Part I of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after chapter 15 the following new chapter:

`CHAPTER 16--COMPLAINTS AGAINST JUDGES AND JUDICIAL DISCIPLINE
`Sec.

`351. Complaints; judge defined.

`352. Review of complaint by chief judge.

`353. Special committees.

`354. Action by judicial council.

`355. Action by Judicial Conference.

`356. Subpoena power.

`357. Review of orders and actions.

`358. Rules.

`359. Restrictions.

`360. Disclosure of information.

`361. Reimbursement of expenses.

`362. Other provisions and rules not affected.

`363. Court of Federal Claims, Court of International Trade, Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit.

`364. Effect of felony conviction.

`Sec. 351. Complaints; judge defined

`(a) FILING OF COMPLAINT BY ANY PERSON- Any person alleging that a judge has engaged in conduct prejudicial to the effective and expeditious administration of the business of the courts, or alleging that such judge is unable to discharge all the duties of office by reason of mental or physical disability, may file with the clerk of the court of appeals for the circuit a written complaint containing a brief statement of the facts constituting such conduct.

`(b) IDENTIFYING COMPLAINT BY CHIEF JUDGE- In the interests of the effective and expeditious administration of the business of the courts and on the basis of information available to the chief judge of the circuit, the chief judge may, by written order stating reasons therefor, identify a complaint for purposes of this chapter and thereby dispense with filing of a written complaint.

`(c) TRANSMITTAL OF COMPLAINT- Upon receipt of a complaint filed under subsection (a), the clerk shall promptly transmit the complaint to the chief judge of the circuit, or, if the conduct complained of is that of the chief judge, to that circuit judge in regular active service next senior in date of commission (hereafter, for purposes of this chapter only, included in the term `chief judge'). The clerk shall simultaneously transmit a copy of the complaint to the judge whose conduct is the subject of the complaint. The clerk shall also transmit a copy of any complaint identified under subsection (b) to the judge whose conduct is the subject of the complaint.

`(d) DEFINITIONS- In this chapter--

`(1) the term `judge' means a circuit judge, district judge, bankruptcy judge, or magistrate judge; and

`(2) the term `complainant' means the person filing a complaint under subsection (a) of this section.

`Sec. 352. Review of complaint by chief judge

`(a) EXPEDITIOUS REVIEW; LIMITED INQUIRY- The chief judge shall expeditiously review any complaint received under section 351(a) or identified under section 351(b). In determining what action to take, the chief judge may conduct a limited inquiry for the purpose of determining--

`(1) whether appropriate corrective action has been or can be taken without the necessity for a formal investigation; and

`(2) whether the facts stated in the complaint are either plainly untrue or are incapable of being established through investigation.

For this purpose, the chief judge may request the judge whose conduct is complained of to file a written response to the complaint. Such response shall not be made available to the complainant unless authorized by the judge filing the response. The chief judge or his or her designee may also communicate orally or in writing with the complainant, the judge whose conduct is complained of, and any other person who may have knowledge of the matter, and may review any transcripts or other relevant documents. The chief judge shall not undertake to make findings of fact about any matter that is reasonably in dispute.

`(b) ACTION BY CHIEF JUDGE FOLLOWING REVIEW- After expeditiously reviewing a complaint under subsection (a), the chief judge, by written order stating his or her reasons, may--

`(1) dismiss the complaint--

`(A) if the chief judge finds the complaint to be--

`(i) not in conformity with section 351(a);

`(ii) directly related to the merits of a decision or procedural ruling; or

`(iii) frivolous, lacking sufficient evidence to raise an inference that misconduct has occurred, or containing allegations which are incapable of being established through investigation; or

`(B) when a limited inquiry conducted under subsection (a) demonstrates that the allegations in the complaint lack any factual foundation or are conclusively refuted by objective evidence; or

`(2) conclude the proceeding if the chief judge finds that appropriate corrective action has been taken or that action on the complaint is no longer necessary because of intervening events.

The chief judge shall transmit copies of the written order to the complainant and to the judge whose conduct is the subject of the complaint.

`(c) REVIEW OF ORDERS OF CHIEF JUDGE- A complainant or judge aggrieved by a final order of the chief judge under this section may petition the judicial council of the circuit for review thereof. The denial of a petition for review of the chief judge's order shall be final and conclusive and shall not be judicially reviewable on appeal or otherwise.

`(d) REFERRAL OF PETITIONS FOR REVIEW TO PANELS OF THE JUDICIAL COUNCIL- Each judicial council may, pursuant to rules prescribed under section 358, refer a petition for review filed under subsection (c) to a panel of no fewer than 5 members of the council, at least 2 of whom shall be district judges.

`Sec. 353. Special committees

`(a) APPOINTMENT- If the chief judge does not enter an order under section 352(b), the chief judge shall promptly--

`(1) appoint himself or herself and equal numbers of circuit and district judges of the circuit to a special committee to investigate the facts and allegations contained in the complaint;

`(2) certify the complaint and any other documents pertaining thereto to each member of such committee; and

`(3) provide written notice to the complainant and the judge whose conduct is the subject of the complaint of the action taken under this subsection.

`(b) CHANGE IN STATUS OR DEATH OF JUDGES- A judge appointed to a special committee under subsection (a) may continue to serve on that committee after becoming a senior judge or, in the case of the chief judge of the circuit, after his or her term as chief judge terminates under subsection (a)(3) or (c) of section 45. If a judge appointed to a committee under subsection (a) dies, or retires from office under section 371(a), while serving on the committee, the chief judge of the circuit may appoint another circuit or district judge, as the case may be, to the committee.

`(c) INVESTIGATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE- Each committee appointed under subsection (a) shall conduct an investigation as extensive as it considers necessary, and shall expeditiously file a comprehensive written report thereon with the judicial council of the circuit. Such report shall present both the findings of the investigation and the committee's recommendations for necessary and appropriate action by the judicial council of the circuit.

`Sec. 354. Action by judicial council

`(a) ACTIONS UPON RECEIPT OF REPORT-

`(1) ACTIONS- The judicial council of a circuit, upon receipt of a report filed under section 353(c)-- `(A) may conduct any additional investigation which it considers to be necessary;

`(B) may dismiss the complaint; and

`(C) if the complaint is not dismissed, shall take such action as is appropriate to assure the effective and expeditious administration of the business of the courts within the circuit.

`(2) DESCRIPTION OF POSSIBLE ACTIONS IF COMPLAINT NOT DISMISSED-

`(A) IN GENERAL- Action by the judicial council under paragraph (1)(C) may include--

`(i) ordering that, on a temporary basis for a time certain, no further cases be assigned to the judge whose conduct is the subject of a complaint;

`(ii) censuring or reprimanding such judge by means of private communication; and

`(iii) censuring or reprimanding such judge by means of public announcement.

`(B) FOR ARTICLE III JUDGES- If the conduct of a judge appointed to hold office during good behavior is the subject of the complaint, action by the judicial council under paragraph (1)(C) may include--

`(i) certifying disability of the judge pursuant to the procedures and standards provided under section 372(b); and

`(ii) requesting that the judge voluntarily retire, with the provision that the length of service requirements under section 371 of this title shall not apply.

`(C) FOR MAGISTRATE JUDGES- If the conduct of a magistrate judge is the subject of the complaint, action by the judicial council under paragraph (1)(C) may include directing the chief judge of the district of the magistrate judge to take such action as the judicial council considers appropriate.

`(3) LIMITATIONS ON JUDICIAL COUNCIL REGARDING REMOVALS-

`(A) ARTICLE III JUDGES- Under no circumstances may the judicial council order removal from office of any judge appointed to hold office during good behavior.

`(B) MAGISTRATE AND BANKRUPTCY JUDGES- Any removal of a magistrate judge under this subsection shall be in accordance with section 631 and any removal of a bankruptcy judge shall be in accordance with section 152.

`(4) NOTICE OF ACTION TO JUDGE- The judicial council shall immediately provide written notice to the complainant and to the judge whose conduct is the subject of the complaint of the action taken under this subsection.

`(b) REFERRAL TO JUDICIAL CONFERENCE-

`(1) IN GENERAL- In addition to the authority granted under subsection (a), the judicial council may, in its discretion, refer any complaint under section 351, together with the record of any associated proceedings and its recommendations for appropriate action, to the Judicial Conference of the United States.

`(2) SPECIAL CIRCUMSTANCES- In any case in which the judicial council determines, on the basis of a complaint and an investigation under this chapter, or on the basis of information otherwise available to the judicial council, that a judge appointed to hold office during good behavior may have engaged in conduct--

`(A) which might constitute one or more grounds for impeachment under article II of the Constitution, or

`(B) which, in the interest of justice, is not amenable to resolution by the judicial council, the judicial council shall promptly certify such determination, together with any complaint and a record of any associated proceedings, to the Judicial Conference of the United States.

`(3) NOTICE TO COMPLAINANT AND JUDGE- A judicial council acting under authority of this subsection shall, unless contrary to the interests of justice, immediately submit written notice to the complainant and to the judge whose conduct is the subject of the action taken under this subsection.

`Sec. 355. Action by Judicial Conference

`(a) IN GENERAL- Upon referral or certification of any matter under section 354(b), the Judicial Conference, after consideration of the prior proceedings and such additional investigation as it considers appropriate, shall by majority vote take such action, as described in section 354(a)(1)(C) and (2), as it considers appropriate.

`(b) IF IMPEACHMENT WARRANTED-

`(1) IN GENERAL- If the Judicial Conference concurs in the determination of the judicial council, or makes its own determination, that consideration of impeachment may be warranted, it shall so certify and transmit the determination and the record of proceedings to the House of Representatives for whatever action the House of Representatives considers to be necessary. Upon receipt of the determination and record of proceedings in the House of Representatives, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall make available to the public the determination and any reasons for the determination.

`(2) IN CASE OF FELONY CONVICTION- If a judge has been convicted of a felony under State or Federal law and has exhausted all means of obtaining direct review of the conviction, or the time for seeking further direct review of the conviction has passed and no such review has been sought, the Judicial Conference may, by majority vote and without referral or certification under section 354(b), transmit to the House of Representatives a determination that consideration of impeachment may be warranted, together with appropriate court records, for whatever action the House of Representatives considers to be necessary.

`Sec. 356. Subpoena power

`(a) JUDICIAL COUNCILS AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES- In conducting any investigation under this chapter, the judicial council, or a special committee appointed under section 353, shall have full subpoena powers as provided in section 332(d).

`(b) JUDICIAL CONFERENCE AND STANDING COMMITTEES- In conducting any investigation under this chapter, the Judicial Conference, or a standing committee appointed by the Chief Justice under section 331, shall have full subpoena powers as provided in that section.

`Sec. 357. Review of orders and actions

`(a) REVIEW OF ACTION OF JUDICIAL COUNCIL- A complainant or judge aggrieved by an action of the judicial council under section 354 may petition the Judicial Conference of the United States for review thereof.

`(b) ACTION OF JUDICIAL CONFERENCE- The Judicial Conference, or the standing committee established under section 331, may grant a petition filed by a complainant or judge under subsection (a).

`(c) NO JUDICIAL REVIEW- Except as expressly provided in this section and section 352(c), all orders and determinations, including denials of petitions for review, shall be final and conclusive and shall not be judicially reviewable on appeal or otherwise.

`Sec. 358. Rules

`(a) IN GENERAL- Each judicial council and the Judicial Conference may prescribe such rules for the conduct of proceedings under this chapter, including the processing of petitions for review, as each considers to be appropriate.

`(b) REQUIRED PROVISIONS- Rules prescribed under subsection (a) shall contain provisions requiring that--

`(1) adequate prior notice of any investigation be given in writing to the judge whose conduct is the subject of a complaint under this chapter;

`(2) the judge whose conduct is the subject of a complaint under this chapter be afforded an opportunity to appear (in person or by counsel) at proceedings conducted by the investigating panel, to present oral and documentary evidence, to compel the attendance of witnesses or the production of documents, to cross-examine witnesses, and to present argument orally or in writing; and

`(3) the complainant be afforded an opportunity to appear at proceedings conducted by the investigating panel, if the panel concludes that the complainant could offer substantial information.

`(c) PROCEDURES- Any rule prescribed under this section shall be made or amended only after giving appropriate public notice and an opportunity for comment. Any such rule shall be a matter of public record, and any such rule promulgated by a judicial council may be modified by the Judicial Conference. No rule promulgated under this section may limit the period of time within which a person may file a complaint under this chapter.

`Sec. 359. Restrictions

`(a) RESTRICTION ON INDIVIDUALS WHO ARE SUBJECT OF INVESTIGATION- No judge whose conduct is the subject of an investigation under this chapter shall serve upon a special committee appointed under section 353, upon a judicial council, upon the Judicial Conference, or upon the standing committee established under section 331, until all proceedings under this chapter relating to such investigation have been finally terminated.

`(b) AMICUS CURIAE- No person shall be granted the right to intervene or to appear as amicus curiae in any proceeding before a judicial council or the Judicial Conference under this chapter.

`Sec. 360. Disclosure of information

`(a) CONFIDENTIALITY OF PROCEEDINGS- Except as provided in section 355, all papers, documents, and records of proceedings related to investigations conducted under this chapter shall be confidential and shall not be disclosed by any person in any proceeding except to the extent that--

`(1) the judicial council of the circuit in its discretion releases a copy of a report of a special committee under section 353(c) to the complainant whose complaint initiated the investigation by that special committee and to the judge whose conduct is the subject of the complaint;

`(2) the judicial council of the circuit, the Judicial Conference of the United States, or the Senate or the House of Representatives by resolution, releases any such material which is believed necessary to an impeachment investigation or trial of a judge under article I of the Constitution; or

`(3) such disclosure is authorized in writing by the judge who is the subject of the complaint and by the chief judge of the circuit, the Chief Justice, or the chairman of the standing committee established under section 331.

`(b) PUBLIC AVAILABILITY OF WRITTEN ORDERS- Each written order to implement any action under section 354(a)(1)(C), which is issued by a judicial council, the Judicial Conference, or the standing committee established under section 331, shall be made available to the public through the appropriate clerk's office of the court of appeals for the circuit. Unless contrary to the interests of justice, each such order shall be accompanied by written reasons therefor.

`Sec. 361. Reimbursement of expenses

`Upon the request of a judge whose conduct is the subject of a complaint under this chapter, the judicial council may, if the complaint has been finally dismissed under section 354(a)(1)(B), recommend that the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts award reimbursement, from funds appropriated to the Federal judiciary, for those reasonable expenses, including attorneys' fees, incurred by that judge during the investigation which would not have been incurred but for the requirements of this chapter.

`Sec. 362. Other provisions and rules not affected

`Except as expressly provided in this chapter, nothing in this chapter shall be construed to affect any other provision of this title, the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, the Federal Rules of Appellate Procedure, or the Federal Rules of Evidence.

`Sec. 363. Court of Federal Claims, Court of International Trade, Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit

`The United States Court of Federal Claims, the Court of International Trade, and the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit shall each prescribe rules, consistent with the provisions of this chapter, establishing procedures for the filing of complaints with respect to the conduct of any judge of such court and for the investigation and resolution of such complaints. In investigating and taking action with respect to any such complaint, each such court shall have the powers granted to a judicial council under this chapter.

`Sec. 364. Effect of felony conviction

`In the case of any judge or judge of a court referred to in section 363 who is convicted of a felony under State or Federal law and has exhausted all means of obtaining direct review of the conviction, or the time for seeking further direct review of the conviction has passed and no such review has been sought, that judge shall not hear cases unless the judicial council of the circuit (or, in the case of a judge of a court referred to in section 363, that court) determines otherwise.'.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT- The table of chapters for part I of title 28, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 15 the following new item:
--351'.

MEETING WITH JUSTICE PRICILLA OWEN
Tuesday, July 16, 2002
1:15 p.m.-1:35 p.m.
Oval Office
Alberto R. Gonzales

I. PURPOSE

Meet with Justice Priscilla Owen, Senator Phil Gramm, Senator Kay Bailey Hutchison, former Members of the Texas Supreme Court, and leaders of the Texas Bar to express support for Justice Owen's nomination and to call on the Senate Judiciary Committee to give her a fair hearing on Thursday, July 18, 2002.

II. BACKGROUND

Justice Owen was nominated on May 9, 2001, to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Fifth Circuit. A hearing on her nomination has now been scheduled for Thursday, July 18, 2002. A variety of interest groups have publicly opposed Justice Owen's nomination. We anticipate that the Senate proceedings will be contentious.

III. PARTICIPANTS

Andrew Card, Chief of Staff
Judge Alberto R. Gonzales, Counsel to the President
Karl Rove, Senior Advisor to the President
Nicholas Calio, Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs [Texas group to be determined]

II. BACKGROUND

Justice Owen was nominated on May 9, 2001, to the fill a vacancy on the ~~U.S. Court of Appeals for the~~ Fifth Circuit. A hearing on her nomination has now been scheduled for Thursday, July 18, 2002, over 14 months after the nomination. A variety of interest groups have publicly opposed Justice Owen's nomination. We anticipate that the Senate proceedings will be contentious.

Note new Fannie Mae interim policy in DUS guidelines released Friday requiring terror cover on DUS loans over $50 million and, on a case-by-case basis, on $20-$50 million loans. Note also permitted exclusions for chemical and biological incidents and nuclear hazard.

This new policy underscores the continuing need for a federal backstop.
Given current costs for terror cover, as policies renew and new multifamily loans are originated, these new coverage requirements may impact on apartment firms' operating costs and rents paid by consumers.

A summary of the new guidance is attached.

Jay Harris
National Mulit-Housing Council

Guidelines for Mold and Terrorism

Terrorism and mold exclusions on insurance policies continue to be areas of particular concern. In the past, terrorist acts and mold were not routinely excluded from "All Risk" policies. Since the beginning of this year, these exclusions have become more prevalent. We are currently in the process of performing an intensive risk analysis

and exploring potential risk mitigation strategies in both areas. We expect to issue additional requirements prior to year-end. In the meantime, interim guidelines and requirements in these two areas are as follows:

Mold: Mold is currently an acceptable exclusion in an "All Risk" policy. Fannie Mae reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to require coverage once it becomes commercially available at reasonable rates. However, a proactive approach on mold should be the first line of defense. You should ensure that the borrower has an effective preventative maintenance program in place and a process for remediation in the event mold is detected on a property.

We recently held a rapid consensus workshop with lenders and industry experts on underwriting standards of care related to mold. The status will be reported at the Multifamily Conference in July. We expect to have a more definitive mold policy by the fourth quarter.

Terrorism Insurance: Although we strongly encourage obtaining terrorism insurance coverage for all properties, it is temporarily an acceptable exclusion for loans under $20 million, and therefore does not require a waiver. The Lender is to notify Fannie Mae Asset Management or their Large Loan Representative of any loan of $20 million or more that does not have terrorism coverage. Fannie Mae will evaluate the need for terrorism insurance coverage on a case-by-case basis for these loans. For loans equal to or greater than $50 million, however, we generally will require terrorism coverage and expect all reasonable efforts is taken to obtain it. In evaluating the terms of coverage, or possible waivers, Fannie Mae will review:

q Geographic location
q Property configuration and building height
q LTV and Tier Level
q Effect of premium costs on debt service coverage
q Relative land value
q Other relevant factors as appropriate

We expect to update these interim guidelines in the next six to twelve months.

Acceptable Exclusions for "All Risk" Policies

The following additional exclusions from "All Risk" insurance polices are generally acceptable:

q War or Military action
q Nuclear Hazard
q Volcanic eruptions
q Fraudulent or dishonest acts committed by the insured
q Dispersal, release or escape of contaminants, or pollution (biological and chemical agents)

Windstorm, earthquake and flood exclusions also are acceptable, provided a separate policy is obtained for these exclusions. Refer to DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8 for specific requirements for these exclusions. Fannie Mae reserves the right, at its sole discretion, to revise its insurance requirements once excluded coverages become generally available in the marketplace.

Formatted: Bullets and Numbering

This memo supercedes Lender Memo 02-01 dated January 4, 2002 in its entirety. ~~Fannie Mae has completed its~~The revisions represent a substantial modification of Part III, Chapter 8 of the DUS Guide and apply to DUS loans only. ~~will become~~ Please refer to the 3Max and Negotiated Transaction Guides for insurance requirements for those programs. Revisions to those Guides are currently under consideration.

Overview

The Need for New Guidance: Disruptions in the insurance market over the past few years have made the cost-effective management of insurable risks very challenging. Insurance premiums and deductibles for property and casualty risks and catastrophic risks, such as windstorm and earthquake, continue to increase at a rapid rate. The events of September 11th have further exacerbated issues around insurance cost, availability and adequacy of coverage. These events have caused us to re-evaluate our insurance requirements to bring them more in line with today's market.

The Process of Developing the New Guidance: The update of Chapter 8 represents a substantial cross-functional effort of Fannie Mae consulting extensively with insurance risk management experts and our DUS Lender partners. Although the Guide revisions on insurance are extensive, additional guidance will be issued once current analyses involving catastrophic risks, including terrorism and mold, are completed.

Implementation of New Guidelines/Requirements: The Guide changes are effective immediately for all insurance policies on new loans and on the renewal date for insurance policies on existing loans with the exception of the seismic requirement which goes into effect on August 1, 2002. Because of the growing complexity of insurance matters, all related waiver requests will be forwarded to Asset Management in Washington, DC, with a copy to your National Account Manager, Borrower Account Manager or Large Loan Representative, as appropriate, to ensure consistency of responses.

In addition, Fannie Mae is taking the following steps to assist in answering any questions you might have regarding the new requirements:

1. We are attaching a matrix summarizing the insurance changes.
2. We will explain further the new insurance requirements on the next Chief Underwriter's call.
3. We will schedule a national conference call in the next few weeks to address any insurance questions from other DUS Lender staff.
4. We also have scheduled an insurance panel on the latest industry developments for the Multifamily Conference in July.
5. We will make available to lenders a seminar on insurance matters before year-end, at no cost. Top experts in the insurance field will be on hand to discuss the latest industry trends and insurance risk management strategies.

Summary of Revised DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8

The ~~major~~ most significant Guide changes are in the ~~affect the~~ following areas:

1. Deductibles - applies to new and renewal policies

- Property - Increased to $25,000 per occurrence for portfolio and/or single asset loans on properties with less than $100~~MM~~ million in total replacement values; $100,000 per occurrence for single asset loans and/or portfolios on properties with greater than $100~~MM~~ million;
- Blanket Policies - up to 1% of the replacement cost, but no more than $250,000~~M~~;
- Commercial General Liability - $5,000~~M~~ per occurrence deductible;

2. Windstorm Coverage

- When windstorm coverage is in a separate policy from the "All Risk" policy the deductible should be no more than 5% of the total insured value and should include coverage for business interruption/rent loss for at least 12 months.

- If windstorm coverage is only available through a state insurance program, which excludes business interruption/rent loss coverage, you should consult with your NAM before proceeding with the loan.

3. New coverages - required for all newly originated loans

- Commercial Automobile Liability Insurance;

- Professional Liability Insurance – Should be included in the commercial general liability policy for assisted living and seniors projects when some level of healthcare is provided;
- Directors and Officers Liability Insurance – Co-op projects only;
- 90 day extended period of Indemnity for large loans ($20 million or greater).

4. Liability Insurance - applies to new and renewal policies

- Umbrella liability insurance coverage above the primary level is tiered to reflect different levels of risk and at a minimum should be:

  - ~~Umbrella Liability Insurance (above the primary)~~1 - 3 stories $ 1 million
  - 4 -10 stories $ 5 million
  - 11 - 20 stories $10 million
  - Greater than 20 stories $25 million

5. Carrier Ratings - applies to new and renewal policies

- AM Best rating has increased from B, VI to B+, VI;
- Demotech no longer will be used.

6. Blanket Policies - applies to new and renewal policies

- Blanket policies are acceptable, so long as ~~provided~~ the policy provides the same overall level, or better, insurance coverage as a single property insurance policy; and

- The property is listed and identifiable in the policy and or associated schedules.

7. Evidence of Insurance - applies to new and renewal policies

- If a certificate of insurance cannot be obtained, the Borrower must provide a letter signed by the insurance broker attesting to the fact that the coverage, deductibles and exclusions in the policy meet Fannie Mae's requirements.
- Within 90 days after the date of a new or renewing policy – the original or a certified copy of the policy must be reviewed and placed in the mortgage-servicing file.
- You must notify Fannie Mae Asset Management in writing if the policy does not meet Fannie Mae's insurance requirements.

We appreciate the current difficulty in obtaining insurance policies in a timely manner, given the current turmoil in the insurance market. To assist you in managing this process, we are giving you temporary authority to grant a waiver allowing a short period of additional time for the borrower to obtain the insurance policy. The temporary authority expires on January 1, 2003. Waivers for this requirement should be documented, including the reason, and placed in the servicing file.

8. Flood Insurance and Flood Determination - applies to new and renewal policies

- The Lender must obtain from its flood determination company "life of loan" monitoring and coverage.
- The coverage should be fully transferable to a new servicer.

Insurance Compliance Requirements

Unless otherwise noted, the revised requirements apply both to insurance policies for newly originated loans and insurance policy renewals for existing loans. If borrowers have policies not currently in compliance with the new standards, policies should be brought into compliance at the next renewal date. As part of the Lender Assessment process, we will review randomly selected samples of insurance documents in the servicing files for compliance.

If a borrower later obtains an insurance policy that does not comply with Fannie Mae guidelines, and does not obtain a written waiver of the requirement from Fannie Mae, ~~without first obtaining our written approval, the~~ the DUS Lender should issue a letter to the borrower informing them that their loan is in default.

Waiver/Approval Process

In order to provide consistent and timely responses to insurance requests, we have centralized all insurance waiver requests. Effective immediately, all requests for insurance waivers should be sent to Richard Mason (202-752-1225~~-----~~; email: richard_l_mason@fanniemae.com) at the following address for review and approval:

Attn: Richard Mason
Fannie Mae
3900 Wisconsin Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20016

A copy of the request should be sent simultaneously to the National Account Manager, Borrower Account Manager or Large Loan Representative, as appropriate.

Seismic Risk Guidelines

Underwriting loans secured by properties located in seismically active areas (seismic zones 3 and 4) requires careful consideration. A Level I, Seismic Risk Assessment (Probable Maximum Loss - PML study) will be required for the following:

- All loans greater than $20 million and
- Loans that have one or more property specific risk factors as outlined in Part III, Chapter 8, Section 805.3 of the Guide.

Not obtaining a PML in these situations will require a waiver. Properties with the following risk factors are not acceptable under the DUS program:

- Unreinforced masonry buildings
- Buildings constructed on hillsides with slope exceeding a 30 degree angle
- Properties which have a PML greater than 40%

Properties located in seismic zones 3 or 4 that have a PML greater than 20% will require a waiver. The Underwriter's Narrative should identify significant seismic risks and the relevant mitigation strategy. The seismic guidelines are effective August 1, 2002 for newly originated loans only.

Guidelines for Mold and Terrorism

Terrorism and mold exclusions on insurance policies continue to be areas of particular concern. In the past, terrorist acts and mold were not routinely excluded from "All Risk" policies. Since the beginning of this year, these exclusions have become more prevalent. We are currently in the process of performing an intensive risk analysis and exploring potential risk mitigation strategies in both areas. - War or Military action
- Nuclear Hazard
- Volcanic eruptions
- Fraudulent or dishonest acts committed by the insured
- Dispersal, release or escape of contaminants, or pollution (biological and chemical agents)

Windstorm, earthquake and flood exclusions also are acceptable, provided a separate policy is obtained for these exclusions. Refer to DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8 for specific requirements for these exclusions. Fannie Mae reserves the right, at its sole discretion, to revise its insurance requirements once excluded coverages become generally available in the marketplace.

Note new Fannie Mae interim policy in DUS guidelines released Friday requiring terror cover on DUS loans over $50 million and, on a case-by-case basis, on $20-$50 million loans. Note also permitted exclusions for chemical and biological incidents and nuclear hazard.

This new policy underscores the continuing need for a federal backstop.
Given current costs for terror cover, as policies renew and new multifamily loans are originated, these new coverage requirements may impact on apartment firms' operating costs and rents paid by consumers.

A summary of the new guidance is attached.

Jay Harris
National Mulit-Housing Council

Guidelines for Mold and Terrorism

Terrorism and mold exclusions on insurance policies continue to be areas of particular concern. In the past, terrorist acts and mold were not routinely excluded from "All Risk" policies. Since the beginning of this year, these exclusions have become more prevalent. We are currently in the process of performing an intensive risk analysis

and exploring potential risk mitigation strategies in both areas. We expect to issue additional requirements prior to year-end. In the meantime, interim guidelines and requirements in these two areas are as follows:

Mold: Mold is currently an acceptable exclusion in an "All Risk" policy. Fannie Mae reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to require coverage once it becomes commercially available at reasonable rates. However, a proactive approach on mold should be the first line of defense. You should ensure that the borrower has an effective preventative maintenance program in place and a process for remediation in the event mold is detected on a property.

We recently held a rapid consensus workshop with lenders and industry experts on underwriting standards of care related to mold. The status will be reported at the Multifamily Conference in July. We expect to have a more definitive mold policy by the fourth quarter.

Terrorism Insurance: Although we strongly encourage obtaining terrorism insurance coverage for all properties, it is temporarily an acceptable exclusion for loans under $20 million, and therefore does not require a waiver. The Lender is to notify Fannie Mae Asset Management or their Large Loan Representative of any loan of $20 million or more that does not have terrorism coverage. Fannie Mae will evaluate the need for terrorism insurance coverage on a case-by-case basis for these loans. For loans equal to or greater than $50 million, however, we generally will require terrorism coverage and expect all reasonable efforts is taken to obtain it. In evaluating the terms of coverage, or possible waivers, Fannie Mae will review:

q Geographic location
q Property configuration and building height
q LTV and Tier Level
q Effect of premium costs on debt service coverage
q Relative land value
q Other relevant factors as appropriate

We expect to update these interim guidelines in the next six to twelve months.

Acceptable Exclusions for "All Risk" Policies

The following additional exclusions from "All Risk" insurance polices are generally acceptable:

q War or Military action
q Nuclear Hazard
q Volcanic eruptions
q Fraudulent or dishonest acts committed by the insured
q Dispersal, release or escape of contaminants, or pollution (biological and chemical agents)

Windstorm, earthquake and flood exclusions also are acceptable, provided a separate policy is obtained for these exclusions. Refer to DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8 for specific requirements for these exclusions. Fannie Mae reserves the right, at its sole discretion, to revise its insurance requirements once excluded coverages become generally available in the marketplace.

Subject: DUS Guide Update 02-16, dated July 12, 2002, Regarding Insurance Guidelines

Highlights

- Summary of revised DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8 – Property and Liability Insurance
- Insurance compliance requirements
- Waiver review and approval centralized
- Guidelines for Seismic, Terrorism and Mold risks
- Acceptable exclusions for "All Risk" policies
- ~~Insurance training.~~

Formatted: Bullets and Numbering

This memo supercedes Lender Memo 02-01 dated January 4, 2002 in its entirety. ~~Fannie Mae has completed its~~The revisions represent a substantial modification of Part III, Chapter 8 of the DUS Guide and apply to DUS loans only. ~~will become~~ Please refer to the 3Max and Negotiated Transaction Guides for insurance requirements for those programs. Revisions to those Guides are currently under consideration.

Overview

The Need for New Guidance: Disruptions in the insurance market over the past few years have made the cost-effective management of insurable risks very challenging. Insurance premiums and deductibles for property and casualty risks and catastrophic risks, such as windstorm and earthquake, continue to increase at a rapid rate. The events of September 11th have further exacerbated issues around insurance cost, availability and adequacy of coverage. These events have caused us to re-evaluate our insurance requirements to bring them more in line with today's market.

The Process of Developing the New Guidance: The update of Chapter 8 represents a substantial cross-functional effort of Fannie Mae consulting extensively with insurance risk management experts and our DUS Lender partners. Although the Guide revisions on insurance are extensive, additional guidance will be issued once current analyses involving catastrophic risks, including terrorism and mold, are completed.

Implementation of New Guidelines/Requirements: The Guide changes are effective immediately for all insurance policies on new loans and on the renewal date for insurance policies on existing loans with the exception of the seismic requirement which goes into effect on August 1, 2002. Because of the growing complexity of insurance matters, all related waiver requests will be forwarded to Asset Management in Washington, DC, with a copy to your National Account Manager, Borrower Account Manager or Large Loan Representative, as appropriate, to ensure consistency of responses.

In addition, Fannie Mae is taking the following steps to assist in answering any questions you might have regarding the new requirements:

1. We are attaching a matrix summarizing the insurance changes.
2. We will explain further the new insurance requirements on the next Chief Underwriter's call.
3. We will schedule a national conference call in the next few weeks to address any insurance questions from other DUS Lender staff.
4. We also have scheduled an insurance panel on the latest industry developments for the Multifamily Conference in July.
5. We will make available to lenders a seminar on insurance matters before year-end, at no cost. Top experts in the insurance field will be on hand to discuss the latest industry trends and insurance risk management strategies.

Summary of Revised DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8

The ~~major~~ most significant Guide changes are in the ~~affect the~~ following areas:

1. Deductibles - applies to new and renewal policies

- Property - Increased to $25,000 per occurrence for portfolio and/or single asset loans on properties with less than $100~~MM~~ million in total replacement values; $100,000 per occurrence for single asset loans and/or portfolios on properties with greater than $100~~MM~~ million;
- Blanket Policies - up to 1% of the replacement cost, but no more than $250,000~~M~~;
- Commercial General Liability - $5,000~~M~~ per occurrence deductible;

2. Windstorm Coverage

- When windstorm coverage is in a separate policy from the "All Risk" policy the deductible should be no more than 5% of the total insured value and should include coverage for business interruption/rent loss for at least 12 months.

- If windstorm coverage is only available through a state insurance program, which excludes business interruption/rent loss coverage, you should consult with your NAM before proceeding with the loan.

3. New coverages - required for all newly originated loans

- Commercial Automobile Liability Insurance;

REV_00148039

- Professional Liability Insurance – Should be included in the commercial general liability policy for assisted living and seniors projects when some level of healthcare is provided;
- Directors and Officers Liability Insurance – Co-op projects only;
- 90 day extended period of Indemnity for large loans ($20 million or greater).

4. Liability Insurance - applies to new and renewal policies

- Umbrella liability insurance coverage above the primary level is tiered to reflect different levels of risk and at a minimum should be:

  - ~~Umbrella Liability Insurance (above the primary)~~1 - 3 stories $ 1 million
  - 4 -10 stories $ 5 million
  - 11 - 20 stories $10 million
  - Greater than 20 stories $25 million

5. Carrier Ratings - applies to new and renewal policies

- AM Best rating has increased from B, VI to B+, VI;
- Demotech no longer will be used.

6. Blanket Policies - applies to new and renewal policies

- Blanket policies are acceptable, so long as ~~provided~~ the policy provides the same overall level, or better, insurance coverage as a single property insurance policy; and

- The property is listed and identifiable in the policy and or associated schedules.

7. Evidence of Insurance - applies to new and renewal policies

- If a certificate of insurance cannot be obtained, the Borrower must provide a letter signed by the insurance broker attesting to the fact that the coverage, deductibles and exclusions in the policy meet Fannie Mae's requirements.
- Within 90 days after the date of a new or renewing policy – the original or a certified copy of the policy must be reviewed and placed in the mortgage-servicing file.
- You must notify Fannie Mae Asset Management in writing if the policy does not meet Fannie Mae's insurance requirements.

We appreciate the current difficulty in obtaining insurance policies in a timely manner, given the current turmoil in the insurance market. To assist you in managing this process, we are giving you temporary authority to grant a waiver allowing a short period of additional time for the borrower to obtain the insurance policy. The temporary authority expires on January 1, 2003. Waivers for this requirement should be documented, including the reason, and placed in the servicing file.

8. Flood Insurance and Flood Determination - applies to new and renewal policies

- The Lender must obtain from its flood determination company "life of loan" monitoring and coverage.
- The coverage should be fully transferable to a new servicer.

Insurance Compliance Requirements

Unless otherwise noted, the revised requirements apply both to insurance policies for newly originated loans and insurance policy renewals for existing loans. If borrowers have policies not currently in compliance with the new standards, policies should be brought into compliance at the next renewal date. As part of the Lender Assessment process, we will review randomly selected samples of insurance documents in the servicing files for compliance.

If a borrower later obtains an insurance policy that does not comply with Fannie Mae guidelines, and does not obtain a written waiver of the requirement from Fannie Mae, ~~without first obtaining our written approval, the~~ the DUS Lender should issue a letter to the borrower informing them that their loan is in default.

Waiver/Approval Process

In order to provide consistent and timely responses to insurance requests, we have centralized all insurance waiver requests. Effective immediately, all requests for insurance waivers should be sent to Richard Mason (202-752-1225~~-----~~; email: richard_l_mason@fanniemae.com) at the following address for review and approval:

Attn: Richard Mason
Fannie Mae
3900 Wisconsin Ave, NW
Washington, DC 20016

A copy of the request should be sent simultaneously to the National Account Manager, Borrower Account Manager or Large Loan Representative, as appropriate.

Seismic Risk Guidelines

Underwriting loans secured by properties located in seismically active areas (seismic zones 3 and 4) requires careful consideration. A Level I, Seismic Risk Assessment (Probable Maximum Loss - PML study) will be required for the following:

- All loans greater than $20 million and
- Loans that have one or more property specific risk factors as outlined in Part III, Chapter 8, Section 805.3 of the Guide.

Not obtaining a PML in these situations will require a waiver. Properties with the following risk factors are not acceptable under the DUS program:

- Unreinforced masonry buildings
- Buildings constructed on hillsides with slope exceeding a 30 degree angle
- Properties which have a PML greater than 40%

Properties located in seismic zones 3 or 4 that have a PML greater than 20% will require a waiver. The Underwriter's Narrative should identify significant seismic risks and the relevant mitigation strategy. The seismic guidelines are effective August 1, 2002 for newly originated loans only.

Guidelines for Mold and Terrorism

Terrorism and mold exclusions on insurance policies continue to be areas of particular concern. In the past, terrorist acts and mold were not routinely excluded from "All Risk" policies. Since the beginning of this year, these exclusions have become more prevalent. We are currently in the process of performing an intensive risk analysis and exploring potential risk mitigation strategies in both areas. We expect to issue additional requirements prior to year-end. In the meantime, interim guidelines and requirements in these two areas are as follows:

Mold: Mold is currently an acceptable exclusion in an "All Risk" policy. Fannie Mae reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to require coverage once it becomes commercially available at reasonable rates. However, a proactive approach on mold should be the first line of defense. You should ensure that the borrower has an effective preventative maintenance program in place and a process for remediation in the event mold is detected on a property.

We recently held a rapid consensus workshop with lenders and industry experts on underwriting standards of care related to mold. The status will be reported at the Multifamily Conference in July. We expect to have a more definitive mold policy by the fourth quarter.

Terrorism Insurance: Although we strongly encourage obtaining terrorism insurance coverage for all properties, it is temporarily an acceptable exclusion for loans under $20 million, and therefore does not require a waiver. The Lender is to notify Fannie Mae Asset Management or their Large Loan Representative of any loan of $20 million or more that does not have terrorism coverage. Fannie Mae will evaluate the need for terrorism insurance coverage on a case-by-case basis for these loans. For loans equal to or greater than $50 million, however, we generally will require terrorism coverage and expect all reasonable efforts is taken to obtain it. In evaluating the terms of coverage, or possible waivers, Fannie Mae will review:

- Geographic location
- Property configuration and building height
- LTV and Tier Level

- Effect of premium costs on debt service coverage
- Relative land value
- Other relevant factors as appropriate

We expect to update these interim guidelines in the next six to twelve months.

Acceptable Exclusions for "All Risk" Policies

The following additional exclusions from "All Risk" insurance polices are generally acceptable:

- War or Military action
- Nuclear Hazard
- Volcanic eruptions
- Fraudulent or dishonest acts committed by the insured
- Dispersal, release or escape of contaminants, or pollution (biological and chemical agents)

Windstorm, earthquake and flood exclusions also are acceptable, provided a separate policy is obtained for these exclusions. Refer to DUS Guide Part III Chapter 8 for specific requirements for these exclusions. Fannie Mae reserves the right, at its sole discretion, to revise its insurance requirements once excluded coverages become generally available in the marketplace.

If you have any questions regarding this memo or the revised insurance requirements, please contact Renata Harrison at (202) 752-7406.

Brett, I cannot independently confirm the section on Mizell re: bar polls and awards received. Everything else checked out.

Colleen McHugh is a partner at Bracewell & Patterson in Corpus Christi, Texas. A member of the American Bar Association since 1984, McHugh also served as President of the State Bar of Texas from 1996-1997. Since 2001, McHugh has served as Chairman of the Texas Public Safety Commission. In addition, McHugh has served on the Board of Trustees of the Texas Supreme Court Historical Society since 1997 and the Texas Bar Foundation from 1994-1996. She graduated with a B.A. from Southern Methodist University and received her J.D. from St. Mary,s University School of Law.

Patrick W. Mizell was a state district judge in Harris County, Texas, from 1995 to 2002. He was appointed to the bench in 1995 by then Governor Bush, and was elected in 1996 and 2000. While on the bench, he was consistently rated at the top of the Houston Bar Association bar polls. In 2001, he was selected the outstanding young lawyer in Houston by the Houston Young Lawyers Association, and in 1999, he was selected the best civil judge by the Houston Press. He graduated from SMU in Dallas with a B.A. in political science, and graduated from the University of Houston Law Center with a J.D.

He is currently in private practice as a partner at Vinson & Elkins in Houston. He is married to Shannon, and they have four children.

Bush Urges Congress To Send Terrorism Reinsurance Measure
President Bush urged Congress Monday to send a terrorism reinsurance bill "to my desk quickly," noting in an economic speech delivered in Alabama that doing so would "show good judgment and a way to help our economy recover." However, Bush added, the legislation "must keep in mind the workers of America and not open up our government and/or employers to unnecessary and frivolous and junk lawsuits."
The House and Senate have approved separate versions of the reinsurance legislation but have yet to appoint conferees. Sources suggested this week that the Senate, which has been hindered from naming conferees because of an objection by Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, might be cleared to appoint them soon.
Meanwhile, a lack of affordable terrorism insurance for commercial properties has killed an

Department of Justice

STATEMENT

THE HONORABLE JOHN W. GILLIS
DIRECTOR
OFFICE FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
UNITED STATES SENATE

REGARDING

THE PROPOSED VICTIMS' RIGHTS AMENDMENT
TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

ON

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 2002
WASHINGTON, DC

REV_00148112

Good morning, Chairman Feingold, Senator Thurmond, and distinguished members of the subcommittee. Thank you for the opportunity to present the views of the administration on the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States to establish basic rights for victims of violent crime.

The administration strongly supports S.J. Res 35, the Victims' Rights Amendment. There is broad-based support for the Amendment across the country. Democratic and Republican leaders, liberal and conservative scholars, and Americans of every persuasion have rallied in support of this important cause. Crime victims encourage your support in our struggle for human dignity and fair treatment.

As a crime victim, a retired law enforcement officer, a former chair of the California Board of Prison Terms, and a citizen who works to uphold justice and advocates for victims' rights and services, I am honored by the confidence placed in me by President Bush and Attorney General Ashcroft to ensure that victims' rights and needs are addressed at the national and state levels as the Director of the Justice Department's Office for Victims of Crime. The Office for Victims of Crime (or OVC) is committed to enhancing the Nation's capacity to assist crime victims and to providing leadership in an ongoing effort to change attitudes, policies, and practices and with a determination to promote justice and healing for all victims of crime. OVC administers the Crime Victims Fund, which is the Justice Department's sole source of funding for services to crime victims. Through the Crime Victims Fund, OVC provides training and technical assistance for victim advocates and allied professionals, supports demonstration projects in communities, and disseminates information about victim issues.

I know firsthand the personal, financial, and emotional devastation that violent crime exacts on its victims. As a survivor of a homicide victim, I testify before you today with the unique advantage of understanding the plight that victims and their families face in the criminal justice system. I know the players and their responsibilities, and my experience has given me the ability to work within the system. More typically, however, when a person is victimized by crime, he or she is thrust into a whole new world in which the state's or the government's needs take priority. In 1982, when the Task Force on Victims of Crime, commissioned by President Reagan, examined the plight of crime victims in America by surveying victims, victim advocates, and criminal justice professionals around the country, one victim lamented:

> "They explained the defendant's constitutional rights to the nth degree. They couldn't do this and they couldn't do that because of his constitutional rights. And I wondered what mine were. And they told me, I haven't got any."[1]

Chairman Feingold, as you know, on April 16, President Bush announced his support for the Feinstein-Kyl amendment to the United States Constitution to protect the rights of crime victims. As the President so eloquently stated:

> "Too often, our system fails to inform victims about proceedings involving bail and pleas and sentencing and even about the trials themselves. Too often, the process fails to take the safety of victims into account when deciding whether to release dangerous offenders. Too often, the financial losses of victims are ignored. And too often, victims are not allowed to address the court at sentencing and explain their suffering, or even to be present in the courtroom where their victimizers are being tried. When our criminal justice system treats victims as irrelevant bystanders, they are victimized for a second time."

Although more than 27,000 victims' rights laws have been enacted, victims' bill of rights have been passed in every state, and 32 states have passed constitutional amendments protecting victims' rights, victims still struggle to assert basic rights to be notified, present, and heard. As one victim stated:

"We were thrown into the criminal justice system. We didn't do anything wrong, but we felt over and over again that it wasn't focused on Shannon being killed, but technical procedures–things that we really didn't care about.... We have to fight those urges and those feelings of trying to take justice in our hands and turn it over and let the criminal justice system do what they are supposed to do, and then we sit there and we feel victimized over and over again."[2]

Eighteen states lack constitutional victims' rights amendments. The 32 existing state victims' rights amendments, and other statutory protections, differ considerably across the country. While we respect the work done by the states on victims' rights issues – and many have gone beyond what is proposed in S.J. Res 35 – the only way to provide a basic level of consistent and uniform victims' rights across the country is to amend the Constitution through the passage of the Victims' Rights Amendment.

Further, there is no uniformity in the implementation of victims' rights laws in these states. A recent study funded by the National Institute of Justice[3] found that, even in states with strong victims' rights laws, only about half of all victims surveyed were notified of plea negotiations and sentencing hearings--notice that is critical if they are to exercise their rights to seek restitution and to inform the court of the impact of the crime on them.

The right to notification of an assailant's release can be a matter of life and death. John and Pat Byron of Kentucky are a vivid reminder of the importance of, not only having rights of notification established, but also implemented. Their daughter Mary was murdered in 1993 by a former boyfriend on her 21st birthday–a few days after he posted bail on a charge of raping her. He had also stalked and intimidated her in the past. Fearing for her life, Mary had asked authorities to notify her of his impending release. The notification never came. Mary was killed before she had the opportunity to take precautions she had planned.

Even in states with strong victims' rights laws or ratified victims' rights constitutional amendments, a victim's ability to assert his or her rights may be nullified by judicial decisions. State victims' rights laws lack the force of federal constitutional law and thus may be given short shrift. Federal law, however, directly covers only certain violent crimes, leaving non-federal crimes to state prosecutions and state law. Roberta Roper's case demonstrates how victims are often excluded from attending court proceedings in Maryland.

In April 1982, 22-year-old Stephanie Roper was kidnaped, brutally raped, tortured, and murdered by two men. Her parents, Roberta and Vincent Roper, wanted to be involved in every aspect of the judicial proceedings, not wanting to read about what was taking place in the newspapers. During the testimony in the death penalty phase, Roberta's right to provide a victim impact statement was denied. Under a year-old Maryland law, the court could (but did not have to) allow victim impact evidence at the time of sentencing. The State's Attorney put Roberta on the stand to talk about her daughter's life and the impact of her death on the family. But the defense attorney objected, arguing that the testimony would be unfairly prejudicial to the defense. The judge agreed and told Roberta to step down, ruling that the impact of the murder on her family was "irrelevant." Roberta listened as the defendants were able to provide a host of witnesses, including family members, to testify on behalf of the man who had kidnaped, brutally raped, tortured, and murdered her daughter.

In the Oklahoma City bombing case, a U.S. district court judge presented victims with the choice to either attend the trial or speak at sentencing, despite federal law which provides victims a right to be present at "all public court proceedings related to the offense...." The victims and several national organizations filed an appeal to reverse the judge's ruling. However, the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit affirmed the judge's ruling, which effectively barred from the courtroom victims who intended to speak at sentencing. Congress thereafter intervened, passing legislation[4] prohibiting the U.S. district judge from ordering victims excluded from the trials of the defendants because the victim may testify or make a statement during the sentencing about the effect of the offense on the victim and the victim's family. [18 U.S.C. § 3593].

In 1980, Wisconsin was the first state to enact a victims' bill of rights. However, legislators and policymakers soon realized that the mere passage of statutory rights for victims did not yield the full force of the law that they had intended. In 1993, with 84% ratification by the voters, the Wisconsin legislature acted to correct this problem by passing a victims' rights amendment to the state constitution. In 1991, the state created a Victim Resource Center, where officials intervene on behalf of victims and present the victim's concerns and their findings to the agency in question. However, Victim Resource Center officials had no authority to prescribe remedies for violations of a victims' statutory or constitutional rights. In response, the legislature in 1997 created a Crime Victim Rights Board to enforce victims' rights. The result is that the Board has the authority to impose sanctions for violations of victims' rights, though it cannot guarantee victims' rights will not be abridged. Despite the elaborate mechanisms to protect the rights of crime victims in Wisconsin, the State Attorney General and other victim advocates recognize the need to support those efforts with a federal amendment to the Constitution.

Even with the progression of efforts to secure fundamental rights for crime victims in Wisconsin, victims' rights are not uniformly observed. Sadly, Wisconsin is not unique in its experience to make victims' rights meaningful. Similarly, other states have experienced challenges in fully implementing victims' rights laws.

A federal constitutional amendment is the only legal measure strong enough to rectify the current imbalance and inconsistencies among victims' rights laws and can establish a uniform national floor for victims' rights. A federal amendment to the United States Constitution will be the vehicle by which compliance with victims' rights laws can be enforced. The passage of a federal constitutional amendment will provide the means to make victims' rights a reality.

The Constitution of the United States should never be amended for transient reasons. There is compelling reason, however, to amend the Nation's basic charter to protect the rights of crime victims. Specifically, the amendment would provide victims the right to:

- reasonable and timely notice of any public proceeding involving the crime or the release or escape of the accused;
- not be excluded from these public proceedings;
- reasonably be heard at public release, plea, sentencing, reprieve and pardon proceedings, and
- decisions that duly consider the victim's safety, interest in avoiding unreasonable delay, and just and timely claims to restitution from the offender.

In short, the amendment would ensure that the views of crime victims are considered and that crime victims are treated fairly throughout the process. It would also ensure speedy resolution of their cases, promote victims' safety, and safeguard victims' claims for restitution.

And, the amendment would not abridge the rights of defendants or offenders or otherwise disrupt the delicate balance of our Constitution. Victims' rights will never fundamentally become a reality unless we change the culture. James Madison recognized that the Constitution is the only document that can command influence over the culture of the country. The Constitution's commanding influence that President Madison acknowledged is best exemplified in the cultural shift that followed passage of the 13th and 19th Amendments to the Constitution–respectively, abolishing slavery and granting women the right to vote. Truly, the Constitution remains an enduring beacon of hope in our pursuit of "a more perfect Union." An amendment to the Constitution is the only vehicle that will exert the necessary influence to affect a shift in our national culture towards a renewed respect for the rights of victims of violent crime.

The proposed amendment makes some basic pledges to Americans. Our legal system properly protects the rights of the accused in the Constitution. But it does not provide similar protection for the rights of victims, and that must change. We must guarantee these constitutional rights for all victims of violent crime in America.

The protection of victims' rights is one of those rare instances when amending the Constitution is the right thing to do. With bipartisan support, we can balance the scales for victims of violent crime by establishing in the U.S. Constitution our basic rights.

It is important to note that the current version of S.J. Res. 35 contains a technical but significant drafting error, which should be corrected before Congress approves the resolution and proposes the amendment to the states. As currently drafted, the proposing clause of S.J. Res. 35 states that the proposed constitutional amendment to protect crime victims "shall take effect on the 180th day after ratification." Placement of the effective date provision within the proposing clause, and outside the text of the proposed amendment, violates Article V of the Constitution because nothing in Article V authorizes Congress to set the effective date of an amendment once it has been ratified. Quite the contrary, Article V itself establishes the effective date of an amendment, when it states that a proposed amendment shall become valid "when ratified," and not at some future date to be determined by Congress. The Constitution does not prevent Congress, however, from giving states the opportunity to ratify a proposed amendment whose text includes an effective date provision, as Congress did with the Eighteenth and Twentieth Amendments. Such a provision, if ratified, would become part of the Constitution itself. Accordingly, we recommend that the effective date provision currently located in the proposing clause be moved into the text of the proposed amendment.

This concludes my statement, Mr. Chairman. I would welcome the opportunity to answer any questions you or members of the subcommittee may have.

STATEMENT

THE HONORABLE JOHN W. GILLIS

BEFORE THE

SUBCOMMITTEE ON THE CONSTITUTION
COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY
UNITED STATES SENATE

REGARDING

THE PROPOSED VICTIMS' RIGHTS AMENDMENT
TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION

ON

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 2002
WASHINGTON, DC

REV_00148120

Good morning, Chairman Feingold, Senator Thurmond, and distinguished members of the subcommittee. Thank you for the opportunity to present the views of the administration on the proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States to establish basic rights for victims of violent crime.

The administration strongly supports S.J. Res 35, the Victims' Rights Amendment. There is broad-based support for the Amendment across the country. Democratic and Republican leaders, liberal and conservative scholars, and Americans of every persuasion have rallied in support of this important cause. Crime victims encourage your support in our struggle for human dignity and fair treatment.

As a crime victim, a retired law enforcement officer, a former chair of the California Board of Prison Terms, and a citizen who works to uphold justice and advocates for victims' rights and services, I am honored by the confidence placed in me by President Bush and Attorney General Ashcroft to ensure that victims' rights and needs are addressed at the national and state levels as the Director of the Justice Department's Office for Victims of Crime. The Office for Victims of Crime (or OVC) is committed to enhancing the Nation's capacity to assist crime victims and to providing leadership in an ongoing effort to change attitudes, policies, and practices and with a determination to promote justice and healing for all victims of crime. OVC administers the Crime Victims Fund, which is the Justice Department's sole source of funding for services to crime victims. Through the Crime Victims Fund, OVC provides training and technical assistance for victim advocates and allied professionals, supports demonstration projects in communities, and disseminates information about victim issues.

I know firsthand the personal, financial, and emotional devastation that violent crime exacts on its victims. As a survivor of a homicide victim, I testify before you today with the unique advantage of understanding the plight that victims and their families face in the criminal justice system. I know the players and their responsibilities, and my experience has given me the ability to work within the system. More typically, however, when a person is victimized by crime, he or she is thrust into a whole new world in which the state's or the government's needs take priority. In 1982, when the Task Force on Victims of Crime, commissioned by President Reagan, examined the plight of crime victims in America by surveying victims, victim advocates, and criminal justice professionals around the country, one victim lamented:

> "They explained the defendant's constitutional rights to the nth degree. They couldn't do this and they couldn't do that because of his constitutional rights. And I wondered what mine were. And they told me, I haven't got any."[1]

Chairman Feingold, as you know, on April 16, President Bush announced his support for the Feinstein-Kyl amendment to the United States Constitution to protect the rights of crime victims. As the President so eloquently stated:

> "Too often, our system fails to inform victims about proceedings involving bail and pleas and sentencing and even about the trials themselves. Too often, the process fails to take the safety of victims into account when deciding whether to release dangerous offenders. Too often, the financial losses of victims are ignored. And too often, victims are not allowed to address the court at sentencing and explain their suffering, or even to be present in the courtroom where their victimizers are being tried. When our criminal justice system treats victims as irrelevant bystanders, they are victimized for a second time."

Although more than 27,000 victims' rights laws have been enacted, victims' bill of rights have been passed in every state, and 32 states have passed constitutional amendments protecting victims' rights, victims still struggle to assert basic rights to be notified, present, and heard. As one victim stated:

JULY 2002 DRAFT

{PRIVATE }

Homeless Council Name Change
Bill Text and Sectional

SEC. ___. The McKinney-Vento Homeless Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 11301 et seq.) is amended--

(1) in section 101(b), by striking "INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON THE HOMELESS" and inserting "UNITED STATES INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON HOMELESSNESS";

(2) in section 102(b)(1), by striking “an Interagency Council on the Homeless” and inserting “the United States Interagency Council on Homelessness”;

(3) in the heading for title II, by striking "INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON THE HOMELESS" and inserting "UNITED STATES INTERAGENCY COUNCIL ON HOMELESSNESS"; and

(4) in sections 201, 207(1), 501(c)(2)(A), and 501(d)(3), by striking "Interagency Council on the Homeless" and inserting "United States Interagency Council on Homelessness".

* * *

Section ___ would change the name of the Interagency Council on the Homeless to the United States Interagency Council on Homelessness. The addition of "United States" would avoid confusion with the many State interagency councils that have been established since the Federal statute was enacted. In addition, the term "homelessness" is a more appropriate description of the situation that the Council has been tasked to address.

HEADLINE: West Wing suits Utahn

BYLINE: By Sharon HaddockDeseret News staff writer

BODY:
ALPINE -- Jay Leno's stream of jokes about President George W. Bush's intellect aren't deserved, according to a White House insider with Utah ties.

He isn't indecisive. And he isn't slow-witted, says Kyle Sampson, a former Utah County man who's currently one of six associate legal counselors to the president.

"All day he sits in the Oval Office and makes the tough decisions," he said. "You know they're the tough ones or they wouldn't make it to the Oval Office. He listens. He cuts to the heart of the matter and he makes a decision. He is amazingly astute." Sampson said White House staffers bristle when the president is publicly attacked -- but Bush takes it well.

"I know up close he's really trying to do the right things for the right reasons," he said. "He doesn't deserve the ridicule or the pundits."

Bush doesn't hand over the reins to Vice President Dick Cheney either, Sampson said. "The president is the president and no one knows that more than the vice president," he said.

Sampson has been working in the West Wing for 18 months, brought on board as a special assistant to the president after he'd worked for U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and with Cheney's daughter, Elizabeth, helping select lawyers to fill the slots in various governmental agencies.

He'd put together lists of potential candidates, pare it to a short list and then present the candidates to the president. Bush would then announce the name and Sampson would help see the process through. He helped pick a deputy attorney general, an FBI director, a drug czar and a solicitor general.

"I quickly found that the secret was to first decide what you want and then find the person who fit that bill. You had to have that determined first because you'd get a flood of referrals from every senator and every politician out there."

Sampson divides his time between overseeing the ongoing and potential litigation involving the environmental portfolio, seeing that gifts or solicitations to the president are legally acceptable and continuing to help with judicial selection.

There's also a lot of additional assignments that are handed out at the discretion of Al Gonzales, Sampson's boss.

"It's interesting because a lot of what I do involves negotiating that is challenging because you're working with egos, special interests and a variety of perspectives."

Typically, Sampson starts his day with a 5 a.m. jog and a session with the Washington Post. He's in staff meeting in the West Wing by 8 a.m. and taking care of business by 8:45.

"It's all very difficult and very important and the answers are needed just like that," he said, snapping his fingers.

When he meets with President Bush he's usually taking in a binder full of carefully researched information. "He's got these little half-glasses and he'll drop them, look over them at you and question you if there's a problem. It's very much a back- and-forth dialogue."

Sampson, who grew up in American Fork and graduated from Brigham Young University in 1993, never really aspired to the White House, but he's enjoying his ride.

"I've been told the average tenure for a White House staff member is 18 months. I've had 18 months and I love it," he said. "It's intense. I'm on call all of the time but it's a once-in-a-lifetime thing. I love the job."

Sampson was part of Bush's second meeting on the president's first work day on Jan. 21, 2000. He also was in the White House Sept. 11 and remembers that day as frightening, chaotic and emotionally draining.

"It also gave new purpose to my work. I think the whole country looked at everything differently and wanted to help. I was lucky enough to be a position to do so."

He says the pace of the job is very similar to that portrayed on the popular television show "The West Wing" except that he and other staff members don't walk around as much.

"We just shoot off an e-mail," Sampson said.

He's aware that people are fairly impressed when he tells them what he does and who he works with during the day, but he doesn't dwell on it or count on any permanence.

"I get respect from my family and friends and colleagues, from everyone but my wife," he said. "And I've been told most guys in this job burn out, get fired or accept a better offer."

S. 2734

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LOANS TO SMALL BUSINESS CONCERNS DAMAGED BY DROUGHT.

(a) SHORT TITLE.--This Act may be cited as the ``Small Business Drought Relief Act".

(b) FINDINGS.--Congress finds that--

(1) as of July 2002, more than 36 States (including Massachusetts, South Carolina, and Louisiana) have suffered from continuing drought conditions;

(2) droughts have a negative effect on State and regional economies;

(3) many small businesses in the United States sell, distribute, market, or otherwise engage in commerce related to water and water sources, such as lakes and streams;

(4) many small businesses in the United States suffer economic injury from drought conditions, leading to revenue losses, job layoffs, and bankruptcies;

(5) these small businesses need access to low-interest loans for business-related purposes, including paying their bills and making payroll until business returns to normal;

(6) absent a legislative change, only agriculture-related businesses are eligible for Federal disaster loan assistance as a result of drought conditions; and

(7) it is necessary to amend the Small Business Act to allow non-farm small businesses that have suffered economic injury from drought to receive financial assistance through Small Business Administration Economic Injury Disaster Loans.

(c) EXPANSION OF DISASTER DEFINITION.--Section 3(k) of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632(k)) is amended by inserting ``drought," after ``windstorms,".

By Mr. KERRY (for himself, Mr. HOLLINGS, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. BAUCUS, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. DASCHLE, and Mr. JOHNSON):

S. 2734. A bill to provide emergency assistance to non-farm small business concerns that have suffered economic harm from the devastating effects of drought; to the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, today I rise to introduce emergency legislation to help small non-farm businesses across this Nation that are in dire straits because of drought conditions in their State. They need assistance, particularly access to working capital to pay the bills and meet payroll, but they can't get it because they are falling through the cracks of Federal disaster loan programs.

Why? Well, this is hard to believe, but it is because a drought is not considered a disaster under the Small Business Administration's disaster loan program, and under the Department of Agriculture's disaster program, which does consider a drought a disaster, only agriculture-related businesses are eligible for disaster assistance.

This assistance is critical to the survival of thousands of small businesses that make their living in tourism and recreation industries, as well as other industries dependent on water. Droughts are a cruel phenomenon of nature. They are out of the control of a small business owner, and it isn't fair that they aren't eligible for Federal disaster assistance but the victims of floods, fires, and hurricanes are.

With a very small change, we can make all the difference to affected small businesses. Specifically, I propose amending the Small Business Act in order to make a drought a disaster.

More than 30 States are struggling with drought right now, according to the National Drought Mitigation at the University of Nebraska, and far more than agricultural, forestry and livestock businesses are hurt. If you talk to the governors of your States, I am sure they will tell you how bad the situation is. In northern Massachusetts, we have been in a drought since last fall. In South Carolina, the conditions are so bad that small businesses dependent upon lake and river tourism have seen revenues drop anywhere from 17 to 80 percent. The victims range from fish and tackle shops to rafting businesses, from restaurants to motels, from marinas to gas stations. For those who are listening and discount the serious impact of drought on small businesses, ask the rafting businesses that went bankrupt in Texas in 1996. The rivers were so low that these established businesses lost everything.

I thank my colleagues who are cosponsors, Senators Hollings, Landrieu, Baucus, Bingaman, Daschle, and Johnson. I invite my other colleagues with droughts in their States to cosponsor this bill and call on the Administration to work with our Committee in passing this emergency legislation before we go home for the break in August. These small businesses cannot wait.

HEADLINE: West Wing suits Utahn

BYLINE: By Sharon HaddockDeseret News staff writer

BODY:
ALPINE -- Jay Leno's stream of jokes about President George W. Bush's intellect aren't deserved, according to a White House insider with Utah ties.

He isn't indecisive. And he isn't slow-witted, says Kyle Sampson, a former Utah County man who's currently one of six associate legal counselors to the president.

"All day he sits in the Oval Office and makes the tough decisions," he said. "You know they're the tough ones or they wouldn't make it to the Oval Office. He listens. He cuts to the heart of the matter and he makes a decision. He is amazingly astute." Sampson said White House staffers bristle when the president is publicly attacked -- but Bush takes it well.

"I know up close he's really trying to do the right things for the right reasons," he said. "He doesn't deserve the ridicule or the pundits."

Bush doesn't hand over the reins to Vice President Dick Cheney either, Sampson said. "The president is the president and no one knows that more than the vice president," he said.

Sampson has been working in the West Wing for 18 months, brought on board as a special assistant to the president after he'd worked for U.S. Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and with Cheney's daughter, Elizabeth, helping select lawyers to fill the slots in various governmental agencies.

He'd put together lists of potential candidates, pare it to a short list and then present the candidates to the president. Bush would then announce the name and Sampson would help see the process through. He helped pick a deputy attorney general, an FBI director, a drug czar and a solicitor general.

"I quickly found that the secret was to first decide what you want and then find the person who fit that bill. You had to have that determined first because you'd get a flood of referrals from every senator and every politician out there."

Sampson divides his time between overseeing the ongoing and potential litigation involving the environmental portfolio, seeing that gifts or solicitations to the president are legally acceptable and continuing to help with judicial selection.

There's also a lot of additional assignments that are handed out at the discretion of Al Gonzales, Sampson's boss.

"It's interesting because a lot of what I do involves negotiating that is challenging because you're working with egos, special interests and a variety of perspectives."

Typically, Sampson starts his day with a 5 a.m. jog and a session with the Washington Post. He's in staff meeting in the West Wing by 8 a.m. and taking care of business by 8:45.

"It's all very difficult and very important and the answers are needed just like that," he said, snapping his fingers.

When he meets with President Bush he's usually taking in a binder full of carefully researched information. "He's got these little half-glasses and he'll drop them, look over them at you and question you if there's a problem. It's very much a back- and-forth dialogue."

Sampson, who grew up in American Fork and graduated from Brigham Young University in 1993, never really aspired to the White House, but he's enjoying his ride.

"I've been told the average tenure for a White House staff member is 18 months. I've had 18 months and I love it," he said. "It's intense. I'm on call all of the time but it's a once-in-a-lifetime thing. I love the job."

Sampson was part of Bush's second meeting on the president's first work day on Jan. 21, 2000. He also was in the White House Sept. 11 and remembers that day as frightening, chaotic and emotionally draining.

"It also gave new purpose to my work. I think the whole country looked at everything differently and wanted to help. I was lucky enough to be a position to do so."

He says the pace of the job is very similar to that portrayed on the popular television show "The West Wing" except that he and other staff members don't walk around as much.

"We just shoot off an e-mail," Sampson said.

He's aware that people are fairly impressed when he tells them what he does and who he works with during the day, but he doesn't dwell on it or count on any permanence.

"I get respect from my family and friends and colleagues, from everyone but my wife," he said. "And I've been told most guys in this job burn out, get fired or accept a better offer."

Interesting. And quite striking. Of course, both Clinton and Reagan had Senates of the same party, so the realistic comparison in with Bush I, right? Moreover, my impression is that ya'll have made dramatically more nominations than the previous Bush administration did in its first two years. Is that correct?

Noel,

It was great to meet you in person and I am looking forward to working with you as part of the team. Please, feel free to call on me anytime.

As discussed, I would like to sit down with whomever in your office handles SBA-related issues generally to make sure that we are all in the same page and would appreciate your help setting that up.

Again, many thanks and I am looking forward having some fun with all of this.

Best,

Dave

Brett, I understand from Brad that you were interested in looking at the provisions in the House DHS legislation on liability. They are located in Sections 773-774 in the Armey chairman's mark (attached below). This was not actually an amendment.

Sec. 1001. Transfer of the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center.

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

In this Act, the following definitions apply:

(1) Each of the terms ''American homeland'' and ''homeland'' means the United States.

(2) The term ''appropriate congressional committee'' means any committee of the House of Representatives or the Senate having legislative or oversight jurisdiction under the Rules of the House of Representatives or the Senate, respectively, over the matter concerned.

(3) The term ''assets'' includes contracts, facilities, property, records, unobligated or unexpended balances of appropriations, and other funds or resources (other than personnel).

(4) The term ''critical infrastructure'' has the meaning given that term in section 1016(e) of Public Law 107–56 (42 U.S.C. 5195c(e)).

(5) The term ''Department'' means the Department of Homeland Security.

(6) The term ''emergency response providers'' includes Federal, State, and local emergency public safety, law enforcement, emergency response, emergency medical, and related personnel, agencies, and authorities.

(7) The term ''executive agency'' means an executive agency and a military department, as defined, respectively, in sections 105 and 102 of title 5, United States Code.

(8) The term ''functions'' includes authorities, powers, rights, privileges, immunities, programs, projects, activities, duties, and responsibilities.

(9) The term ''key resources'' means means publicly or privately controlled resources essential to the minimal operations of the economy and government.

(10) The term ''local government'' means—

(A) a county, municipality, city, town, township, local public authority, school district, special district, intrastate district, council of governments (regardless of whether the council of governments is incorporated as a nonprofit corporation under State law), regional or interstate government entity, or agency or instrumentality of a local government;

(B) an Indian tribe or authorized tribal organization, or Alaska Native village or organization; and

(C) a rural community, unincorporated town or village, or other public entity.

(11) The term ''major disaster'' has the meaning given in section 102(2) of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5122).

(12) The term ''personnel'' means officers and employees.

(13) The term ''Secretary'' means the Secretary of Homeland Security.

(14) The term ''terrorism'' means any activity that—

(A) involves an act that—

(i) is dangerous to human life or potentially destructive of critical infrastructure or key resources; and

(ii) is a violation of the criminal laws of the United States or of any State or other subdivision of the United States; and

(B) appears to be intended—

(i) to intimidate or coerce a civilian population;

(ii) to influence the policy of a government by intimidation or coercion; or

(iii) to affect the conduct of a government by mass destruction, assassination, or kidnapping.

(15) The term ''United States'', when used in a geographic sense, means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, any possession of the United States, and any waters within the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 3. CONSTRUCTION; SEVERABILITY.

Any provision of this Act held to be invalid or unenforceable by its terms, or as applied to any person or circumstance, shall be construed so as to give it the maximum effect permitted by law, unless such holding shall be one of utter invalidity or unenforceability, in which event such provision shall be deemed severable from this Act and shall not affect the remainder thereof, or the application of such provision to other persons not similarly situated or to other, dissimilar circumstances.

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This Act shall take effect thirty days after the date of enactment or, if enacted within thirty days before January 1, 2003, on January 1, 2003.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY

SEC. 101. EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT; MISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established a Department of Homeland Security, as an executive department of the United States within the meaning of title 5, United States Code.

(b) MISSION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The primary mission of the Department is to—

(A) prevent terrorist attacks within the United States;

(B) reduce the vulnerability of the United States to terrorism;

(C) minimize the damage, and assist in the recovery, from terrorist attacks that do occur within the United States; and

(D) carry out all functions of entities transferred to the Department, including by acting as a focal point regarding natural and manmade crises and emergency planning.

(2) RESPONSIBILITY FOR INVESTIGATING AND PROSECUTING TERRORISM.—Except as specifically provided by law with respect to entities transferred to the Department under this Act, primary responsibility for investigating and prosecuting acts of terrorism shall be vested not in the Department, but rather in Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies with jurisdiction over the acts in question.

SEC. 102. SECRETARY; FUNCTIONS.

(a) SECRETARY.—(1) There is a Secretary of Homeland Security, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(2) The Secretary is the head of the Department and shall have direction, authority, and control over it.

(3) All functions of all officers, employees, and organizational units of the Department are vested in the Secretary.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—The Secretary—

(1) except as otherwise provided by this Act, may delegate any of the Secretary's functions to any officer, employee, or organizational unit of the Department;

(2) shall have the authority to make contracts, grants, and cooperative agreements, and to enter into agreements with other executive agencies, as may be necessary and proper to carry out the Secretary's responsibilities under this Act or otherwise provided by law; and

(3) shall take reasonable steps to ensure that information systems and databases of the Department are compatible with each other.

(c) COORDINATION WITH NON-FEDERAL ENTITIES.—The Secretary shall coordinate (including the provision of training and equipment) with State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, with the private sector, and with other entities, including by—

(1) coordinating with State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, and with the private sector, to ensure adequate planning, equipment, training, and exercise activities;

(2) coordinating and, as appropriate, consolidating, the Federal Government's communications and systems of communications relating to homeland security with State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, the private sector, other entities, and the public;

(3) directing and supervising grant programs of the Federal Government for State and local government emergency response providers; and

(4) distributing or, as appropriate, coordinating the distribution of, warnings and information to State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities and to the public.

(d) MEETINGS OF NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL.—The Secretary may, subject to the direction of the President, attend and participate in meetings of the National Security Council.

(e) ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS.—The issuance of regulations by the Secretary shall be governed by the provisions of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code, except as specifically provided in this Act, in laws granting regulatory authorities that are transferred by this Act, and in laws enacted after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 103. OTHER OFFICERS.

(a) DEPUTY SECRETARY; UNDER SECRETARIES.—There are the following officers, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate:

(1) A Deputy Secretary of Homeland Security, who shall be the Secretary's first assistant for purposes of subchapter III of chapter 33 of title 5, United States Code.

(2) An Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection.

(3) An Under Secretary for Science and Technology.

(4) An Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security.

(5) An Under Secretary for Emergency Preparedness and Response.

(6) An Under Secretary for Management.

(7) Not more than four Assistant Secretaries.

(b) INSPECTOR GENERAL.—There is an Inspector General, who shall be appointed as provided in section 3(a) of the Inspector General Act of 1978.

(c) COMMANDANT OF THE COAST GUARD.—To assist the Secretary in the performance of the Secretary's functions, there is a Commandant of the Coast Guard, who shall be appointed as provided in section 44 of title 14, United States Code.

(d) OTHER OFFICERS.—To assist the Secretary in the performance of the Secretary's functions, there are the following officers, appointed by the President:

(1) A General Counsel, who shall be the chief legal officer of the Department.

(2) Not more than eight Assistant Secretaries.

(3) A Director of the Secret Service.

(4) A Chief Financial Officer.

(5) A Chief Information Officer.

(e) PERFORMANCE OF SPECIFIC FUNCTIONS.—Subject to the provisions of this Act, every officer of the Department shall perform the functions specified by law for the official's office or prescribed by the Secretary.

TITLE II—INFORMATION ANALYSIS AND INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION

Subtitle A—Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection

SEC. 201. UNDER SECRETARY FOR INFORMATION ANALYSIS AND INFRASTRUCTURE PROTECTION.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection, shall be responsible for the following:

(1) Conducting analysis of information, including foreign intelligence and open source information, lawfully collected by Federal, State and local law enforcement agencies and by elements of the intelligence community with respect to threats of terrorist acts against the United States.

(2) Integrating information, intelligence, and intelligence analyses to produce and disseminate infrastructure vulnerability assessments with respect to such threats.

(3) Identifying priorities for protective and support measures by the Department, by other executive agencies, by State and local governments, by the private sector, and by other entities.

(4) Reviewing, analyzing, and recommending improvements in law, policy, and procedure for the sharing of intelligence and other information with respect to threats against the United States within the Federal Government and between the Federal Government and State and local governments.

(5) Under the direction of the Secretary, developing a comprehensive national plan to provide for the security of key resources and critical infrastructures.

(6) Coordinating with other executive agencies, State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, and the private sector, to provide advice on implementation of such comprehensive national plan.

(7) Supporting the intelligence and information requirements of the Department.

(8) Performing such other functions as the Secretary may direct.

(9) Administering the Homeland Security Advisory System, exercising primary responsibility for public advisories relating to terrorist threats, and (in coordination with other executive agencies) providing specific warning information to State and local government personnel, agencies, and authorities, the private sector, other entities, and the public, as well as advice about appropriate protective actions and countermeasures.

SEC. 202. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and obligations of the following:

(1) The National Infrastructure Protection Center of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than the Computer Investigations and Operations Section), including the functions of the Attorney General relating thereto.

(2) The National Communications System of the Department of Defense, including the functions of the Secretary of Defense relating thereto.

(3) The Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office of the Department of Commerce, including the functions of the Secretary of Commerce relating thereto.

(4) The Energy Security and Assurance Program of the Department of Energy, including the National Infrastructure Simulation and Analysis Center and the functions of the Secretary of Energy relating thereto.

(5) The Federal Computer Incident Response Center of the General Services Administration, including the functions of the Administrator of General Services relating thereto.

SEC. 203. ACCESS TO INFORMATION.

The Secretary shall have access to all reports, assessments, and analytical information relating to threats of terrorism in the United States and to other areas of responsibility described in section 101(b), and to all information concerning infrastructure or other vulnerabilities of the United States to terrorism, whether or not such information has been analyzed, that may be collected, possessed, or prepared by any executive agency, except as otherwise directed by the President. The Secretary shall also have access to other information relating to the foregoing matters that may be collected, possessed, or prepared by an executive agency, as the President may further provide. With respect to the material to which the Secretary has access under this section—

(1) the Secretary may obtain such material by request, and may enter into cooperative arrangements with other executive agencies to share such material on a regular or routine basis, including requests or arrangements involving broad categories of material;

(2) regardless of whether the Secretary has made any request or entered into any cooperative arrangement pursuant to paragraph (1), all executive agencies promptly shall provide to the Secretary—

(A) all reports, assessments, and analytical information relating to threats of terrorism in the United States and to other areas of responsibility described in section 101(b);

(B) all information concerning infrastructure or other vulnerabilities of the United States to terrorism, whether or not such information has been analyzed;

(C) all information relating to significant and credible threats of terrorism in the United States, whether or not such information has been analyzed, if the President has provided that the Secretary shall have access to such information; and

(D) such other material as the President may further provide;

(3) the Secretary shall have full access and input with respect to information from any national collaborative information analysis capability (as referred to in section 924 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107–107; 115 Stat. 1199)) established jointly by the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence; and

(4) the Secretary shall ensure that any material received pursuant to this section is protected from unauthorized disclosure and handled and used only for the performance of official duties, and that any intelligence information shared under this section shall be transmitted, retained, and disseminated consistent with the authority of the Director of Central Intelligence to protect intelligence sources and methods under the National Security Act and related procedures or, as appropriate, similar authorities of the Attorney General concerning sensitive law enforcement information.

SEC. 204. PROCEDURES FOR SHARING INFORMATION.

The Secretary shall establish procedures on the use of information shared under this title that—

(1) limit the redissemination of such information to ensure that it is not used for an unauthorized purpose;

(2) ensure the security and confidentiality of such information;

(3) protect the constitutional and statutory rights of any individuals who are subjects of such information; and

(4) provide data integrity through the timely removal and destruction of obsolete or erroneous names and information.

SEC. 205. PRIVACY OFFICER.

The Secretary shall appoint a senior official in the Department to assume primary responsibility for privacy policy, including—

(1) assuring that the use of information technologies sustain, and do not erode, privacy protections relating to the use, collection, and disclosure of personal information;

(2) assuring that personal information contained in Privacy Act systems of records is handled in full compliance with fair information practices as set out in the Privacy Act of 1974;

(3) evaluating legislative proposals involving collection, use, and disclosure of personal information by the Federal Government;

(4) conducting a privacy impact assessment of proposed rules on the privacy of personal information, including the type of personal information collected and the number of people affected; and

(5) preparing a report to Congress on an annual basis on activities of the Department that affect privacy, including complaints of privacy violations, implementation of the Privacy Act of 1974, internal controls, and other matters.

SEC. 206. FEDERAL CYBERSECURITY PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection, shall establish and manage a program to improve the security of Federal critical information systems, including carrying out responsibilities under paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 201 that relate to such systems.

(b) DUTIES.—The duties of the Secretary under subsection (a) are—

(1) to evaluate the increased use by civilian executive agencies of techniques and tools to enhance the security of Federal critical information systems, including, as appropriate, consideration of cryptography;

(2) to provide assistance to civilian executive agencies in protecting the security of Federal critical information systems, including identification of significant risks to such systems; and

(3) to coordinate research and development for critical information systems relating to supervisory control and data acquisition systems, including, as appropriate, the establishment of a test bed.

(c) FEDERAL INFORMATION SYSTEM SECURITY TEAM.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In carrying out subsection (b)(2), the Secretary shall establish, manage, and support a Federal information system security team whose purpose is to provide technical expertise to civilian executive agencies to assist such agencies in securing Federal critical information systems by conducting information security audits of such systems, including conducting tests of the effectiveness of information security control techniques and performing logical access control tests of interconnected computer systems and networks, and related vulnerability assessment techniques.

(2) TEAM MEMBERS.—The Secretary shall ensure that the team under paragraph (1) includes technical experts and auditors, computer scientists, and computer forensics analysts whose technical competence enables the team to conduct audits under such paragraph.

(3) AGENCY AGREEMENTS REGARDING AUDITS.—Each civilian executive agency may enter into an agreement with the team under paragraph (1) for the conduct of audits under such paragraph of the Federal critical information systems of the agency. Such agreement shall establish the terms of the audit and shall include provisions to minimize the extent to which the audit disrupts the operations of the agency.

(4) REPORTS.—Promptly after completing an audit under paragraph (1) of a civilian executive agency, the team under such paragraph shall prepare a report summarizing the findings of the audit and making recommendations for corrective action. Such report shall be submitted to the Secretary, the head of such agency, and the Inspector General of the agency (if any), and upon request of any congressional committee with jurisdiction over such agency, to such committee.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term ''Federal critical information system'' means an ''information system'' as defined in section 3502 of title 44, United States Code, that—

(1) is, or is a component of, a key resource or critical infrastructure;

(2) is used or operated by a civilian executive agency or by a contractor of such an agency; and

(3) does not include any national security system as defined in section 5142 of the Clinger-Cohen Act of 1996.

Subtitle B—Intelligence Analysis Center

SEC. 211. INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER

(a) ESTABLISHMENT; NFIP AGENCY.—(1) There is established within the Department the Intelligence Analysis Center. The Under Secretary for Information Analysis and Infrastructure Protection shall be the head of the Intelligence Analysis Center.

(2) TERMS OF DETAIL.—Any officer or employee of the United States or a member of the Armed Forces who is detailed to the Under Secretary under paragraph (1) shall be detailed on a reimbursable basis for a period of less than two years for the performance of temporary functions as required by the Under Secretary.

(d) INCLUSION OF OFFICE OF INTELLIGENCE AS AN ELEMENT OF THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY.—Section 3(4) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401a(4)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and'' at the end of subparagraph (I);

(2) by redesignating subparagraph (J) as subparagraph (K); and

(3) by inserting after subparagraph (I) the following new subparagraph:

''(J) the Intelligence Analysis Center of the Department of Homeland Security; and''.

SEC. 212. MISSION OF THE INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The mission of the Intelligence Analysis Center is as follows:

(1) ANALYSIS AND PRODUCTION.—

(A) Correlating and evaluating information and intelligence related to the mission of the Department collected from all sources available.

(B) Producing all-source collaborative intelligence analysis, warnings, tactical assessments, and strategic assessments of the terrorist threat and infrastructure vulnerabilities of the United States.

(C) Providing approporiate dissemination of such assessments.

(D) Improving the lines of communication with respect to homeland security between the Federal Government and State and local public safety agencies and the private sector through the timely dissemination of information pertaining to threats of acts of terrorism against the United States.

(2) COORDINATION OF INFORMATION.—Coordinating with elements of the intelligence community and with Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, and the private sector as appropriate.

(3) ADDITIONAL DUTIES.—Performing such other functions as the Secretary may direct.

(b) STRATEGIC AND TACTICAL MISSIONS OF THE INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER.—The Under Secretary shall conduct strategic and tactical assessments and warnings through the Intelligence Analysis Center, including research, analysis, and the production of assessments on the following as they relate to the mission of the Department:

(1) Domestic terrorism.

(2) International terrorism.

(3) Counterintelligence.

(4) Transnational crime.

(5) Proliferation of weapons of mass destruction.

(6) Illicit financing of terrorist activities.

(7) Cybersecurity and cybercrime.

(8) Key resources and critical infrastructures.

(c) STAFFING OF THE INTELLIGENCE ANALYSIS CENTER.—

(1) FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.—In accordance with title VIII, for purposes of carrying out this title, there is transferred to the Under Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and liabilities of the following entities:

(A) The National Infrastructure Protection Center of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (other than the Computer Investigations and Operations Section).

(B) The Critical Infrastructure Assurance Office of the Department of Commerce.

(G) The intelligence element of the Coast Guard.

(H) The intelligence element of the United States Customs Service.

(I) The intelligence element of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

(J) The intelligence element of the Transportation Security Administration.

(K) The intelligence element of the Federal Protective Service.

(L) The El Paso Intelligence Center of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

(2) STRUCTURE.—It is the sense of Congress that the Under Secretary should model the Intelligence Analysis Center on the technical, analytic approach of the Information Dominance Center of the Department of the Army to the maximum extent feasible and appropriate.

TITLE III—UNDER SECRETARY FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

SEC. 301. UNDER SECRETARY FOR SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall have responsibility for—

(1) establishing and administering the primary research and development activities of the Department, including the long-term research and development needs and capabilities for all elements of the Department;

(2) conducting basic and applied research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities that are relevant to any or all elements of the Department, through both intramural and extramural programs; provided that such responsibility does not extend to human health-related research and development activities;

(3) coordinating and integrating all research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities of the Department;

(4) coordinating with other appropriate executive agencies in developing and carrying out the science and technology agenda of the Department to reduce duplication and identify unmet needs;

(5) in consultation with other appropriate executive agencies, developing a national policy and strategic plan for, identifying priorities for, and coordinating the Federal Government's civilian efforts to identify and develop countermeasures to chemical, biological, radiological, nuclear, andother emerging terrorist threats;

(6) establishing Federal priorities for research, development, demonstration, testing, and, as appropriate, procurement and transitional operation of technology and systems—

(A) for preventing the importation of chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear weapons and related materials;

(B) for detecting, preventing, and protecting against terrorist attacks that involve such weapons or related materials; and

(C) for interoperability of communications systems for emergency response providers;

(7) ensuring that the research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities of the Department are aligned with the Department's procurement needs;

(8) facilitating the deployment of technology that will serve to enhance homeland security, including through the establishment of a centralized Federal repository for information relating to technologies described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (6) for dissemination to Federal, State, and local government and private sector entities, and for information for persons seeking guidance on how to pursue proposals to develop or deploy technologies that would contribute to homeland security;

(9) providing guidance, recommendations, and technical assistance as appropriate to assist Federal, State, and local government and private sector efforts to evaluate and implement the use of technologies described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) of paragraph (6); and

(10) developing and overseeing the administration of guidelines for merit review of research and development projects throughout the Department, and for the dissemination of research conducted or sponsored by the Department.

SEC. 302. FUNCTIONS TRANSFERRED.

In accordance with Title VIII, there shall be transferred to the Secretary the functions, personnel, assets, and liabilities of the following:

(1) The program under section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, and functions thereof, including the functions of the Secretary of Health and Human Services relating thereto, subject to the amendments made by section 906(3), except that such transfer shall not occur unless the program under section 212 of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002 (subtitle B of title II of Public Law 107–188), and functions thereof, including the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture relating thereto, subject to the amendments made by section 907, is transferred to the Department.

(2) Programs and activities of the Department of Energy, including the functions of the Secretary of Energy relating thereto (but not including programs and activities relating to the strategic nuclear defense posture of the United States), as follows:

(A) the programs and activities relating to chemical and biological national security, and supporting programs and activities directly related to homeland security, of the non-proliferation and verification research and development program;

(B) the programs and activities relating to nuclear smuggling, and other programs and activities directly related to homeland security, within the proliferation detection program of the non-proliferation and verification research and development program;

(C) those aspects of the nuclear assessment program and activities of the assessment, detection, and cooperation program of the international materials protection and cooperation program that are directly related to homeland security;

(D) such life sciences activities of the biological and environmental research program related to microbial pathogens as may be designated by the President for transfer to the Department and that are directly related to homeland security;

(E) the Environmental Measurements Laboratory; and

(F) the advanced scientific computing research program and activities at Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory; and

(3) the homeland security projects within the Chemical Biological Defense Program of the Department of Defense known as the Biological Defense Homeland Security Support Program and the Biological Counter-Terrorism Research Program.

SEC. 303. CONDUCT OF CERTAIN PUBLIC HEALTH-RELATED ACTIVITIES.

With respect to civilian human health-related research and development activities relating to countermeasures for chemical, biological, radiological, and nuclear and other emerging terrorist threats carried out by the Department of Health and Human Services (including the Public Health Service), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall set priorities for such activities in collaboration with the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security.

SEC. 304. FEDERALLY FUNDED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT CENTER.

The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall have the authority to establish or contract with one or more federally funded research and development centers to provide independent analysis of homeland security issues, or to carry out other responsibilities under this Act.

REV_00148384

SEC. 305. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) CLASSIFICATION.—To the greatest extent practicable, research conducted or supported by the Department shall be unclassified.

(b) CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this title shall be construed to preclude any Under Secretary of the Department from carrying out research, development, demonstration, or deployment activities, as long as such activities are coordinated through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, may issue necessary regulations with respect to research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities of the Department, including the conducting, funding, and reviewing of such activities.

(d) NOTIFICATION OF PRESIDENTIAL LIFE SCIENCES DESIGNATIONS.—Not later than 60 days before effecting any transfer of Department of Energy life sciences activities pursuant to section 302(2)(D) of this Act, the President shall notify the Congress of the proposed transfer and shall include the reasons for the transfer and a description of the effect of the transfer on the activities of the Department of Energy.

SEC. 306. HOMELAND SECURITY SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY COORDINATION COUNCIL.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND COMPOSITION.—There is established within the Department a Homeland Security Science and Technology Coordination Council (in this section referred to as the ''Coordination Council''). The Coordination Council shall be composed of all the Under Secretaries of the Department and any other Department officials designated by the Secretary, and shall be chaired by the Undersecretary for Science and Technology. The Coordination Council shall meet at the call of the chair.

(b) RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Coordination Council shall—

(1) establish priorities for research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation activities conducted or supported by the Department;

(2) ensure that the priorities established under paragraph (1) reflect the acquisition needs of the Department; and

(3) assist the Under Secretary for Science and Technology in carrying out his responsibilities under section 301(3).

SEC. 307. CONDUCT OF RESEARCH, DEVELOPMENT, DEMONSTRATION, TESTING AND EVALUATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall carry out the responsibilities under section 301(2) through both extramural and intramural programs.

(b) EXTRAMURAL PROGRAMS.—(1) The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, shall operate extramural research, development, demonstration, testing, and evaluation programs so as to—

(A) ensure that colleges, universities, private research institutes and companies (and consortia thereof) from as many areas of the United States as practicable participate; and

(B) distribute funds through grants, cooperative agreements and contracts through competitions that are as open as possible.

(2) In carrying out the duties under section 301, the Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, may establish university centers of excellence to perform research in support of the mission of the Department. Such centers may be consortia, which may include one or more colleges or universities, private research institutes, or companies.

(c) INTRAMURAL PROGRAMS.—(1) In carrying out the duties under section 301, the Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science and Technology, may draw upon the expertise of any laboratory of the Federal government, whether operated by a contractor or the Government.

(2) The Secretary, acting through the Under Secretary for Science ant Technology, may establish a headquarters laboratory for the Department at any national laboratory and may establish additional laboratory units at other national laboratories.

(3) If the Secretary chooses to establish a headquarters laboratory pursuant to paragraph (2), then the Secretary shall do the following:

(A) Establish criteria for the selection of the headquarters laboratory in consultation with the National Academy of Sciences, appropriate Federal agencies, and other experts.

(B) Publish the criteria in the Federal Register.

(C) Evaluate all appropriate national laboratories against the criteria.

(D) Select a national laboratory on the basis of the criteria.

(E) Report to the appropriate committees of the Congress on which laboratory was selected, how the selected laboratory meets the published criteria, and what duties the headquarters laboratory shall perform.

(4) No laboratory shall begin operating as the headquarters laboratory of the Department until at least 30 days after the transmittal of the report required by paragraph (3)(E).

SEC. 308. TRANSFER OF PLUM ISLAND ANIMAL DISEASE CENTER, DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) TRANSFER REQUIRED.—In accordance with title VIII, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Secretary of Homeland Security the Plum Island Animal Disease Center of the Department of Agriculture, including the assets and liabilities of the Center.

(b) CONTINUED DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE ACCESS.—Upon the transfer of the Plum Island Animal Disease Center, the Secretary of Homeland Security and the Secretary of Agriculture shall enter into an agreement to ensure Department of Agriculture access to the center for research, diagnostic, and other activities of the Department of Agriculture.

TITLE IV—BORDER AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY

Subtitle A—General Provisions

SEC. 403. VISA ISSUANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding section 104(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1104(a)) or any other provision of law, and except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary—

(1) shall be vested exclusively with all authorities to issue regulations with respect to, administer, and enforce the provisions of such Act, and of all other immigration and nationality laws, relating to the functions of consular officers of the United States in connection with the granting or refusal of visas, and shall have the authority to refuse visas in accordance with law and to develop programs of homeland security training for consular officers (in addition to consular training provided by the Secretary of State), which authorities shall be exercised through the Secretary of State, except that the Secretary shall not have authority to alter or reverse the decision of a consular officer to refuse a visa to an alien; and

(2) shall have authority to confer or impose upon any officer or employee of the United States, with the consent of the head of the executive agency under whose jurisdiction such officer or employee is serving, any of the functions specified in paragraph (1).

(b) AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding subsection (a), the Secretary of State may direct a consular officer to refuse a visa to an alien if the Secretary of State deems such refusal necessary or advisable in the foreign policy or security interests of the United States.

(2) CONSTRUCTION REGARDING AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the authorities of the Secretary of State under the following provisions of law:

(A) Section 101(a)(15)(A) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15)(A)).

(B) Section 204(d)(2) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1154) (as it will take effect upon the entry into force of the Convention on Protection of Children and Cooperation in Respect to Inter-Country Adoption).

(C) Section 212(a)(3)(B)(vi)(II) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

(D) Section 212(a)(3)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(3)(C)).

(E) Section 212(a)(10)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(a)(10)(C)).

(F) Section 219(a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1189(a)).

(G) Section 237(a)(4)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1227(a)(4)(C)).

(H) Section 401 of the Cuban Liberty and Democratic Solidarity (LIBERTAD) Act of 1996 (22 U.S.C. 6034; Public Law 104–114).

(I) Section 613 of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1999 (as contained in section 101(b) of division A of Public Law 105–277) (Omnibus Consolidated and Emergency Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1999; 112 Stat. 2681; H.R. 4328 (originally H.R. 4276) as amended by section 617 of Public Law 106–553).

(J) Section 801 of H.R. 3427, the Admiral James W. Nance and Meg Donovan Foreign Relations Authorization Act, Fiscal Years 2000 and 2001, as enacted by reference in Public Law 106–113.

(K) Section 568 of the Foreign Operations, Export Financing, and Related Programs Appropriations Act, 2002 (Public Law 107–115).

(3) CONSTRUCTION REGARDING DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to affect any delegation of authority to the Secretary of State by the President pursuant to any proclamation issued under section 212(f) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1182(f)).

(c) ASSIGNMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY EMPLOYEES TO DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR POSTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to assign employees of the Department of Homeland Security to any diplomatic and consular posts abroad to perform the following functions:

(A) Provide expert advice and training to consular officers regarding specific security threats relating to individual visa applications or classes of applications.

(B) Review any or all such applications prior to their adjudication, either on the initiative of the employee of the Department of Homeland Security or upon request by a consular officer or other person charged with adjudicating such applications.

(C) Conduct investigations with respect to matters under the jurisdiction of the Secretary.

(2) PERMANENT ASSIGNMENT; PARTICIPATION IN TERRORIST LOOKOUT COMMITTEE.—When appropriate, employees of the Department of Homeland Security assigned to perform functions described in paragraph (1) may be assigned permanently to overseas diplomatic or consular posts with country-specific or regional responsibility. If the Secretary so directs, any such employee, when present at an overseas post, shall participate in the terrorist lookout committee established under section 304 of the Enhanced Border Security and Visa Entry Reform Act of 2002 (8 U.S.C. 1733).

(3) TRAINING AND HIRING.—

(A) The Secretary shall ensure that any employees of the Department of Homeland Security assigned to perform functions described in paragraph (1) shall be provided all necessary training to enable them to carry out such functions, including training in foreign languages, interview techniques, fraud detection techniques, and other skills required by such employees, in conditions in the particular country where each employee is assigned, and in other appropriate areas of study.

(B) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations within 60 days of the enactment of this Act establishing foreign language proficiency requirements for employees of the Department performing the functions described in paragraph (1) and providing that preference shall be given to individuals who meet such requirements in hiring employees for the performance of such functions.

(C) The Secretary is authorized to use the National Foreign Affairs Training Center, on a reimbursable basis, to obtain the training described in subparagraph (A).

(d) NO CREATION OF PRIVATE RIGHT OF ACTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to create or authorize a private right of action to challenge a decision of a consular officer or other United States official or employee to grant or deny a visa.

(e) STUDY REGARDING USE OF FOREIGN NATIONALS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Homeland Security shall conduct a study of the role of foreign nationals in the granting or refusal of visas and other documents authorizing entry of aliens into the United States. The study shall address the following:

(A) The proper role, if any, of foreign nationals in the process of rendering decisions on such grants and refusals.

REV_00148398

(B) Any security concerns involving the employment of foreign nationals.

(C) Whether there are cost-effective alternatives to the use of foreign nationals.

(2) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit a report containing the findings of the study conducted under paragraph (1) to the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on International Relations, and the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Government Affairs of the Senate.

(f) VISA ISSUANCE PROGRAM FOR SAUDI ARABIA.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, after the date of the enactment of this Act all third party screening, interview waiver, or other non-interview visa issuance programs in Saudi Arabia shall be terminated. On-site personnel of the Department of Homeland Security shall review all visa applications prior to adjudication. All visa applicants in Saudi Arabia shall be interviewed unless on-site personnel of the Department of Homeland Security determine, in writing and pursuant to written guidelines issued by the Secretary of Homeland Security, that the alien is unlikely to present a risk to homeland security. The Secretary of Homeland Security shall promulgate such guidelines not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 404. TRANSFER OF CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL INSPECTION FUNCTIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) TRANSFER OF AGRICULTURAL IMPORT AND ENTRY INSPECTION FUNCTIONS.—There shall be transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security the functions of the Secretary of Agriculture relating to agricultural import and entry inspection activities under the laws specified in subsection (b).

(b) COVERED ANIMAL AND PLANT PROTECTION LAWS.—The laws referred to in subsection (a) are the following:

(1) The Act commonly known as the Virus-Serum-Toxin Act (the eighth paragraph under the heading ''Bureau of Animal Industry'' in the Act of March 4, 1913; 21 U.S.C. 151 et seq.).

(2) Section 1 of the Act of August 31, 1922 (commonly known as the Honeybee Act; 7 U.S.C. 281).

(3) Title III of the Federal Seed Act (7 U.S.C. 1581 et seq.).

(4) The Plant Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 7701 et seq.).

(5) The Animal Protection Act (subtitle E of title X of Public Law 107–171; 7 U.S.C. 8301 et seq.).

(6) The Lacey Act Amendments of 1981 (16 U.S.C. 3371 et seq.).

(7) Section 11 of the Endangered Species Act of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1540).

(c) EXCLUSION OF QUARANTINE ACTIVITIES.—For purposes of this section, the term ''functions'' does not include any quarantine activities carried out under the laws specified in subsection (b).

(d) EFFECT OF TRANSFER.—

(1) COMPLIANCE WITH DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE REGULATIONS.—The authority transferred pursuant to subsection (a) shall be exercised by the Secretary of Homeland Security in accordance with the regulations, policies, and procedures issued by the Secretary of Agriculture regarding the administration of the laws specified in subsection (b).

(2) RULEMAKING COORDINATION.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall coordinate with the Secretary of Homeland Security whenever the Secretary of Agriculture prescribes regulations, policies, or procedures for administering the laws specified in subsection (b) at the locations referred to in subsection (a).

(3) EFFECTIVE ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary of Homeland Security, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, may issue such directives and guidelines as are necessary to ensure the effective use of personnel of the Department of Homeland Security to carry out the functions transferred pursuant to subsection (a).

(e) TRANSFER AGREEMENT.—

(1) AGREEMENT REQUIRED; REVISION.—Before the end of the transition period, as defined in section 801(2), the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Homeland Security shall enter into an agreement to effectuate the transfer of functions required by subsection (a). The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Homeland Security may jointly revise the agreement as necessary thereafter.

(2) REQUIRED TERMS.—The agreement required by this subsection shall specifically address the following:

(A) The supervision by the Secretary of Agriculture of the training of employees of the Secretary of Homeland Security to carry out the functions transferred pursuant to subsection (a).

(B) The transfer of funds to the Secretary of Homeland Security under subsection (f).

(3) COOPERATION AND RECIPROCITY.—The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Homeland Security may include as part of the agreement the following:

(A) Authority for the Secretary of Homeland Security to perform functions delegated to the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service of the Department of Agriculture regarding the protection of domestic livestock and plants, but not transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security pursuant to subsection (a).

(B) Authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to use employees of the Department of Homeland Security to carry out authorities delegated to the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service regarding the protection of domestic livestock and plants.

(f) PERIODIC TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO DEPARTMENT OF HOMELAND SECURITY.—

(1) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—Out of funds collected by fees authorized under sections 2508 and 2509 of the Food, Agriculture, Conservation, and Trade Act of 1990 (21 U.S.C. 136, 136a), the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer, from time to time in accordance with the agreement under subsection (e), to the Secretary of Homeland Security funds for activities carried out by the Secretary of Homeland Security for which such fees were collected.

(2) LIMITATION.—The proportion of fees collected pursuant to such sections that are transferred to the Secretary of Homeland Security under this subsection may not exceed the proportion of the costs incurred by the Secretary of Homeland Security to all costs incurred to carry out activities funded by such fees.

(g) TRANSFER OF DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE EMPLOYEES.—During the transition period, the Secretary of Agriculture shall transfer to the Secretary of Homeland Security not more than 3,200 full-time equivalent positions of the Department of Agriculture.

(h) PROTECTION OF INSPECTION ANIMALS.—Title V of the Agricultural Risk Protection Act of 2000 (7 U.S.C. 2279e, 2279f) is amended—

(1) in section 501(a)—

(A) by inserting ''or the Department of Homeland Security'' after ''Department of Agriculture''; and

(B) by inserting ''or the Secretary of Homeland Security'' after ''Secretary of Agriculture'';

(2) by striking ''Secretary'' each place it appears (other than in sections 501(a) and 501(e)) and inserting ''Secretary concerned''; and

(3) by adding at the end of section 501 the following new subsection:

''(e) SECRETARY CONCERNED DEFINED.—In this title, the term 'Secretary concerned' means—

''(1) the Secretary of Agriculture, with respect to an animal used for purposes of official inspections by the Department of Agriculture; and

''(2) the Secretary of Homeland Security, with respect to an animal used for purposes of official inspections by the Department of Homeland Security.''.

SEC. 405. FUNCTIONS OF ADMINISTRATOR OF GENERAL SERVICES.

(a) OPERATION, MAINTENANCE, AND PROTECTION OF FEDERAL BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to affect the functions or authorities of the Administrator of General Services with respect to the operation, maintenance, and protection of buildings and grounds owned or occupied by the Federal Government and under the jurisdiction, custody, or control of the Administrator. Except for the law enforcement and related security functions transferred under section 402(4), the Administrator shall retain all powers, functions, and authorities vested in the Administrator under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.) and other provisions of law that are necessary for the operation, maintenance, and protection of such buildings and grounds.

(b) COLLECTION OF RENTS AND FEES; FEDERAL BUILDINGS FUND.—

(1) STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this Act may be construed—

(A) to direct the transfer of, or affect, the authority of the Administrator of General Services to collect, rents and fees, including fees collected for protective services; or

(B) to authorize the Secretary or any other official in the Department to obligate amounts in the Federal Buildings Fund established by section 210(f) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 490(f)).

(2) USE OF TRANSFERRED AMOUNTS.—Any amounts transferred by the Administrator of General Services to the Secretary out of rents and fees collected by the Administrator shall be used by the Secretary solely for the protection of buildings or grounds owned or occupied by the Federal Government.

SEC. 406. FUNCTIONS OF TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION.

(a) CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL AVIATION ADMINISTRATION.—The Secretary and other officials in the Department shall consult with the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration before taking any action that might affect aviation safety, air carrier operations, aircraft airworthiness, or the use of airspace. The Secretary shall establish a liaison office within the Department for the purpose of consulting with the Administrator of the Federal Aviation Administration.

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation shall transmit to Congress a report containing a plan for complying with the requirements of section 44901(d) of title 49, United States Code.

(c) LIMITATIONS ON STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION.—

(1) GRANT OF AUTHORITY.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to vest in the Secretary or any other official in the Department any authority over transportation security that is not vested in the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security, or in the Secretary of Transportation under chapter 449 of title 49, United States Code, on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) OBLIGATION OF AIP FUNDS.—Nothing in this Act may be construed to authorize the Secretary or any other official in the Department to obligate amounts made available under section 48103 of title 49, United States Code.

SEC. 407. PRESERVATION OF TRANSPORTATION SECURITY ADMINISTRATION AS A DISTINCT ENTITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, and subject to subsection (b), the Transportation Security Admnistration shall be maintained as a distinct entity within the Department under the Under Secretary for Border Transportation and Security.

(b) SUNSET.—Subsection (a) shall cease to apply two years after the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 408. ANNUAL ASSESSMENT OF TERRORIST-RELATED THREATS TO PUBLIC TRANSPORTATION.

On an annual basis, the Secretary, in consultation with the heads of other appropriate Federal departments and agencies, shall conduct an assessment of terrorist-related threats to all forms of public transportation, including public gathering areas related to public transportation.

SEC. 409. EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEMS; MINIMUM NUMBER OF SCREENERS.

(a) INSTALLATION OF SYSTEMS.—Section 44901(d) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(2) MODIFICATION OF AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS TO ACCOMMODATE EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEMS.—

"(A) NOTIFICATION OF AIRPORTS.—Not later than October 1, 2002, the Under Secretary shall notify the owner or operator of each United States airport described in section 44903(c) of the number and type of explosive detection systems that will be required to be deployed at the airport in order to screen all checked baggage by explosive detection systems without imposing unreasonable delays on the passengers using the airport.

"(B) ASSESSMENTS OF AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS.—If the owner or operator of a United States airport described in section 44903(c) determines that the airport will not be able to make the modifications to the airport's terminal buildings that are necessary to accommodate the explosive detection systems required under subparagraph (A) in a cost-effective manner on or before December 31, 2002, the owner or operator shall provide notice of that determination to the Under Secretary not later than November 1, 2002.

"(C) PLANS FOR MAKING MODIFICATIONS TO AIRPORT TERMINAL BUILDINGS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If the owner or operator of an airport provides notice to the Under Secretary under subparagraph (B), the Under Secretary and the owner or operator, acting jointly, shall develop, not later than December 1, 2002, a plan for making necessary modifications to the airport's terminal buildings so as to deploy and fully utilize explosive detection systems to screen all checked baggage.

"(ii) DEADLINE.—A plan developed under this subparagraph shall include a date for completing the plan. All such plans shall be completed as expeditiously as practicable.

"(iii) TRANSMISSION OF PLANS TO CONGRESS.—On the date of completion of a plan under this subparagraph, the Under Secretary shall transmit a copy of the plan to Congress. For security purposes, information contained in the plan shall not be disclosed to the public.

"(D) REQUIREMENTS FOR PLANS.—A plan developed and published under subparagraph (C), shall provide for, to the maximum extent practicable—

"(i) the deployment of explosive detection systems in the baggage sorting area or other non-public area rather than the lobby of an airport terminal building; and

"(ii) the deployment of state of the art explosive detection systems that have high throughput, low false alarm rates, and high reliability without reducing detection rates.

"(E) USE OF SCREENING METHODS OTHER THAN EDS.—Notwithstanding the deadline in paragraph (1)(A), after December 31, 2002, if explosive detection systems are not screening all checked baggage at a United States airport described in section 44903(c), such baggage shall be screened by the methods described in subsection (e) until such time as all checked baggage is screened by explosive detection systems at the airport.

"(3) PURCHASE OF EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEMS.—Any explosive detection system required to be purchased under paragraph (2)(A) shall be purchased by the Under Secretary.

"(4) EXPLOSIVE DETECTION SYSTEM DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term 'explosive detection system' means a device, or combination of devices, that can detect different types of explosives.".

(b) NEW AVIATION SECURITY TECHNOLOGIES.—

(1) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than January 31, 2003, the Under Secretary shall transmit to Congress a report on the plans of the Under Secretary for implementation of new aviation security technologies.

(2) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the Under Secretary should expand testing of new aviation security technologies by increasing the number of airports at which such testing is conducted.

(c) CORRECTION OF REFERENCE.—Section 44901(e) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "(b)(1)(A)" and inserting "(d)(1)(A)".

(d) MINIMUM NUMBER OF SCREENERS.—Section 110(c) of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (115 Stat. 616) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) MINIMUM NUMBER OF SCREENERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—After November 19, 2002, the number of screeners deployed at an airport described in paragraph (1) shall not be less than the total number of screeners deployed at that airport on September 11, 2001, or on the date of enactment of this paragraph, whichever is greater.

"(B) ACTION OF UNDER SECRETARY.—If on November 20, 2002, the number of Federal employees screening passengers and carry-on baggage at an airport described in paragraph

(1) is less than the number required by this paragraph, the Under Secretary shall—

"(i) continue to contract with private screening companies to supplement the Federal screeners at that airport in order to comply with this paragraph; or

"(ii) not later December 20, 2002, publish a notice in the Federal Register certifying that the fewer number of Federal screeners will not result in additional or unreasonable delays for passengers at that airport.".

SEC. 410. TRANSPORTATION SECURITY.

(a) TRANSPORTATION SECURITY OVERSIGHT BOARD.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—Section 115(a) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "Department of Transportation" and inserting "Department of Homeland Security".

(2) MEMBERSHIP.—Section 115(b)(1) of title 49, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by striking subparagraph (G);

(B) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) through (F) as subparagraphs (B) through (G), respectively; and

(C) by inserting before subparagraph (B) (as so redesignated) the following:

"(A) The Secretary of Homeland Security, or the Secretary's designee.".

(3) CHAIRPERSON.—Section 115(b)(2) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking "Secretary of Transportation" and inserting "Secretary of Homeland Security".

(b) APPROVAL OF AIP GRANT APPLICATIONS FOR SECURITY ACTIVITIES.—Section 47106 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(g) CONSULTATION WITH SECRETARY OF HOMELAND SECURITY.—The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of Homeland Security before approving an application under this subchapter for an airport development project grant for activities described in section 47102(3)(B)(ii) (relating to security equipment) or section 47102(3)(B)(x) (relating to installation of bulk explosive detection systems).".

Subtitle B—Immigration and Nationality Functions

CHAPTER 1—IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 411. TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS TO UNDER SECRETARY FOR BORDER AND TRANSPORTATION SECURITY.

In accordance with title VIII, there shall be transferred from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security all functions performed under the following programs, and all personnel, assets, and liabilities pertaining to such programs, immediately before such transfer occurs:

(ii) financial management of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement; and

(iii) collecting all payments, fines, and other debts for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(3) AUTHORITY AND FUNCTIONS OF AGENCY CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICERS.—The Chief Budget

Officer for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement shall have the authorities and functions described in section 902 of title 31, United States Code, in relation to financial activities of such bureau.

(e) CHIEF OF CONGRESSIONAL, INTERGOVERNMENTAL, AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs shall be responsible for—

(A) providing information relating to immigration enforcement to the Congress, including information on specific cases relating to immigration enforcement;

(B) serving as a liaison with other Federal agencies on immigration enforcement issues; and

(C) responding to inquiries from the media and the general public on immigration enforcement issues.

(f) CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES LIAISON.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Citizenship and Immigration Services Liaison for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Citizenship and Immigration Services Liaison shall be responsible for the appropriate allocation and coordination of resources involved in supporting shared support functions for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice (established under chapter 2) and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, including—

(A) information resources management, including computer databases and information technology;

(B) records and file management; and

(C) forms management.

SEC. 413. PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND QUALITY REVIEW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security shall be responsible for—

(1) conducting investigations of noncriminal allegations of misconduct, corruption, and fraud involving any employee of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement that are not subject to investigation by the Inspector General for the Department;

(2) inspecting the operations of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement and providing assessments of the quality of the operations of such bureau as a whole and each of its components; and

(3) providing an analysis of the management of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(b) SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS.—In providing assessments in accordance with subsection (a)(2) with respect to a decision of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, or any of its components, consideration shall be given to—

(1) the accuracy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law used in rendering the decision;

(2) any fraud or misrepresentation associated with the decision; and

(3) the efficiency with which the decision was rendered.

SEC. 414. EMPLOYEE DISCIPLINE.

The Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, impose disciplinary action, including termination of employment, pursuant to policies and procedures applicable to employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on any employee of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement who willfully deceives the Congress or agency leadership on any matter.

REV_00148424

SEC. 415. REPORT ON IMPROVING ENFORCEMENT FUNCTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, shall submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate a report with a plan detailing how the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, after the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect, will enforce comprehensively, effectively, and fairly all the enforcement provisions of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) relating to such functions.

(b) CONSULTATION.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Secretary of Homeland Security shall consult with the Attorney General, the Secretary of State, the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of Labor, the Commissioner of Social Security, the Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review, and the heads of State and local law enforcement agencies to determine how to most effectively conduct enforcement operations.

SEC. 416. REPORT ON INTERIOR CHECKPOINTS.

Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit to the Congress a report on whether all permanent interior checkpoints operated by the Immigration and Naturalization Service ought to be closed, and the funds that otherwise would be expended for the operation of such checkpoints ought to be reallocated for protecting and maintaining the integrity of the borders of the United States and increasing enforcement at other points of entry into the United States.

CHAPTER 2—CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES

Subchapter A—Transfers of Functions

SEC. 421. ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF BUREAU.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established in the Department of Justice a bureau to be known as the ''Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services''.

(2) ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The head of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services shall be the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, who—

(A) shall report directly to the Deputy Attorney General; and

(B) shall have a minimum of 10 years professional experience in the rendering of adjudications on the provision of government benefits or services, at least 5 of which shall have been years of service in a managerial capacity or in a position affording comparable management experience.

(3) FUNCTIONS.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services—

(A) shall establish the policies for performing such functions as are transferred to the Assistant Attorney General by this section or this Act or otherwise vested in the Assistant Attorney General by law;

(B) shall oversee the administration of such policies;

(C) shall advise the Deputy Attorney General with respect to any policy or operation of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services that may affect the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security, including potentially conflicting policies or operations;

(D) shall meet regularly with the Ombudsman described in section 422 to correct serious service problems identified by the Ombudsman; and

(E) shall establish procedures requiring a formal response to any recommendations submitted in the Ombudsman's annual report to the Congress within 3 months after its submission to the Congress.

(4) MANAGERIAL ROTATION PROGRAM.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 1 year after the effective date specified in section 427, the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services shall design and implement a managerial rotation program under which employees of such bureau holding positions involving supervisory or managerial responsibility and classified, in accordance with chapter 51 of title 5, United States Code, as a GS–14 or above, shall, as a condition on further promotion—

(i) gain some experience in all the major functions performed by such bureau; and

(ii) work in at least one field office and one service center of such bureau.

(B) REPORT.—Not later than 2 years after the effective date specified in section 427, the Attorney General shall submit a report to the Congress on the implementation of such program.

(5) PILOT INITIATIVES FOR BACKLOG ELIMINATION.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services is authorized to implement innovative pilot initiatives to eliminate any remaining backlog in the processing of immigration benefit applications, and to prevent any backlog in the processing of such applications from recurring, in accordance with section 204(a) of the Immigration Services and Infrastructure Improvements Act of 2000 (8 U.S.C. 1573(a)). Such initiatives may include measures such as increasing personnel, transferring personnel to focus on areas with the largest potential for backlog, and streamlining paperwork.

(b) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS FROM COMMISSIONER.—There are transferred from the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services the following functions, and all personnel, infrastructure, and funding provided to the Commissioner in support of such functions immediately before the effective date specified in section 427:

(1) Adjudications of immigrant visa petitions.

(2) Adjudications of naturalization petitions.

(3) Adjudications of asylum and refugee applications.

(4) Adjudications performed at service centers.

(5) All other adjudications performed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service immediately before the effective date specified in section 427.

(c) CHIEF OF POLICY AND STRATEGY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Policy and Strategy for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—In consultation with Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services personnel in field offices, the Chief of Policy and Strategy shall be responsible for—

(A) establishing national immigration services policies and priorities;

(B) performing policy research and analysis on immigration services issues; and

(C) coordinating immigration policy issues with the Chief of Policy and Strategy for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security.

(d) GENERAL COUNSEL.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of General Counsel for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The General Counsel shall serve as the principal legal advisor to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services. The General Counsel shall be responsible for—

(A) providing specialized legal advice, opinions, determinations, regulations, and any other assistance to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services with respect to legal matters affecting the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services; and

(B) representing the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services in visa petition appeal proceedings before the Executive Office for Immigration Review and in other legal or administrative proceedings involving immigration services issues.

(e) CHIEF BUDGET OFFICER.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief Budget Officer for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Chief Budget Officer shall be responsible for—

(i) formulating and executing the budget of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(ii) financial management of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services; and

(iii) collecting all payments, fines, and other debts for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(3) AUTHORITY AND FUNCTIONS OF AGENCY CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICERS.—The Chief Budget Officer for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services shall have the authorities and functions described in section 902 of title 31, United States Code, in relation to financial activities of such bureau.

(f) CHIEF OF CONGRESSIONAL, INTERGOVERNMENTAL, AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Chief of Congressional, Intergovernmental, and Public Affairs shall be responsible for—

(A) providing information relating to immigration services to the Congress, including information on specific cases relating to immigration services issues;

(B) serving as a liaison with other Federal agencies on immigration services issues; and

(C) responding to inquiries from the media and the general public on immigration services issues.

(g) IMMIGRATION ENFORCEMENT LIAISON.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Immigration Enforcement Liaison for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Immigration Enforcement Liaison shall be responsible for the appropriate allocation and coordination of resources involved in supporting shared support functions for the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security and the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, including—

(A) information resources management, including computer databases and information technology;

(B) records and file management; and

(C) forms management.

(h) CHIEF OF OFFICE OF CITIZENSHIP.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—There shall be a position of Chief of the Office of Citizenship for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(2) FUNCTIONS.—The Chief of the Office of Citizenship for the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services shall be responsible for promoting instruction and training on citizenship responsibilities for aliens interested in becoming naturalized citizens of the United States, including the development of educational materials.

SEC. 422. CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES OMBUDSMAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Within the Department of Justice, there shall be a position of Citizenship and Immigration Services Ombudsman (in this section referred to as the ''Ombudsman''). The Ombudsman shall report directly to the Deputy Attorney General. The Ombudsman shall have a background in customer service as well as immigration law.

(b) FUNCTIONS.—It shall be the function of the Ombudsman—

(1) to assist individuals and employers in resolving problems with the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(2) to identify areas in which individuals and employers have problems in dealing with the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(3) to the extent possible, to propose changes in the administrative practices of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services to mitigate problems identified under paragraph (2); and

(4) to identify potential legislative changes that may be appropriate to mitigate such problems.

(c) ANNUAL REPORTS.—

(1) OBJECTIVES.—Not later than June 30 of each calendar year, the Ombudsman shall report to the Committee on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate on the objectives of the Office of the Ombudsman for the fiscal year beginning in such calendar year. Any such report shall contain full and substantive analysis, in addition to statistical information, and—

(A) shall identify the initiatives the Office of the Ombudsman has taken on improving services and responsiveness of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services;

(B) shall contain a summary of the most pervasive and serious problems encountered by individuals and employers, including a description of the nature of such problems;

(C) shall contain an inventory of the items described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for which action has been taken and the result of such action;

(D) shall contain an inventory of the items described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for which action remains to be completed and the period during which each item has remained on such inventory;

(E) shall contain an inventory of the items described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) for which no action has been taken, the period during which each item has remained on such inventory, the reasons for the inaction, and shall identify any official of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services who is responsible for such inaction;

(F) shall contain recommendations for such administrative and legislative action as may be appropriate to resolve problems encountered by individuals and employers, including problems created by excessive backlogs in the adjudication and processing of immigration benefit petitions and applications; and

(G) shall include such other information as the Ombudsman may deem advisable.

(2) REPORT TO BE SUBMITTED DIRECTLY.—Each report required under this subsection shall be provided directly to the committees described in paragraph (1) without any prior review or comment from the Attorney General, Deputy Attorney General, Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, or any other officer or employee of the Department of Justice or the Office of Management and Budget.

(d) OTHER RESPONSIBILITIES.—The Ombudsman—

(1) shall monitor the coverage and geographic allocation of local offices of the Ombudsman;

(2) shall develop guidance to be distributed to all officers and employees of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services outlining the criteria for referral of inquiries to local offices of the Ombudsman;

(3) shall ensure that the local telephone number for each local office of the Ombudsman is published and available to individuals and employers served by the office; and

(4) shall meet regularly with the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services to identify serious service problems and to present recommendations for such administrative action as may be appropriate to resolve problems encountered by individuals and employers.

(e) PERSONNEL ACTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Ombudsman shall have the responsibility and authority—

(A) to appoint local ombudsmen and make available at least 1 such ombudsman for each State; and

(B) to evaluate and take personnel actions (including dismissal) with respect to any employee of any local office of the Ombudsman.

(2) CONSULTATION.—The Ombudsman may consult with the appropriate supervisory personnel of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services in carrying out the Ombudsman's responsibilities under this subsection.

(f) RESPONSIBILITIES OF BUREAU OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services shall establish procedures requiring a formal response to all recommendations submitted to such Assistant Attorney General by the Ombudsman within 3 months after submission to such director.

(g) OPERATION OF LOCAL OFFICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Each local ombudsman—

(A) shall report to the Ombudsman or the delegate thereof;

(B) may consult with the appropriate supervisory personnel of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services regarding the daily operation of the local office of such ombudsman;

(C) shall, at the initial meeting with any individual or employer seeking the assistance of such local office, notify such individual or employer that the local offices of the Ombudsman operate independently of any other component of the Department of Justice and report directly to the Congress through the Ombudsman; and

(D) at the local ombudsman's discretion, may determine not to disclose to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services contact with, or information provided by, such individual or employer.

(2) MAINTENANCE OF INDEPENDENT COMMUNICATIONS.—Each local office of the Ombudsman shall maintain a phone, facsimile, and other means of electronic communication access, and a post office address, that is separate from those maintained by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, or any component of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

SEC. 423. PROFESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND QUALITY REVIEW.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services shall be responsible for—

(1) conducting investigations of noncriminal allegations of misconduct, corruption, and fraud involving any employee of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services that are not subject to investigation by the Department of Justice Office of the Inspector General;

(2) inspecting the operations of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and providing assessments of the quality of the operations of such bureau as a whole and each of its components; and

(3) providing an analysis of the management of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(b) SPECIAL CONSIDERATIONS.—In providing assessments in accordance with subsection (a)(2) with respect to a decision of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, or any of its components, consideration shall be given to—

(1) the accuracy of the findings of fact and conclusions of law used in rendering the decision;

(2) any fraud or misrepresentation associated with the decision; and

(3) the efficiency with which the decision was rendered.

SEC. 424. EMPLOYEE DISCIPLINE.

The Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Enforcement may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, impose disciplinary action, including termination of employment, pursuant to policies and procedures applicable to employees of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, on any employee of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services who willfully deceives the Congress or agency leadership on any matter.

SEC. 425. OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS WITHIN BUREAU OF JUSTICE STATISTICS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part C of title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3731 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION STATISTICS

"SEC. 305. (a) There is established within the Bureau of Justice Statistics of the Department of Justice an Office of Immigration Statistics (in this section referred to as the 'Office'), which shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by the Attorney General and who shall report to the Director of Justice Statistics.

"(b) The Director of the Office shall be responsible for the following:

"(1) Maintenance of all immigration statistical information of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review. Such statistical information shall include information and statistics of the type contained in the publication entitled 'Statistical Yearbook of the Immigration and Naturalization Service' prepared by the Immigration and Naturalization Service (as in effect on the day prior to the effective date specified in section 427 of the Homeland Security Act of 2002), including region-by-region statistics on the aggregate number of applications and petitions filed by an alien (or filed on behalf of an alien) and denied by such offices and bureaus, and the reasons for such denials, disaggregated by category of denial and application or petition type.

"(2) Establishment of standards of reliability and validity for immigration statistics collected by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review.

"(c) The Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review shall provide statistical information to the Office of Immigration Statistics from the operational data systems controlled by the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review, respectively, for the purpose of meeting the responsibilities of the Director.".

(b) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS.—There are transferred to the Office of Immigration Statistics established under section 305 of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968, as added by subsection (a), the functions performed immediately before such transfer occurs by the Statistics Branch of the Office of Policy and Planning of the Immigration and Naturalization Service with respect to the following:

(1) Adjudications of immigrant visa petitions.

(2) Adjudications of naturalization petitions.

(3) Adjudications of asylum and refugee applications.

(4) Adjudications performed at service centers.

(5) All other adjudications performed by the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 302(c) of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. 3732(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking ''and'' at the end of paragraph (22);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (23) and inserting ''; and''; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

''(24) collect, maintain, compile, analyze, publish, and disseminate information and statistics involving the functions of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Executive Office for Immigration Review.''.

SEC. 426. PRESERVATION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL'S AUTHORITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any function for which this subchapter vests responsibility in an official other than the Attorney General, or which is transferred by this subchapter to such an official, may, notwithstanding any provision of this subchapter, be performed by the Attorney General, or the Attorney General's delegate, in lieu of such official.

(b) REFERENCES.—In a case in which the Attorney General performs a function described in subsection (a), any reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, document, or delegation of authority to the official otherwise responsible for the function is deemed to refer to the Attorney General.

SEC. 427. EFFECTIVE DATE.

Notwithstanding section 4, this subchapter, and the amendments made by this subchapter, shall take effect on the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

SEC. 428. TRANSITION.

(a) REFERENCES.—With respect to any function transferred by this subchapter to, and exercised on or after the effective date specified in section 427 by, the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, any reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, or delegation of authority, or any document of or pertaining to a component of government from which such function is transferred—

(1) to the head of such component is deemed to refer to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services; or

(2) to such component is deemed to refer to the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services.

(b) OTHER TRANSITION ISSUES.—

(1) EXERCISE OF AUTHORITIES.—Except as otherwise provided by law, a Federal official to whom a function is transferred by this subchapter may, for purposes of performing the function, exercise all authorities under any other provision of law that were available with respect to the performance of that function to the official responsible for the performance of the function immediately before the effective date specified in section 427.

(2) SAVINGS PROVISIONS.—Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 812 shall apply to a transfer of functions under this subchapter in the same manner as such provisions apply to a transfer of functions under this Act to the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) TRANSFER AND ALLOCATION OF APPROPRIATIONS AND PERSONNEL.—The personnel of the Department of Justice employed in connection with the functions transferred by this subchapter (and functions that the Attorney General determines are properly related to the functions of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services), and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available to, the Immigration and Naturalization Service in connection with the functions transferred by this subchapter, subject to section 202 of the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, shall be transferred to the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services for allocation to the appropriate component of the Department of Justice. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this paragraph shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated. The Attorney General shall have the right to adjust or realign transfers of funds and personnel effected pursuant to this subchapter for a period of 2 years after the effective date specified in section 427.

(4) AUTHORITIES OF ATTORNEY GENERAL.—The Attorney General (or a delegate of the Attorney General), at such time or times as the Attorney General (or the delegate) shall provide, may make such determinations as may be necessary with regard to the functions transferred by this subchapter, and may make such additional incidental dispositions of personnel, assets, liabilities, grants, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balances of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available in connection with such functions, as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subchapter. The Attorney General shall provide for such further measures and dispositions as may be necessary to effectuate the purposes of this subchapter.

Subchapter B—Other Provisions

SEC. 431. FUNDING FOR CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION SERVICES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF FEES FOR ADJUDICATION AND NATURALIZATION SERVICES.—Section 286(m) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1356(m)) is amended by striking ''services, including the costs of similar services provided without charge to asylum applicants or other immigrants.'' and inserting ''services.''.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR REFUGEE AND ASYLUM ADJUDICATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 207 through 209 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1157–1159). All funds appropriated under this subsection shall be deposited into the Immigration Examinations Fee Account established under section 286(m) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1356(m)) and shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 432. BACKLOG ELIMINATION.

Section 204(a) of the Immigration Services and Infrastructure Improvements Act of 2000 (8 U.S.C. 1573(a)) is amended by striking ''October 17, 2000;'' and inserting ''1 year after the date of the enactment of the Homeland Security Act of 2002;''.

SEC. 433. REPORT ON IMPROVING IMMIGRATION SERVICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, shall submit to the Committees on the Judiciary and Appropriations of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate a report with a plan detailing how the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, after the transfer of functions specified in subchapter 1 takes effect, will complete efficiently, fairly, and within a reasonable time, the adjudications described in paragraphs (1) through (5) of section 421(b).

(b) CONTENTS.—For each type of adjudication to be undertaken by the Assistant Attorney General for Citizenship and Immigration Services, the report shall include the following:

(1) Any potential savings of resources that may be implemented without affecting the quality of the adjudication.

(2) The goal for processing time with respect to the application.

(3) Any statutory modifications with respect to the adjudication that the Attorney General considers advisable.

(c) CONSULTATION.—In carrying out subsection (a), the Attorney General shall consult with the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Labor, the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security, and the Director of the Executive Office for Immigration Review to determine how to streamline and improve the process for applying for and making adjudications described in section 421(b) and related processes.

SEC. 434. REPORT ON RESPONDING TO FLUCTUATING NEEDS.

Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Attorney General shall submit to the Congress a report on changes in law, including changes in authorizations of appropriations and in appropriations, that are needed to permit the Immigration and Naturalization Service, and, after the transfer of functions specified in subchapter 1 takes effect, the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services, to ensure a prompt and timely response to emergent, unforeseen, or impending changes in the number of applications for immigration benefits, and otherwise to ensure the accommodation of changing immigration service needs.

SEC. 435. APPLICATION OF INTERNET-BASED TECHNOLOGIES.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF TRACKING SYSTEM.—The Attorney General, not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act, in consultation with the Technology Advisory Committee established under subsection (c), shall establish an Internet-based system, that will permit a person, employer, immigrant, or nonimmigrant who has filings with the Attorney General for any benefit under the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.), access to online information about the processing status of the filing involved.

(b) FEASIBILITY STUDY FOR ONLINE FILING AND IMPROVED PROCESSING.—

(1) ONLINE FILING.—The Attorney General, in consultation with the Technology Advisory Committee established under subsection (c), shall conduct a feasibility study on the online filing of the filings described in subsection (a). The study shall include a review of computerization and technology of the Immigration and Naturalization Service relating to the immigration services and processing of filings related to immigrant services. The study shall also include an estimate of the timeframe and cost and shall consider other factors in implementing such a filing system, including the feasibility of fee payment online.

(2) REPORT.—A report on the study under this subsection shall be submitted to the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate not later than 1 year after the effective date of this Act.

(c) TECHNOLOGY ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—The Attorney General shall establish, not later than 60 days after the effective date of this Act, an advisory committee (in this section referred to as the "Technology Advisory Committee") to assist the Attorney General in—

(A) establishing the tracking system under subsection (a); and

(B) conducting the study under subsection (b).

The Technology Advisory Committee shall be established after consultation with the Committees on the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and the Senate.

(2) COMPOSITION.—The Technology Advisory Committee shall be composed of representatives from high technology companies capable of establishing and implementing the system in an expeditious manner, and representatives of persons who may use the tracking system described in subsection (a) and the online filing system described in subsection (b)(1).

SEC. 436. CHILDREN'S AFFAIRS.

(a) TRANSFER OF FUNCTIONS.—There are transferred to the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement of the Department of Health and Human Services functions under the immigration laws of the United States with respect to the care of unaccompanied alien children that were vested by statute in, or performed by, the Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization (or any officer, employee, or component of the Immigration and Naturalization Service) immediately before the effective date specified in subsection (d).

(b) FUNCTIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Pursuant to the transfer made by subsection (a), the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement shall be responsible for—

(A) coordinating and implementing the care and placement of unaccompanied alien children who are in Federal custody by reason of their immigration status, including developing a plan to be submitted to the Congress on how to ensure that qualified and independent legal counsel is timely appointed to represent the interests of each such child;

(B) ensuring that the interests of the child are considered in decisions and actions relating to the care and custody of an unaccompanied alien child;

(C) making placement determinations for all unaccompanied alien children who are in Federal custody by reason of their immigration status;

(D) implementing the placement determinations;

(E) implementing policies with respect to the care and placement of unaccompanied alien children;

(F) identifying a sufficient number of qualified individuals, entities, and facilities to house unaccompanied alien children;

(G) overseeing the infrastructure and personnel of facilities in which unaccompanied alien children reside;

(H) reuniting unaccompanied alien children with a parent abroad in appropriate cases;

(I) compiling, updating, and publishing at least annually a state-by-state list of professionals or other entities qualified to provide guardian and attorney representation services for unaccompanied alien children;

(J) maintaining statistical information and other data on unaccompanied alien children for whose care and placement the Director is responsible, which shall include—

(i) biographical information, such as a child's name, gender, date of birth, country of birth, and country of habitual residence;

(ii) the date on which the child came into Federal custody by reason of his or her immigration status;

(iii) information relating to the child's placement, removal, or release from each facility in which the child has resided;

(iv) in any case in which the child is placed in detention or released, an explanation relating to the detention or release; and

(v) the disposition of any actions in which the child is the subject;

(K) collecting and compiling statistical information from the Department of Justice, the Department of Homeland Security, and the Department of State on each department's actions relating to unaccompanied alien children; and

(L) conducting investigations and inspections of facilities and other entities in which unaccompanied alien children reside.

(2) COORDINATION WITH OTHER ENTITIES; NO RELEASE ON OWN RECOGNIZANCE.—In making determinations described in paragraph (1)(C), the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement—

(A) shall consult with appropriate juvenile justice professionals, the Director of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice, and the Director of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security to ensure that such determinations ensure that unaccompanied alien children described in such subparagraph—

(i) are likely to appear for all hearings or proceedings in which they are involved;

(ii) are protected from smugglers, traffickers, or others who might seek to victimize or otherwise engage them in criminal, harmful, or exploitive activity; and

(iii) are placed in a setting in which they not likely to pose a danger to themselves or others; and

(B) shall not release such children upon their own recognizance.

(3) DUTIES WITH RESPECT TO FOSTER CARE.—In carrying out the duties described in paragraph (1)(G), the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement is encouraged to use the refugee children foster care system established pursuant to section

412(d) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1522(d)) for the placement of unaccompanied alien children.

(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section may be construed to transfer the responsibility for adjudicating benefit determinations under the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) from the authority of any official of the Department of Justice, the Department of Homeland Security, or the Department of State.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Notwithstanding section 4, this section shall take effect on the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

(e) REFERENCES.—With respect to any function transferred by this section, any reference in any other Federal law, Executive order, rule, regulation, or delegation of authority, or any document of or pertaining to a component of government from which such function is transferred—

(1) to the head of such component is deemed to refer to the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement; or

(2) to such component is deemed to refer to the Office of Refugee Resettlement of the Department of Health and Human Services.

(f) OTHER TRANSITION ISSUES.—

(1) EXERCISE OF AUTHORITIES.—Except as otherwise provided by law, a Federal official to whom a function is transferred by this section may, for purposes of performing the function, exercise all authorities under any other provision of law that were available with respect to the performance of that function to the official responsible for the performance of the function immediately before the effective date specified in subsection (d).

(2) SAVINGS PROVISIONS.—Subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 812 shall apply to a transfer of functions under this section in the same manner as such provisions apply to a transfer of functions under this Act to the Department of Homeland Security.

(3) TRANSFER AND ALLOCATION OF APPROPRIATIONS AND PERSONNEL.—The personnel of the Department of Justice employed in connection with the functions transferred by this section, and the assets, liabilities, contracts, property, records, and unexpended balance of appropriations, authorizations, allocations, and other funds employed, held, used, arising from, available to, or to be made available to, the Immigration and Naturalization Service in connection with the functions transferred by this section, subject to section 202 of the Budget and Accounting Procedures Act of 1950, shall be transferred to the Director of the Office of Refugee Resettlement for allocation to the appropriate component of the Department of Health and Human Services. Unexpended funds transferred pursuant to this paragraph shall be used only for the purposes for which the funds were originally authorized and appropriated.

(g) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this section—

(1) the term ''placement'' means the placement of an unaccompanied alien child in either a detention facility or an alternative to such a facility; and

(2) the term ''unaccompanied alien child'' means a child who—

(A) has no lawful immigration status in the United States;

(B) has not attained 18 years of age; and

(C) with respect to whom—

(i) there is no parent or legal guardian in the United States; or

(ii) no parent or legal guardian in the United States is available to provide care and physical custody.

CHAPTER 3—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 441. ABOLISHMENT OF INS.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service of the Department of Justice is abolished.

SEC. 442. VOLUNTARY SEPARATION INCENTIVE PAYMENTS.

(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) the term ''employee'' means an employee (as defined by section 2105 of title 5, United States Code) who—

(A) has completed at least 3 years of current continuous service with 1 or more covered entities; and

(B) is serving under an appointment without time limitation;

but does not include any person under subparagraphs (A)–(G) of section 663(a)(2) of Public Law 104–208 (5 U.S.C. 5597 note);

(2) the term ''covered entity'' means—

(A) the Immigration and Naturalization Service;

(B) the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security; and

(C) the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice; and

(3) the term ''transfer date'' means the date on which the transfer of functions specified under section 411 takes effect.

(b) STRATEGIC RESTRUCTURING PLAN.—Before the Attorney General or the Secretary obligates any resources for voluntary separation incentive payments under this section, such official shall submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a strategic restructuring plan, which shall include—

(1) an organizational chart depicting the covered entities after their restructuring pursuant to this Act;

(2) a summary description of how the authority under this section will be used to help carry out that restructuring; and

(3) the information specified in section 663(b)(2) of Public Law 104–208 (5 U.S.C. 5597 note).

As used in the preceding sentence, the "appropriate committees of Congress" are the Committees on Appropriations, Government Reform, and the Judiciary of the House of Representatives, and the Committees on Appropriations, Governmental Affairs, and the Judiciary of the Senate.

(c) AUTHORITY.—The Attorney General and the Secretary may, to the extent necessary to help carry out their respective strategic restructuring plan described in subsection (b), make voluntary separation incentive payments to employees. Any such payment—

(1) shall be paid to the employee, in a lump sum, after the employee has separated from service;

(2) shall be paid from appropriations or funds available for the payment of basic pay of the employee;

(3) shall be equal to the lesser of—

(A) the amount the employee would be entitled to receive under section 5595(c) of title 5, United States Code; or

(B) an amount not to exceed $25,000, as determined by the Attorney General or the Secretary;

(4) may not be made except in the case of any qualifying employee who voluntarily separates

(whether by retirement or resignation) before the end of—

(A) the 3-month period beginning on the date on which such payment is offered or made available to such employee; or

(B) the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, whichever occurs first;

(5) shall not be a basis for payment, and shall not be included in the computation, of any other type of Government benefit; and

(6) shall not be taken into account in determining the amount of any severance pay to which the employee may be entitled under section 5595 of title 5, United States Code, based on any other separation.

(d) ADDITIONAL AGENCY CONTRIBUTIONS TO THE RETIREMENT FUND.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to any payments which it is otherwise required to make, the Department of Justice and the Department of Homeland Security shall, for each fiscal year with respect to which it makes any voluntary separation incentive payments under this section, remit to the Office of Personnel Management for deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund the amount required under paragraph (2).

(2) AMOUNT REQUIRED.—The amount required under this paragraph shall, for any fiscal year, be the amount under subparagraph (A) or (B), whichever is greater.

(A) FIRST METHOD.—The amount under this subparagraph shall, for any fiscal year, be equal to the minimum amount necessary to offset the additional costs to the retirement systems under title 5, United States Code (payable out of the Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund) resulting from the voluntary separation of the employees described in paragraph (3), as determined under regulations of the Office of Personnel Management.

(B) SECOND METHOD.—The amount under this subparagraph shall, for any fiscal year, be equal to 45 percent of the sum total of the final basic pay of the employees described in paragraph (3).

(3) COMPUTATIONS TO BE BASED ON SEPARATIONS OCCURRING IN THE FISCAL YEAR INVOLVED.—The employees described in this paragraph are those employees who receive a voluntary separation incentive payment under this section based on their separating from service during the fiscal year with respect to which the payment under this subsection relates.

(4) FINAL BASIC PAY DEFINED.—In this subsection, the term ''final basic pay'' means, with respect to an employee, the total amount of basic pay which would be payable for a year of service by such employee, computed using the employee's final rate of basic pay, and, if last serving on other than a full-time basis, with appropriate adjustment therefor.

(e) EFFECT OF SUBSEQUENT EMPLOYMENT WITH THE GOVERNMENT.—An individual who receives a voluntary separation incentive payment under this section and who, within 5 years after the date of the separation on which the payment is based, accepts any compensated employment with the Government or works for any agency of the Government through a personal services contract, shall be required to pay, prior to the individual's first day of employment, the entire amount of the incentive payment. Such payment shall be made to the covered entity from which the individual separated or, if made on or after the transfer date, to the Deputy Attorney General (for transfer to the appropriate component of the Department of Justice, if necessary) or the Under Secretary for Border and Transportation Security (for transfer to the appropriate component of the Department of Homeland Security, if necessary).

(f) EFFECT ON EMPLOYMENT LEVELS.—

(1) INTENDED EFFECT.—Voluntary separations under this section are not intended to necessarily reduce the total number of full-time equivalent positions in any covered entity.

(2) USE OF VOLUNTARY SEPARATIONS.—A covered entity may redeploy or use the full-time equivalent positions vacated by voluntary separations under this section to make other positions available to more critical locations or more critical occupations.

SEC. 443. AUTHORITY TO CONDUCT A DEMONSTRATION PROJECT RELATING TO DISCIPLINARY ACTION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary may each, during a period ending not later than 5 years after the date of the enactment of this Act, conduct a demonstration project for the purpose of determining whether one or more changes in the policies or procedures relating to methods for disciplining employees would result in improved personnel management.

(b) SCOPE.—A demonstration project under this section—

(1) may not cover any employees apart from those employed in or under a covered entity; and

(2) shall not be limited by any provision of chapter 43, 75, or 77 of title 5, United States Code.

(c) PROCEDURES.—Under the demonstration project—

(1) the use of alternative means of dispute resolution (as defined in section 571 of title 5, United States Code) shall be encouraged, whenever appropriate; and

(2) each covered entity under the jurisdiction of the official conducting the project shall be required to provide for the expeditious, fair, and independent review of any action to which section 4303 or subchapter II of chapter 75 of such title 5 would otherwise apply (except an action described in section 7512(5) thereof).

(d) ACTIONS INVOLVING DISCRIMINATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, if, in the case of any matter described in section 7702(a)(1)(B) of title 5, United States Code, there is no judicially review-able action under the demonstration project within 120 days after the filing of an appeal or other formal request for review (referred to in subsection (c)(2)), an employee shall be entitled to file a civil action to the same extent and in the same manner as provided in section 7702(e)(1) of such title 5 (in the matter following subparagraph (C) thereof).

(e) CERTAIN EMPLOYEES.—Employees shall not be included within any project under this section if such employees are—

(1) neither managers nor supervisors; and

(2) within a unit with respect to which a labor organization is accorded exclusive recognition under chapter 71 of title 5, United States Code.

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, an aggrieved employee within a unit (referred to in paragraph (2)) may elect to participate in a complaint procedure developed under the demonstration project in lieu of any negotiated grievance procedure and any statutory procedure (as such term is used in section 7121 of such title 5).

(f) REPORTS.—The General Accounting Office shall prepare and submit to the Committees on Government Reform and the Judiciary of the House of Representatives and the Committees on Governmental Affairs and the Judiciary of the Senate periodic reports on any demonstration project conducted under this section, such reports to be submitted after the second and fourth years of its operation. Upon request, the Attorney General or the Secretary shall furnish such information as the General Accounting Office may require to carry out this subsection.

(g) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "covered entity" has the meaning given such term in section 442(a)(2).

SEC. 444. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) the missions of the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement of the Department of Homeland Security and the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services of the Department of Justice are equally important and, accordingly, they each should be adequately funded; and

(2) the functions transferred under this subtitle should not, after such transfers take effect, operate at levels below those in effect prior to the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 445. REPORTS AND IMPLEMENTATION PLANS.

(a) DIVISION OF FUNDS.—The Attorney General and the Secretary, not later than 120 days after the effective date of this Act, shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States

House of Representatives and of the Senate a report on the proposed division and transfer of funds, including unexpended funds, appropriations, and fees, between the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(b) DIVISION OF PERSONNEL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary, not later than 120 days after the effective date of this Act, shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate a report on the proposed division of personnel between the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement.

(c) IMPLEMENTATION PLAN.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Attorney General and the Secretary, not later than 120 days after the effective date of this Act, and every 6 months thereafter until the termination of fiscal year 2005, shall each submit to the Committees on Appropriations and the Judiciary of the United States House of Representatives and of the Senate an implementation plan to carry out this Act.

(2) CONTENTS.—The implementation plan should include details concerning the separation of the Bureau of Citizenship and Immigration Services and the Bureau of Immigration Enforcement, including the following:

(A) Organizational structure, including the field structure.

(B) Chain of command.

(C) Procedures for interaction among such bureaus.

(D) Fraud detection and investigation.

(E) The processing and handling of removal proceedings, including expedited removal and applications for relief from removal.
